"While I do not care for "functional" moderne, I do believe that in the classic moderne we have found a simplicity which is timely. It makes some of the older styles seem fussy and overdone. . . . Nevertheless, to throw away the infinite variety which is possible in architectural design, and to repeat year after year the same barren, machine-like, "stream-line" structures which we are now having foisted upon us as the "latest," would be to court the destruction of an artistic and aesthetic appreciation of beautiful buildings—a taste which undoubtedly needs further cultivation in America."

HIGH INTENSITY PROJECTION

THEATRE patrons desire enough supplementary lighting for comfortable vision from the moment of entrance. They are annoyed when a dark theatre compels them to stumble and grope blindly for their seats.

High Intensity Projection permits ample side lighting for a comfortable level of general illumination. It improves the quality of black and white projection and brings out the full beauty and realism of color productions.

INSTALL HIGH INTENSITY LAMPS IN YOUR THEATRE

They Insure Sustained Patronage

There is a High Intensity Lamp, A.C. or D.C., for every theatre, large or small.

There is a National Projector Carbon for every Projection Lamp.

A BRITISH INTERPRETATION OF THE "FUNCTIONAL" FRONT

■ Exterior view of the new Odeon theatre at Sutton Coldfield, Warwickshire, England, the latest addition to the circuit operated by Oscar Deutsch. The exterior presents a particular novel architectural scheme with a circular marquee set between wing-masses and surmounted by a pylon-like tower. The darker material of which the tower is constructed, is brown facing brick. The remainder of the tower, and the entire facade is of gray tile. The base is of black faience tiles. The name of the theatre is spelled against the gray tile in neon, while neon bands encircle the upper part of the marquee. The general facade treatment represents an interprtation by the architect, Harry W. Weedon, of the advertising functions of a motion picture theatre front, calling for a striking architectural display, achieved through massing as well as colorful materials and sign elemens.

Academy May Begin Screen Survey in Fall

NEGOTIATIONS with electrical instrument manufacturers have been opened by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, for the development of equipment which meet the council's specifications for the purpose of investigating the illumination of theatre screens throughout the country. It is the hope of the committee in charge of this work to measure the illumination of screens in ten or twelve thousand theatres.

The interest of the Academy body in screen illumination is based on a desire for improved presentation of product. According to Gordon Mitchell, manager of the Research Council, if a suitable illumination measuring instrument is developed in time, the committee will undoubtedly proceed with its plans this fall.

Chicago Theatre Code Getting Basic Changes

SIX MEETINGS this summer of the Chicago building code committee, considering an ordinance which will supplant the one which has existed with only relatively slight revisions since 1906, indicate the enactment this fall of regulations fundamentally changing requirements for theatres. In some cases the proposals impose limitations upon former practices, in the interests of safety, while in others they represent a more lenient attitude, in recognition of changes in architectural practices.

At the outset, the proposed code makes no general distinction between types of theatres, though motion picture theatres which do not have stages suitable to full-sized stage performances would be automatically exempt from certain requirements. The new ordinance provides for two types of stages, and that merely for sound equipment (3 feet deep and with an area of 180 square feet and having no movable scenery) does not require a fire curtain.

Communications between theatres and other occupancies is not permitted under the old code. The new ordinance permits such communication on the main floor only through fireproof vestibules equipped with automatic fire doors.

The old code has no provisions regulating standing space in lobbies. The new ordinance provides for definitely separated standing spaces in lobbies, not to exceed 60% of the lobby width.

The old code uses the terms "entrance" and "exit" interchangeably. In the new ordinance the term "normal exit" refers to the usual means of exit for the public which, under normal conditions are also the usual means of entrance. The term "emergency exits" refers to exits provided for the public in an emergency, other than the normal exits. Under the new ordinance the total width of outside exit doorways will be the same as under the old code. Aisle widths are proportional to the number of persons served, the same as in the old code.

The old code limits the number of seats in a row to ten. The new ordinance permits twelve seats in a row. The new ordinance also provides that longer rows of seats may be used if the spacing between rows is increased in the proportion of one added seat for each inch added to the minimum required spacing. (A similar provision has been made in the new code proposed for New York.)

The old code requires exit courts to be 10 feet in width regardless of the capacity of the theatre. In the new ordinance the required width of exit courts will be determined by the number of persons served thereby. The minimum width to serve 300 persons will be five feet; for 800 persons, 10 feet; for each additional 250 persons, 1 foot additional.

The requirements for gas lighting of exit signs, contained in the old code, has been disregarded for years, the newer Chicago theatres making use of an independent electric battery set for emergency use as is required by the new ordinance. In theatres, as in all types of buildings, the new ordinance requires the colors for exit signs, directional signs, and danger signals to be as custom has established for traffic control, viz., green for safe means of exit, and red for danger signals only.

The construction of small theatres of three hundred seats or less, may, under the old code be ordinary construction, and theatres seating more than three hundred, fireproof. The new ordinance requires all theatres of 600 seats or less to be of at least semi-fireproof construction, and larger theatres of fireproof construction. Other provisions of the new ordinance which are not contained in the old code are:

A garage is permitted in the same building if separated from the theatre by fire walls.

Communication with adjoining buildings is permitted on the ground floor only.

Self-raising seats are required on the main floor opposite side wall emergency exit doorways.

Drinking fountains and the location and

A photographic demonstration of a victory of American equipment over European, as reported by the firm of J. Roe & Company, British distributors of the projection lamps manufactured by the C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Company of Long Island City. This display in the window of Roe's Wardour Street store in London, followed the selection of the American manufacturer's product over European makes of lamps after tests. Roe also supplied Ashcraft suprex arc equipment for the first installation of television apparatus at the British Broadcasting Company studios.

number of toilet fixtures are required and regulated.

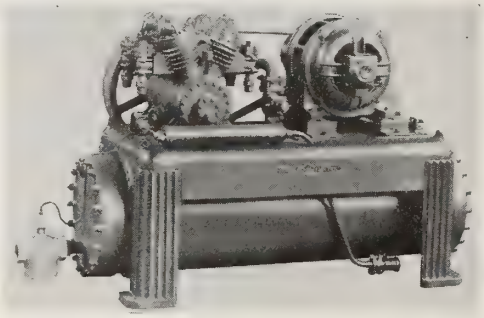
Sprinkler heads are required above the proscenium opening on the auditorium side of the fire curtain wherever combustible draperies are used.

In the old code the main floor level is limited to a maximum height of 3 feet above the sidewalk. In the new ordinance the elevation of the highest point of the main floor is determined by the limit of rise for the sloping floor from the entrance at the sidewalk level.

The new ordinance also permits and regulates the plan of seating now installed in the Goodman Theatre in the Chicago Art Institute and in Thorne Hall on the Northwestern University Campus. This plan of seating, sometimes called the German or Continental Plan, is one in which rows of seats extend the full width of the auditorium and from which exit is directly to openings in the side walls or to aisles located against the side walls. In this plan the space between rows is increased to facilitate movement toward the side exits.

The ordinance will not affect theatres already built except in cases where intensive remodeling work is done.

New Seating Leads Cooling Despite Heat



THEATRE EQUIPMENT sales at the Des Moines Theatre Supply Company has run more largely to reseating of houses than to the installation of cooling systems, despite the extremely high temperatures, with a total of over $12,000 in the last month for new seating equipment, and $8,164 in new cooling systems, according to Arthur Thiele, manager. He finds the installation of cooling systems this year somewhat under the about $10,000 worth of business in that department at this time last year, due to the fact that while Iowa has had some hot waves, they have been alternated with cool waves that have made some theatres put off contemplated cooling system installations.

Abe Frankel installed $4,200 worth of seats at the Casino Theatre, Des Moines; L. P. Gilligan of the Tall Corn at Kanawaha, Ia., 300 seats; The Riviera at Rock Island, Ill., 400 chairs; the Lincoln Theatre, Des Moines, 500 chairs.

Cooling system installations reported by Mr. Thiele, are: L. Kaplan, for his Mason City house, and for two Waterloo houses; Ralph Pratt, for the State Theatre at Washington; Jake Bauma, at Pocohontas; Strand at Victor, Ia.; J. E. Cass for four theatres; and L. Cato, Waukon, Ia.

New Condensing Unit For Air-Conditioning

AN AIR-CONDITIONING condensing unit has been brought out by the General Electric Company, designed for belt-drive and utilizing a V-8 arrangement of cylinders, all mounted on a cast-iron base together with a 40-horsepower electric motor and a cleanable shell and tube condenser-liquid receiver. A liquid refrigerant strainer, suction strainer, suction pressure control, high pressure safety lockout, and water regulating valve are also included as integral parts of the unit.

With a cooling water temperature of 75°, a suction temperature of 40°, and a water temperature rise of 20°, this condensing unit is rated at 514,000 b.t.u. per hour cooling, with a power consumption of 40.6 kilowatts, and a water consumption of 3,880 gallons per hour.

Rewinder Designed For 2000-Foot Reels

A REWINDER especially designed to meet the requirements of the projection room with the introduction of the 2,000-foot reels September 1, has been added to the line of the Neumade Products Corporation of New York. There are several types—with a 2½-to-1 or 4-to-1 ratio, and with a two- or three-point base. It is equipped with ball racers and steel-cut gears.

The models available include three types of action—the standard geared end, extension arm brake, or handle brake. The spindle or reel shaft is equipped with a large reel bumper collar. Lubrication is not required, all bearings being of sealed type, packed with grease.

All-Metal Blower Fan for Theatres

A BLOWER FAN entirely of metal construction with varying capacities of from 2,800 to 5,500 cubic feet per minute, has been placed on the theatre equipment market by the Progressive Reeltone Corporation of Grand Rapids, Mich. The blower wheel has 64 blades, die-cut, secured to one-piece steel retaining rings, and the shaft is 1-inch steel mounted on adjustable bearings equipped with oil cups. The housing is of pressed steel and is assembled into one unit. Overall dimensions are—height, 32 inches; depth, 26 inches; width, 25 inches. The discharge opening measures 18 inches square.

The motor supplied with the fan is a General Electric capacitor type for 110-220 volt, 60-cycle single-phase alternating current supply.

Transformer to Adapt Low-Impedance Mikes

A NEW INPUT transformer of the cable type, designed to operate low impedance public address system microphones directly into amplifiers having high-impedance input, has been placed on the market by the Amperite Corporation of New York. It permits the cable of the low impedance microphone to be any length up to 2,000 feet, and as many as four velocity microphones may be fed into one transformer.

Hum pickup is eliminated by hum-neutralization design characteristics of the transformer. Only a few seconds are required to connect the input of the transformer to the microphone, and a single conductor shielded cable is supplied for the output. Either a 50- or 200-ohm microphone can be fed into the standard input impedance of 200 ohms, while other impedances are obtainable.

F & M Activity Leads St. Louis Area Building

THE REMODELING and construction program recently launched by Fanchon & Marco, consequent to their acquisitions in St. Louis, has had the effect of a small building boom in that area. Between twelve and fifteen houses are involved.

The plans as perfected provide that the Ambassador, Fox, Missouri and St. Louis will operate as first run houses. The Grand Central, which has been renamed the Guild Cinema, is to be devoted to unusual foreign and educational productions. About $170,000 is to be expended in refurnishing and redecorating the first runs. The Orpheum is to drop back to a "continued first-run" policy. That is it will follow immediately after one of the other houses, while the Shubert-Rialto and Hi-Pointe are to be second run houses.

In addition to seeking absolute control of the St. Louis Amusement Company the Fanchon & Marco interests also contemplate the building or leasing of seven new motion picture theatres.

Harry C. Arthur, Jr., vice president and general manager of Fanchon & Marco, in discussing his company's plans, said that Fanchon & Marco's entire expenditures in St. Louis will aggregate $1,000,000.

The St. Louis Theatre, which has been dark for many months, was bought outright from the bondholders of that property. This transfer took place on June 30.

Contemplated improvements for the various theatres have been estimated as follows: Guild Cinema, upwards of $75,000; Missouri, $40,000; St. Louis, $30,000; Ambassador, $15,000, and Fox, $10,000. It may be necessary to close the Ambassador and Fox briefly during the course of these improvements.

Mr. Arthur stated that the seven new second-run theatres will be erected in the vicinity of the following intersections: Delmar and Kingshighway Boulevard; Easton and Hamilton Avenues; Grand Boulevard and Arsenal Street, Chippewa and Jefferson Avenues, Grand and Hollywood Boulevards, Kingshighway Boulevard and West Florissant Avenue, and Delmar Boulevard and Hanley Road, in University City, a suburb. Fanchon & Marco propose to build two of these houses outright and will lease the other five from other interests. Each house will seat approximately 2,500 persons and have air-conditioning. The average cost will be $150,000 for structure plus $50,000 for equipment. Arthur said he hoped these houses would be ready by the Spring of 1937.

Some time ago the St. Louis Amusement Company announced the awarding of contracts for the construction of two new theatres. One of these houses was to be located on Forsythe Boulevard near Hanley Road in Clayton, Mo., and the other at West Florissant Avenue and Goodfellow Boulevard in the Northwestern section of St. Louis. Both of the houses were to be erected by the Audrey Realty Company, headed by Eugene A. Freund, and leased to the St. Louis Amusement Company. The Clayton house is to have 1,100 seats and the other about 1,000 seats. Both contracts were awarded to the W. H. and Nelson Cunliff Company, 3320 Lindell Boulevard.

Fanchon & Marco are paying rentals in excess of $6,000 a week for the Ambassador, Fox, Missouri, Guild Cinema, Orpheum and Shubert-Rialto. The price scales to be charged have not been finally decided. There may be some revisions in admission rates, but Arthur stated they will be "popular." The Shubert-Rialto is to have the same show and price policy as the Empress theatre on Olive Street west of Grand Boulevard, which is operated by the Ansell interests.

Outstanding pictures are to be single-billed. Either the Fox, St. Louis or Missouri will have a stage show in conjunction with pictures, if satisfactory arrangements can be made with the musicians and stage hands.

The contract for the construction of Harry E. Miller's new theatre and office building in Festus, Mo., has finally been awarded to N. F. Donald & Son of De Soto, Mo. The building, under plans prepared by Bruce F. Barnes, will cost about $40,000.

Bids have been taken from contractors on the construction of a new theatre and office building for the Lyric Theatre Company in Salem, Mo. Plans and specifications have been prepared also by Bruce F. Barnes. They call for a two-story building with part basement and measuring 70 by 112 feet. The theatre will seat about 500 persons. There will be a shop on the first floor and offices on the second floor.

Peeling 'Em Off the Roll

● Every so often one observes that tickets are still being torn off a roll. It is incongruous. More than twenty years ago the motion picture theatre ceased to be a tentative exploitation of a novelty, a curious type of amusement, characterized by the nickelodeon and properly associated with crudities. Yet we still have, in more instances than one likes to believe, the dispensing of tickets by tearing them off a roll!

Even did ticket issuing machines have no other function than to dispense tickets in the proper number, quickly and with business-like precision, the practice of tearing 'em off the roll would be one that should have entirely disappeared long ago. It looks bad. It has no place in the business of retailing motion picture entertainment today. It's an anachronism. It's as absurd as a counter cash drawer in this day of recording cash registers. It belongs to the day of the "Just-a-minute-please" slide.

It is obvious, of course, that ticket issuing machines are part of the entire cash control system of a theatre. We realize that primarily the mechanism has been developed to combine facility of dispensing with sales registration and classification, so that management can have its finger accurately on the box office pulse at all times, to prevent losses and personnel troubles through cashier-doorman collusion, and also to maintain dependable operating records.

But employe peculations, when they occur, are each operator's own loss, and his office methods are peculiarly his own affair. These lines are aimed at a phase of ticket dispensing of a general significance. It bears upon what the public thinks of us. Attitudes are formed, of course, by a repetition of small things. And peeling 'em off the roll in this day and age of motion pictures is assuredly not conducive to the kind of customer opinion that this business wants.—An Editorial.

Make Office Changes

The Los Angeles office of Cutler-Hammer, Inc., of Milwaukee, manufacturers of switchboards and other electrical equipment, has been removed to 1331 Santa Fe Avenue. W. G. Tapping remains in charge.

Several new representatives have been appointed by the Transformer Corporation of America, New York, manufacturers of public address equipment. Northwestern Agencies of Seattle has been named for the Northwest; Conrad B. Strassner, Los Angeles, for the Southwest; H. Gerber, Boston, for New England; and G. O. Tanner, Pittsburgh, for West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania.

Gets Air Patent License

ARRANGEMENTS have been made by the General Electric Company with the Auditorium Conditioning Corporation whereby the former, now manufacturing air-conditioning equipment for theatres, may use the patents controlled by the latter and relating to certain types of air-conditioning for public auditoriums.

What Style of Fits the Varied

¶ An Editorial Inquiry Letters to and from an

To Mr. Robert Boller, Kansas City, Mo.—

My dear Mr. Boller: I am writing to ask your opinion about a matter which has come up several times of late in conversations with theatre architects in the East. I was much impressed with your ideas impinging upon this very matter when you addressed the MPTOA convention in New Orleans something over a year ago, and I know you have designed theatres for just about every type of city and community. I therefore should greatly value a statement of your reaction to these notions:

It has occurred to me that the motion picture theatre business has become rather blindly committed to a modernism in architecture that obscures specific possibilities in other styles, and that also is resulting in a monotonous repetition of pattern. I wonder if it would not be far better to fit the theatre building directly into the local scene, particularly in small towns, small cities and suburban communities, where the very cultural character of the locality is expressed in its buildings and streets, and where a distinctive style is in tradition.

Suppose we visualize some town, say, in your own Midwest. There is, we'll say, a court house square surrounded by commercial buildings more or less of an architecture prevalent there for a long time. These and the houses and the shaded, quiet streets reflect the very attitudes and customs of the local people. Would not one of these modernistically modern theatres (late Moscow and Berlin, plus folderol from the Paris exposition of Art Moderne?) be an incongruous element in the local architectural and cultural scheme?

On the other hand, a theatre which, while erected according to sound architectural practices with respect to structure and materials, was yet of an architecture peculiarly adapted, in its forms and spirit, to this green and venerable court house square, might well be in much better taste and probably have practical advantages accruing from its native character.

At any rate, I should be grateful for an expression of your opinion.—George Schutz.

My Dear Mr. Schutz: Your letter of the 2d, regarding current trends in theatrical architecture, interested me very much because it reflected a state of mind in which I have found myself for over a year.

For some time I have viewed with considerable concern and distaste the wave of moderne architecture which has attempted to submerge America. At the risk of being held exceedingly mid-Victorian, I have had the intestinal fortitude to take the stand that while this new type of design may have a real and lasting place in the American contemporary architecture, there is also a continuing place for other types of design as well.

Theatre Design American Scene?

Submitted in the Form of Eminent Theatre Architect

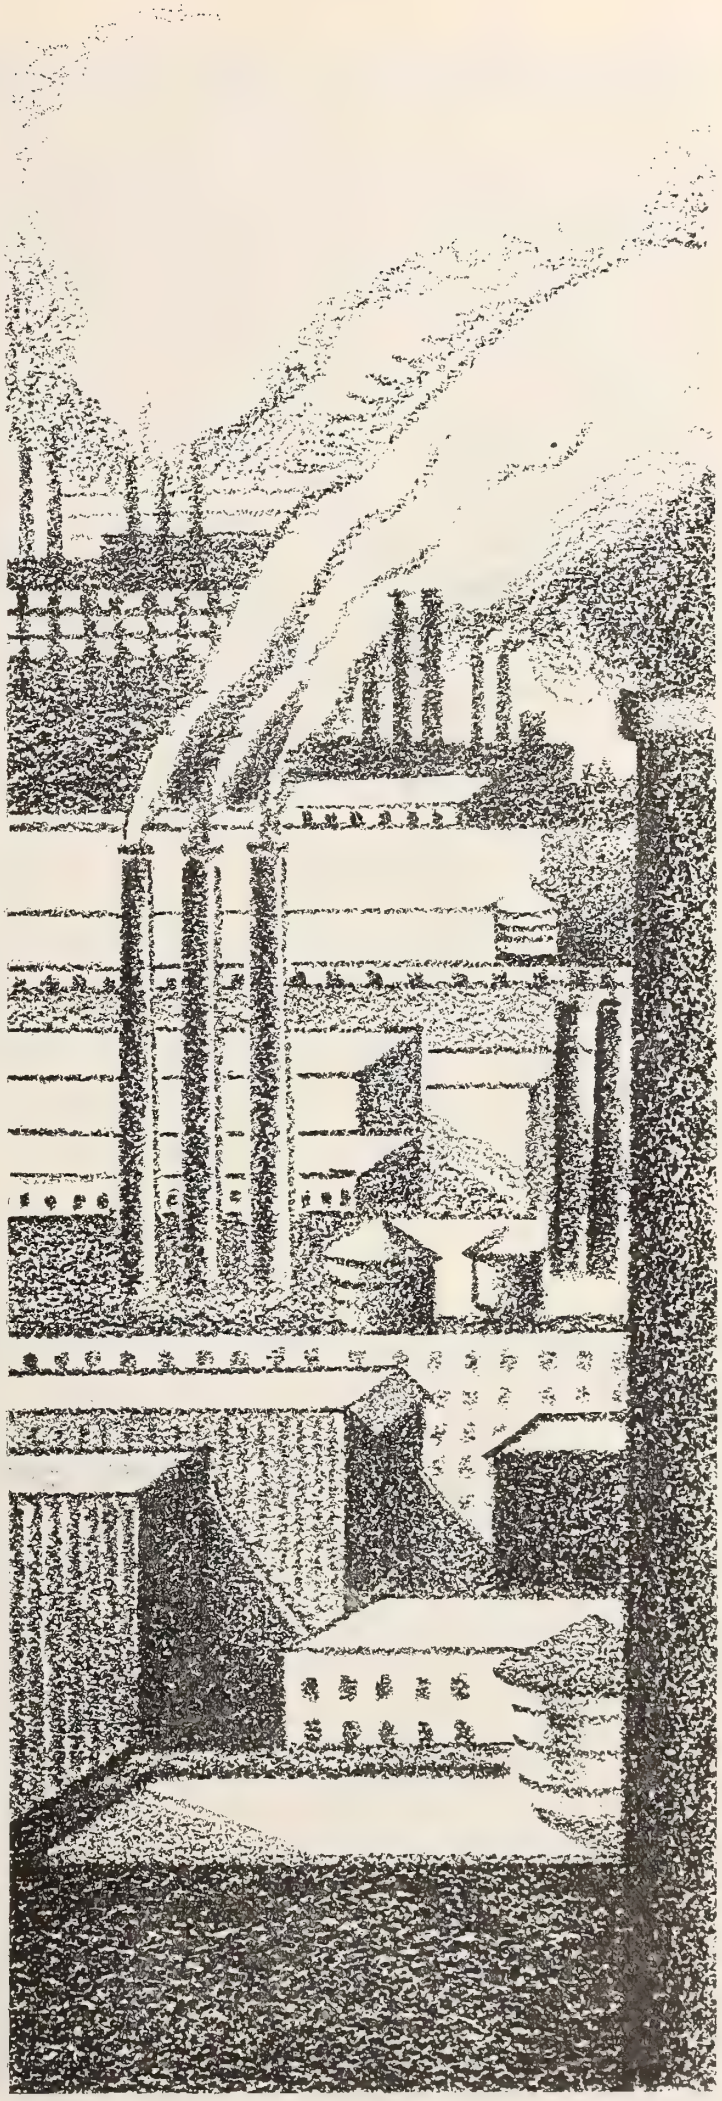
For communities where there is no local tradition or particular background carrying historical significance, it seems to me that the new moderne style, somewhat modified from the barren lines of the German and French types, is very satisfactory. I see no justification for copying and re-copying the mistakes and abortions of our ancestors, represented in many of the older buildings throughout the country, simply because they are hallowed by age.

In Boston, Philadelphia, Williamsburg, or other communities rich in historical lore, it would be an architectural crime to place a moderne design next door to the buildings Americans have grown to love as an integral part of their national background.

Similarly, the owners and my firm felt that for Colorado Springs, a tourist town which entertains visitors from all over the world, the pueblo type of architecture, typical of the early buildings of the Southwestern region, was most appropriate.



We are at present working on a project in which we hope to use historical material revolving about Westport Landing, which was the point farthest West from which early settlers bid civilization goodby and took the Santa Fe trail for adventure in the Northwest and California. We also hope to recall some incidents of the Battle of Westport in interior treatment. The exterior we are planning is in the early Colonial style so popular in the older mansions and churches of the Midwest.

While I do not care for "functional" moderne, I do believe that in the classic moderne we have found a simplicity which is timely. It makes some of the older styles seem fussy and overdone. The greatest lesson moderne exponents have taught us is that gingerbread and unnecessary ornament are things which belong to the past, and that there is beauty in simple line and mass.

Nevertheless, to throw away the infinite variety which is possible in architectural design, and to repeat year after year the same barren, machine-like, "stream-line" structures which we are now having foisted upon us as the "latest," would be to court the destruction of an artistic and aesthetic appreciation of beautiful buildings—a taste which undoubtedly needs further cultivation in America.

With every good wish, I am,

Sincerely yours,
ROBERT BOLLER.

Camden's Savar: Designed for Display

Two views of the auditorium of the Savar theatre. Above, looking toward the rear, showing the air inlets at ceeiling. Below, the proscenium arch, fluted plaster bands extending from columns.

THE MOST distinguishing feature of the Savar theatre, which was recently opened in Camden, N. J., is its facade. Its interior, however, is also noteworthy for its compactness of plan and originality of decorative treatment.

The Savar is owned and operated by Samuel and Joseph Varbalow, getting its name from a combination of letters in the name of the former. It is a two-floor house seating 1,800. W. H. Lee of Philadelphia, was the architect. Leon H. Belber is the manager.

The floor plan is rectangular with the auditorium in a direct line with the entrance (see plan on page 12). The entrance lobby is treated as an inner lobby or foyer, there being no foyer-proper, merely a shallow area inside the auditorium immediately behind the seats. From this lobby, on the right upon entering, stairs lead to the balcony, and just beneath this staircase, other stairs lead down to a small main lounge, off of which are men's and women's lounges and toilet rooms.

The stairs reach the lobby at a cross-aisle dividing this level into an upper and a lower section. Behind the upper tiers of balcony seats is another cross-aisle, which gives access to toilet rooms on one side.

Seats on the main floor are divided into three banks, with two middle aisles and a cross-over at the center. The balcony seating is arranged in four banks (except for that area occupied by the stair well). Seats are by the American Seating Company.

The front of the Savar is very frankly treated as an immense sign. The structure is faced in Macotta, a material consisting in enamel veneering attached to concrete blocks. This material is used in two brilliant colors, blue and red, in shades especially selected for the Savar. These contrasting colors define the massing of the front. This is not shown in the accompanying photograph, which was taken at night. The front is designed in two planes, one being slightly more forward and lower. This section is red, while that rising above it, a little to the rear, and also showing at one side, is blue. These same shades are carried in all the sign work, which is lighted with neon, and throughout the marquee, which is shaped like a triangle but with the apex cut off.

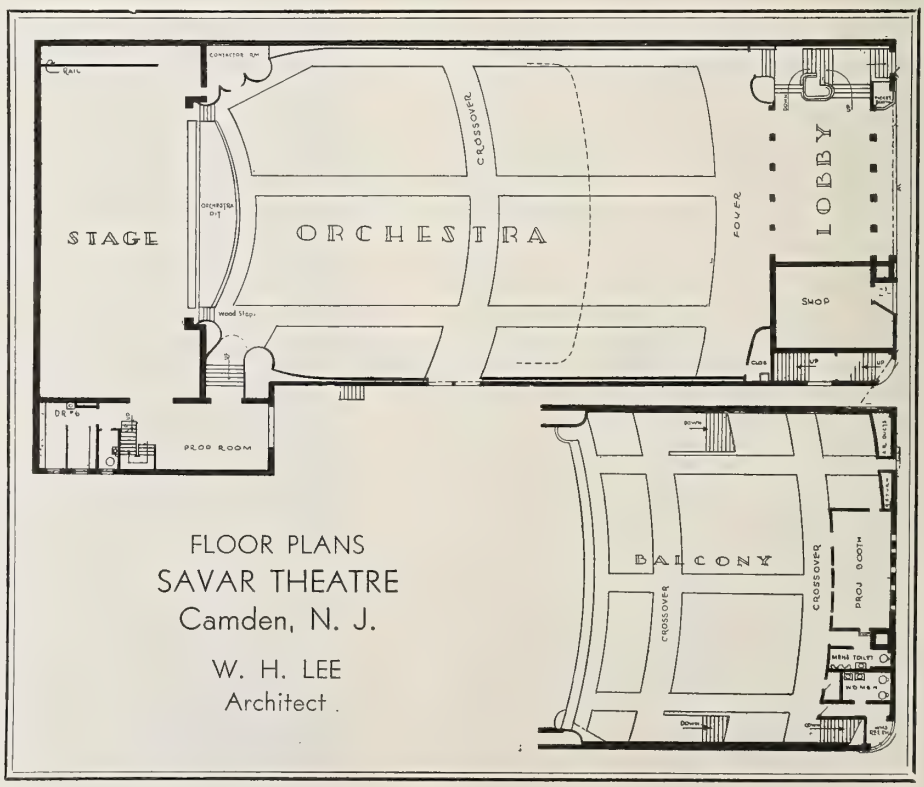
The box office is at one side, abutting the sidewalk, and across the front are five sets of doors leading into the lobby. The lobby is fully carpeted. The design is in modern patterns, with blended tones at all plastered surfaces and metal trim. The ceiling is stepped into lateral bands, one above the other, each step concealing trough lights.



The auditorium is ornamented in a modern scheme, but conservatively. An immediately distinguishing feature is the ceiling, which is vaulted in a series of broad ribs radiating from the proscenium arch. Walls and ceilings are entirely of plaster, which is painted. The only part of the plastered surfaces carrying a pattern, however, are the side walls. These are relatively low, the ceiling reaching down to a low point and terminating in a stenciled band, behind which are lighting troughs from which a colored glow is cast along the walls.

The air-conditioning system incorporates cooling with well water. The system is operated according to zones into which the the theatre has been divided for control. Air is introduced as well as exhausted at the rear of the theatre. Inlets are located across the ceiling above the edge of the balcony for the introduction of air for the main part of the auditorium. The balcony has its own inlets at the rear cornice.

The projection equipment consists in Simplex projectors and RCA Photophone.

The Savar is fully equipped for stage shows, with full rigging and switchboard equipment. House lighting is controlled from the projection room, on a pre-set dimmer system. Color in three-tone combination, all by means of indirect sources, is extensively used and forms a principal decorative medium. Certain innovations have been introduced in the lighting scheme, which have been explained by William A. McAvoy, Jr., of Philadelphia and New York, who installed it, as follows:

"Color and its application has long been acknowledged as one of the most important elements of the theatre. Several preliminary tests were made of various types and sizes of colored lamps for the Savar. After exhaustive tests, it was decided to use clear lamps of the standard type in conjunction with a special reflector. The reflector was made of a metal called Alzak, a product of the research department of the Aluminum Company of America. This reflector has an efficiency of 83 to 86 per cent. It is equivalent to the reflection factor of mirror glass, with the advantage of a permanent finish. With the use of blue heat resisting color roundels over these reflectors, it was found that a 25-watt standard clear lamp would give out a higher intensity of light of considerably better color quality than a 40 watt sprayed inside standard lamp, which heretofore was used for this purpose. Likewise, the red color was reduced from 25 watts to 15 watts or approximately 40 per cent saving in current consumption. This also applied to the color lighting of the stage, which was reduced 40 per cent of the wattage that heretofore had been used for this purpose with a much more even distribution of color illumination over the full length of the curtains and a much improved quality of color. Savings were brought about in the current consumption of the signs and marquee by the unique design of the sign control panel. While color was alternately flashing all over the signs and marquee, it was so arranged that as some controls light, the others were out, and as these were timed of even duration, it was possible to use twice the wattage at the same current cost. Another unique feature is the pilot control panel, which controls the sign from the manager's office and which indicates at a glance, through the use of pilot lights, which lights are on, off or flashing."

Determining the Best Seating Plan Allowed by the Codes

● The second article of a group on seating plans, applying the basic visual and traffic factors to the conditions imposed by the 14-seat limit

By BEN SCHLANGER

IN A PREVIOUS article, aisle and chair arrangements for the motion picture theatre were considered as they would be affected by applying the "Continental Plan" of seating, a plan (appeared in May 2d issue) whereby the number of seats across the width of any one row is, to a reasonable extent, unlimited because of greater back to back measurements permitting access to side aisles only, instead of the intermediate aisles to which we are accustomed.

The difficulties in applying the "Continental Plan" were cited as:

1. Passing in front of too many seated patrons in circulating to any one seat, which would prove annoying in any continuous performance; and
2. Most existing building codes in this country do not permit more than 14 seats in a row from aisle to aisle or seven seats in a row from a wall to an aisle.

A modified adaptation of the "Continental Plan" was proposed, limiting the rows to an 18-seat width, using a 3-foot back-to-back dimension. This system would have the tendency to decrease the depth of the theatre in relation to its width, a result which would bring the spectators farthest from the screen within a more desirable viewing distance.

Since most motion picture theatres are of the continuous performance type, and building codes can be revised, if at all, only with great difficulty due to lack of concerted action, the 14 seat aisle to aisle and seven-seat aisle to wall chair arrangements must be made the best of. Therefore it is necessary to investigate if current practices in motion picture theatre planning are using the limits now set to the greatest advantage.

PLAN FACTORS

Proper aisle and chair arrangements can be determined only after considering all of the following factors:

1. Economy of space and structure.
2. Maximum use of desirable seating areas.
3. Sight lines—(a) distortion lines, (b) obstruction lines.
4. Proper screen size.
5. Accessibility to seats and exits with least annoyance to seated patrons and factor of safety.
6. Building code requirements.

The first factor, that of economy of space and structure, should be approached from two different angles—to obtain a maximum number of seats per cubic foot of structure, and at the same time to obtain a maximum number of desirable seats per cubic foot of structure. Construction costs must be kept to a minimum, but not at the sacrifice of proper screen exhibition.

The following diagrams of aisle arrangement schemes are all based on having 14 seats in a row from aisle to aisle and seven seats from a wall to an aisle. To have a lesser number of seats per row would result in producing a higher ratio of aisle area in relation to seat area, which, of course, becomes an apparent waste of structure. Figures 1, 2 and 3 may be analyzed from a standpoint of space efficiency and other factors involved.

side wall; and, in Diagram 1b, a center bank of 14 seats and an aisle against either wall. Both schemes, 1a and 1b, are limited to a seating capacity of approximately 350. To exceed this capacity would introduce excessive viewing distances and aisle lengths, and difficulty in obtaining unobstructed sight lines.

While Scheme 1a requires less structure than Scheme 1b, the single aisle in the center is objectionable in 1a because it occupies valuable seating area, it causes annoyance to seated spectators due to movement in the aisle within view of the screen and also forces a narrower screen width than Scheme 1b. To use this type of theatre plan for more than 350 seats on one floor is just turning back to the theatre of the original "shooting gallery" type. The addition of an upper level of seating to increase capacity in this and other types shall be dealt with in a subsequent article.

WIDTH ADJUSTMENTS

Figure 2 shows 28 seats in a row, having, in Diagram 2a, a center bank of 14 seats, an aisle on either side, and then 7-seat banks extending from each aisle to the side walls. Diagram 2b disposes of the 28 seats in two 14-seat banks, utilizing a center aisle and two wall aisles. Schemes 2a and 2b both permit a seating capacity up to approximately 700 for a one floor plan, recognizing the proper screen size and proper viewing distance limits. Scheme 2a is far more desirable than Scheme 2b, since it requires less width of structure and eliminates the annoying center aisle. The efficiency and qualities of Scheme 2a have made it a most popular aisle arrangement.

Figure 3 shows 42 seats in a row having, in Diagram 3a, a center aisle flanked on each side by two banks of 14 seats each, an aisle on either extreme of these seats, and seven seats from these aisles to the side walls. Diagram 3b disposes of the 42 seats in the auditorium width by utilizing three banks of 14 seats each with two aisles against the side walls and two aisles separating the three banks of seating. Schemes 3a and 3b both permit a seating capacity up to approximately 1,100 for a one-floor plan, using the proper screen size and viewing distances. In this instance, Scheme 3b, although it requires slightly greater width in structure, is more desirable because of the center bank of seats instead of the center aisle and because it has only two aisles within the seating area instead of three, as in Scheme 3a, thus causing less annoyance to patrons who are already seated.

SPACE ECONOMY

If space efficiency is important, and it usually is, it can be seen that for a one-floor type of plan, it is necessary to have a seating capacity that is as close as possible to 350, 700 or 1,100 seats, respectively, for Schemes 1, 2 and 3, to have a minimum of aisle area per seat. For example, a 900 seating capacity would require aisle Scheme 3b for proper design, causing a greater square-footage of structure per seat than if the capacity were 700 seats using Scheme 2a.

The limits set forth in these diagrams are a compromise with what might be termed ideal viewing conditions for every spectator, and the practices of the past. They permit good viewing conditions in spite of economy of structure.. Many existing and recently constructed theatres conform to these limits; others are wasteful in aisle arrangement, or on the other hand, for example, utilize Scheme 2a for over 700 seats, producing poor viewing conditions for rear seats.

To those exhibitors who would desire even more ideal quality in viewing conditions, the possibilities of upper levels of seating and a greater area per seat must be considered. These systems will be discussed in a subsequent article.

Study All Processes of Operation

ADVISES RKO'S JOE GOETZ

JOE GOETZ may have interpreted Horace Greeley's epic injunction as "Go Midwest, young man." At any rate, Goetz, a young man, did just that. At least, he got there eventually by quick, successive stages. And Greeley couldn't have asked for more. At 28, our Mr. Goetz is comfortably perched near the top rung of the ladder. He is assistant division manager of the RKO Midwest division, for which he also is feature and short subject booker. And add the managerships of the deluxe Paramount and the Orpheum in suburban Cincinnati.

The recently-formed Cincinnati Booker's Club—said to be the only organization of its kind in the country—is his brain-child. Goetz is the directing head. The club was formed to create a closer bond of personal and professional relationship among members of the booking fraternity, a place where mutual problems could be discussed and constructive criticisms and suggestions offered.

In addition, Mr. Goetz acts as auditor for the Cincinnati theatres of the RKO circuit. "Guess I might be compared to a bank examiner," he explained. "I drop in at unannounced periods and make a check. No mistrust exists, and no reflection intended. It's merely a matter of general policy to keep natural accounting errors down to the minimum."

Upon further question, Goetz revealed to the writer that a few months ago he organized a managers' school.

"I feel," he said, "that this is the one way to select and train worthwhile managerial timber. So many young men start in with high aspirations but soon perform their duties as a matter of routine, doing only what is set out for them. An employee must use his head to get ahead—put his whole heart and soul in his work, become familiar, through study and observation, with all branches and processes of theatre operation, regardless of his position. He will succeed only in proportion to his enthusiasm, application and desire to go places. For example, an assistant manager, when reaching that post, should be so thoroughly qualified that he can immediately step into the manager's place and carry on in case of an emergency.

• ONE OF A SERIES OF INTERVIEWS WITH • INTERESTING CINEMA FOLK

The school is conducted weekly at the Palace theatre in Cincinnati. Each house manager selects ushers for enrollment. Meetings are devoted to instructions and discussions. Lectures on some phase of theatre operation or related subject are given by theatre managers or other competent authorities. The Orpheum theatre is used as a "training ground," where the more advanced students are assigned for definite periods and placed practically "on their own" as a test of their potential managerial ability.

Mr. Goetz has also inaugurated systems of manager's house inspection reports and projectionist's film reports. The former covers the theatre premises under 21 distinct headings, further broken down into more than one hundred individual items. This insures cleanliness, ventilation, repairs and general maintenance. Projectionist's reports, proportionately complete, prevent controversies when film is received in poor or mutilated condition, which permits action and adjustment before the showing. The reports are sent to the local executive offices, with copies retained by house managers and projectionists.

Despite his numerous activities, Mr. Goetz finds time to "sell" continuously Cincinnati's Paramount theatre to the public. For example, the New Thought congregation, having outgrown its previous quarters, holds regular Sunday morning services at the theatre, from 1,500 to 1,800 attending. Also, Mr. Goetz never fails to hold a birthday party on the anniversary of the opening of the Paramount. This has become a city-wide event, usually attended by the mayor and members of his staff, and leaders of civic bodies. There are refreshments, music, sometimes dancing in the lobby. Pastors, priests and rabbis are there. People come from all walks of life. It's just one big, happy family.

An activity which won Mr. Goetz much praise was his effort to popularize the city government through lobby displays depicting various functions of city government. He has exhibited fire apparatus, ambulances and accessories, etc., accompanied by signs and photos exemplifying the work. Sometimes, a city employe has been on hand to explain and answer questions, thus familiarizing the public with what the city is doing, and how and why. Moreover, he gratuitously furnishes the city jail with films.

However, Mr. Goetz finds his real happiness in entertaining poor and crippled children, which he does at various intervals, either at the theatre or the institutions where the wards reside. The city provides transportation to the theatre, and Society leaders act as chaperones. Some of the kiddies have been brought to the theatre on stretchers and in casts.

Joe Goetz started as an usher at the old Keith theatre in Dayton, Ohio, while attending school. Five years later, at 19, he was made manager of Keith's State there—probably the youngest manager in the country. When RKO took over the Keith houses, he was appointed manager of the Capitol in Cincinnati. In less than a year he was placed in charge of the Palace, the circuit's second largest Cincinnati house. Soon thereafter the new Paramount opened. Goetz was named manager. His other appointments followed.

Sometime, he confided to the writer with a smile, he intends taking sufficient time out to allow his little daughter, Barbara Joan, to become acquainted with "that strange man" whom she occasionally sees around the house.—E. H. MAYER.

One of the largest major theatre deals made in the Omaha trade territory in some years went into effect July 1, when A. H. Blank, head of the Tri-States Theatres, Inc., took over six independent theatres in Sioux City, Ia. Mr. Blank already operated the Capitol and Princess theatres prior to his taking over the Rialto, Granada, Loop, Circle, Iowa and Hipp. The latter six will be operated in partnership with A. B. Friedman and Sol Shulkin, who already owned the Iowa and Hipp prior to the deal. The other four were taken over from Eli E. Seff and A. Sadoff, who will drop out of the local scene. The eight Sioux City houses will come under Evert R. Cummings, district manager for Mr. Blank in Omaha.

Disastrous fires in the Omaha territory endangered several theatres recently. At Remsen, Ia., a half-million dollar fire that destroyed most of the business section and some 20 residences, did not reach the Grand theatre, managed by F. Koch, nor his home. At Wahoo, Neb., a fire that caused $15,000 damage to a bakery next door, practically demolished the building, only slightly smoked up the Wahoo, managed by Charley Prokop.

Midsummer Reminders About Roofs, Light Shock, Air Comfort

● It may be hotter'n h-ot where you are, but now's the very time to consider these matters, so pull up a chair alongside a cool drink and—

The extreme heat that we are all experiencing this summer is undoubtedly going to be remembered this fall during the rainy season. Extremely high temperatures do great damage to roofs, particularly the built-up type, so don't be surprised if there are leaks in the theatre this fall. Each theatre manager is warned now to check and see for himself just what is happening to the roof of his theatre. A few dollars spent in September is much the wiser policy than waiting for leaks to appear. A leak may do a good deal of damage before it is called to the attention of the manager. Suspended plaster once thoroughly soaked with water is never positively safe, even though there have been instances where it has remained in place for some years.

In discussing roofs with managers, I have found that few know "what it is all about." To start with, let's be sure everyone knows what asphalt is and what tar is.

ASPHALT

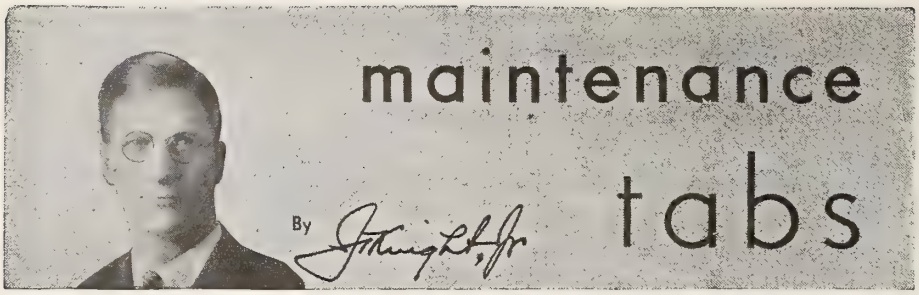
Asphalt is a product of nature found in large deposits sometimes called lakes, in Trinidad and Venezuela. It is a hydrocarbon, but it has some quantity of clay and water in it. It is always put through a refining process before being used for roofing. The various oils contained in the asphalt evaporate more slowly than those found in tar, consequently asphalt remains more plastic for a longer period of time, and when applied to roofs has a longer life and greater flexibility than tar.

COAL TAR

Coal tar, or just tar, is the deposit obtained from blast furnaces, or by distilling coal, or from the manufacture of coke and gas. The crude tar as it comes out of the furnace is again distilled, and from the second process we obtain benzene and naphthalene. The remaining substance, after distilling the second or third time, is called pitch, and this is the material we use for some roofing. Tar pitch is also a hydrocarbon and is impervious to and repels water.

BUILT-UP ROOFS

Most theatres have built-up roofs. Built-up roofs are laid on wood decks, concrete decks, or gypsum slabs. Most built-up roofs are composed of from two to five layers or plys of felt, sometimes called rag felt, or jute saturated with coal tar pitch or asphalt. Each layer or ply is laid in a mopping of hot tar or asphalt. The final ply of felt is very thoroughly mopped with tar or asphalt, and while the tar or asphalt is still hot or soft it is covered with crushed slag, stone or clean gravel. Built-up roofs finished with slag, stone or gravel are not intended to stand much traffic, so don't permit ushers or any employes to use such roofs as places of rest or recreation.



In laying a built-up roof, a layer of sheathing paper is first laid down on the deck. This sheathing paper should be lapped at least 2 inches. On top of the sheathing is laid two layers of tarred felt; if the roof deck is of wood, these layers should be nailed to the deck. The two layers should be lapped from 15 to 18 inches. After this comes the first mopping of tar, then a layer of felt lapped about 20 inches, another mopping of tar or asphalt, another layer of felt lapped from 22 to 24 inches, another mopping of tar or asphalt, and then the final layer of felt lapped 24 inches. A final mopping of tar or asphalt and gravel is applied and you have a five-ply roof that should stand up for fifteen or twenty years.

I have been told that theatre men won't read much during the summer. Having been forwarned, you may wonder why a subject like roofs was selected to write about. Well, the maintenance man knows no seasons. There is a time for every job, and the dry season is the time to think of roofs. Don't wait for rain to tell you that your roofs needs repairing! Don't be like the man found sitting in his cabin under an umbrella who, when asked why he did not fix his roof, replied, "Yes, my roof leaks, but when it ain't rainin' I don't give a damn, and when it's rainin' I can't fix it anyhow."

ILLUMINATION OF THE AUDITORIUM

THERE IS another angle of theatre operation that to me is always emphasized in the summertime, and that is the general running illumination in theatre auditoriums. By running illumination I mean the lights that are burning during the time when pictures are being projected on the screen. Most auditoriums are entirely too dark. The contrast between the light level in the auditorium and the bright sun light on the street is always greater in the summer than in the winter. The contrast is so sharp, especially in the theatre with a very small lobby and foyer, that the effect is almost blinding.

It is my opinion that one of the smartest showmanship angles of summer theatre operation is a complete re-adjustment of the theatre lighting. Many an old theatre could be greatly improved by the expenditure of a few hundred dollars on the revamping of the auditorium lighting scheme. Instead of listening to some local salesman who would like to get rid of some slow-moving fixtures, and is willing to give you a price on them, why not send your problems to the largest lighting laboratory in the country for their advice, [Nela Park Engineering Department, General Electric Company, Cleveland]? AIR-CONDITIONING COSTS: Many operators of theatres talk of air-conditioning, and when told the cost are absolutely astounded. For those who are interested in approximate costs, the following data is given. Though I don't like to pass along any rules of thumb, nevertheless if this will make some theatre operators cost-conscious before they ask three or four companies or engineers to survey jobs, it is worth while in this instance. The following may be used with a fair degree of accuracy for situations north of Richmond, Virginia on the Atlantic coast, and as far west as Cleveland or Detroit:

Based upon (1) outside design conditions of 95° dry bulb and 78° wet bulb, and (2) inside conditions of 80° dry bulb and 50% relative humidity, and (3) 5 cubic feet of fresh air per minute per person, and (4) fan capacity to circulate a total of 20 cubic feet of air per minute per person (5 of which is fresh air)—

Sensible heat gain: 110 b.t.u. per seat for light and wall losses; 193 b.t.u. per seat for people heat; 75 b.t.u. per seat for fresh air, equals a total sensible heat gain of 378 b.t.u. per seat.

Latent heat gain: 153 b.t.u. per seat for people moisture; 117 b.t.u. per seat for fresh air moisture; equals a total sensible heat gain of 270 b.t.u. per seat for moisture.

Total heat gain per seat equals sensible heat and latent heat, equals 378 plus 270, equals 648 b.t.u. per seat per hour.

Therefore, 648 b.t.u. per seat per hour times number of seats in theatre, divided by 12,000 b.t.u. per hour per ton, equals required tons of refrigeration for air-conditioning.

Air-conditioning for summer only (not including winter heating coils), completely installed, averages about $15.25 per seat. Smaller theatres may exceed this unit cost, while larger theatres may run lower.

Summer air conditioning costs complete averages from $225 to $260 per ton of refrigeration. Hence, required tons of refrigeration (as obtained with above equation) multiplied by $242.50, equals approximate cost of the job.

FAN PULSATION: Frequently of late I have had theatre managers tell me that the delivery fan in their theatres seems to pulsate, that is, to blow air strongly for a few minutes, then seem not to be blowing any air at all. I have encountered this situation several times myself, and here is my analysis of it:

Every blower, because of its inherent design and the r.p.m. at which it is operating, has a certain definite pressure characteristic. For instance, if you connected the blower to a large balloon it would blow air into that balloon until the pressure in the balloon would equal the blower's pressure characteristic, and after that it would just churn up air and not put any more into the balloon. If some air gradually escaped from the balloon, thereby lowering the pressure in the bag, the blower would again force air into the balloon until the pressure inside equaled the "pressure capacity" of the blower. This is just what happens in some casts in theatres.

This condition can be corrected by any one of several methods: (1) Increase the r.p.m. of the blower, thereby increasing its "pressure capacity." (2) Provide gravity vents so that air in greater quantities can escape quickly from the auditorium. (3) Provide a mechanical exhaust from the auditorium. (4) If the existing fan is delivering more than sufficient air into the auditorium, then reduce the speed of the fan to balance the rate at which air escapes from the auditorium. This last case is encountered rarely but is possible.

Another possible correction in a case where refrigeration is used is to increase the amount of recirculated air, and decrease the amount of fresh air. The general fault causing this condition is that the designing engineer selected a fan with too low a static pressure (indicated S.P. in fan catalogs) characteristic, or "pressure capacity," as I have used the term here.

personally, have never known of them charging anybody for their service.

REACTION OF EYES

Let's see just what happens to a person's eye when he comes into a dark theatre from a sun-lit sidewalk. When on the street the pupils of the eyes have contracted because of too much light, then upon suddenly entering an almost unlighted auditorium, the pupils try to enlarge quickly to get all the light they can. This physical reaction, taking place so quickly, is not only blinding, but extremely uncomfortable. Then, with the pupils of the eyes wide open, the person finally arrives at a seat and turns his eyes on a brilliantly lighted screen. What happens? The pupils must quickly contract again. This contracting and expanding causes a shock that might be compared to jumping back and forth between a very hot shower and an ice cold shower. Some people are so sensitive that they just can't stand it, and consequently, after going through the reverse process upon leaving the theatre, they complain of headaches or a tired feeling in the eyes.

The real answer, of course, is to light up your auditorium. It can be done in four out of five theatres. Is your theatre one that suffers from lightatosis? One of the larger lamp manufacturing companies has placed on the market a small compact light meter which costs less than $15. If you can't afford to buy one of these, it might be possible to borrow one in order that you may make a study of the varying light levels you subject your patrons' eyes to as they enter or leave your theatre.

EXACT OPERATION OF AIR SYSTEM

I COULD NOT feel satisfied in completing a discussion of summer operating problems without at least touching upon my pet subject, which is the condition of the air in the theatre. Again, I want to emphasize that there are only a small minority of managers who really know anything about the condition of the air in their theatres. I am not talking only to or of those managers who have some type, good or bad, of air conditioning; I am talking to every man who manages a theatre. If you manage a theatre, the weather ouside and the resulting condition inside should be vitally interesting to you every minute of the day. The outside and inside conditions in general terms, mean nothing; average conditions mean nothing; exact readings taken at least four times daily are of the utmost value.

DAILY READINGS

Every theatre should have some person keep a record of the conditions each day. The average type of thermometer (dry bulb) can certainly be read by any adult person of average intelligence. A good dry bulb thermometer can be purchased for less than $2, so there really is no excuse for not having dry bulb readings at least.

In addition to dry bulb readings, wet bulb readings are of vital importance. Relative humidity is a large factor in human comfort. If you don't know how to take wet bulb readings or interpret wet bulb readings, it is certainly high time that you learned, as there are plenty of sources where you can dig up this knowledge, even if you must resort to thumbing over some of your back issues of BETTER THEATRES!

Refer now to the comfort chart (BETTER THEATRES has also presented you with one, and one may be obtained, along with others, from the publisher) and know definitely just the condition that exists in your theatre.

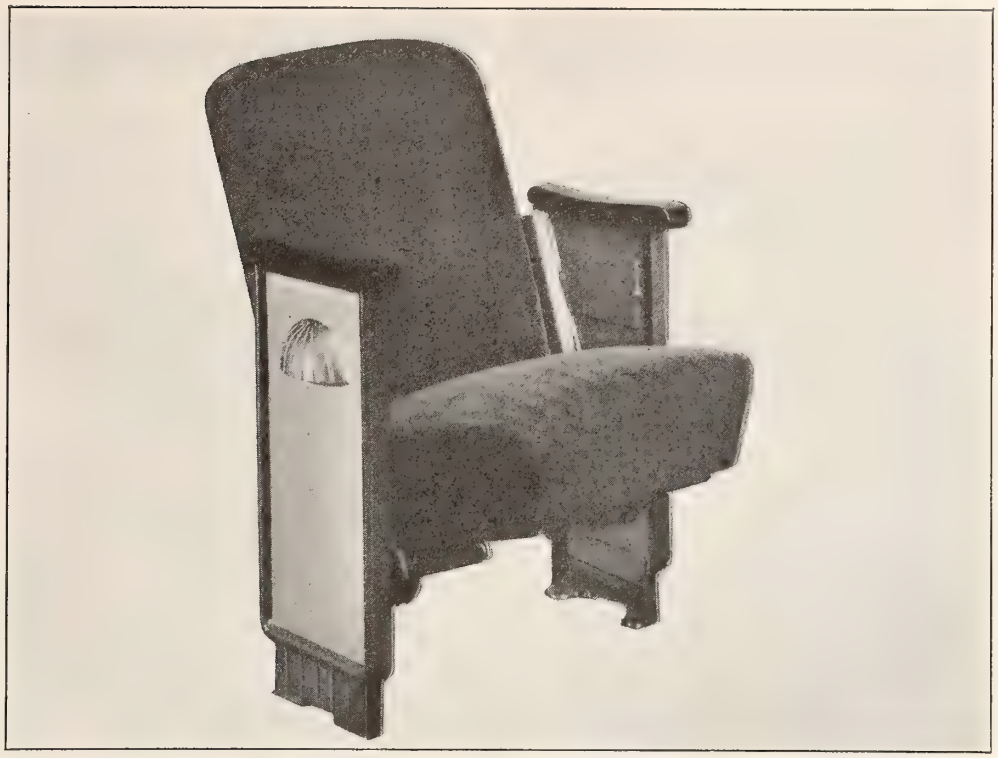
OPERATING ADJUSTMENTS

All of this is leading up to the point of adjusting the system or making changes in the system—and even spending money to make changes in the system. Too many managers are "monkeying" with their systems, depending on a sort of sense of feel to determine whether it is improved. The result is that 50% of the ventilating and air conditioning systems in the theatres of the country are operated inefficiently, which means, with less effect than would be possible if they were properly adjusted and operated.



Circuit executives frequently make the mistake of walking into a theatre after a hearty meal and a few glasses of beer and ordering this or that done to the system because they feel over-heated. If they don't order specific things done, they criticize conditions so severely that the manager, next day before the show opens, makes changes which are not beneficial but which he feels he must do because the "big boss" was not pleased.

I was visiting a certain theatre right at the beginning of the warm weather, and I spent about twelve hours in balancing that system. Two months later, I visited the same theatre and for one hour listened to complaints about the system. The following day it took about three hours to set everything just where I had placed it two months before. The manager was loud in his praise of the improvements, but who changed the adjustment of that system after I had gone?

Ventilation and air-conditioning is becoming more and more an exact branch of engineering, and less and less a trial and error proposition. If you don't know what to do, the best policy is to ask and not waste your time guessing. The chances are you will draw the lucky number in the sweepstakes before you will guess the proper setting of all dampers, louvers, splitters, and the speed of all fans, etc.—J.T.K.

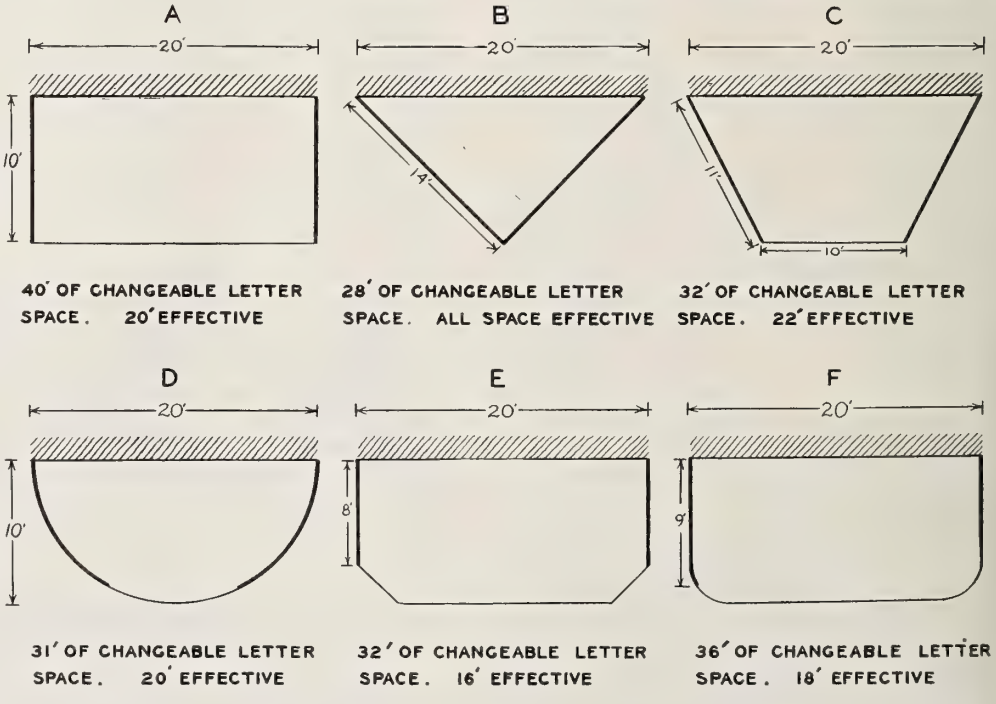
The Selection and Maintenance of Marquees



• What the modern marquee should have (sex-appeal, for one thing, says the author), and some pointers on its maintenance

By MORTON L. CLARK

NOT SO LONG I heard a very interesting talk before a group of advertising men on the subject of "Putting Sex Appeal into Your Advertising." The thought was brought out that no matter what you were selling, whether it might be soap chips or automobiles, you should try to put "sex appeal" into the advertising in back of the product. If you will run through any national magazine today, you will find that this is unquestionably common practice. Obviously, the term is here used figuratively (no pun, of course, intended).

There are many theatres today spending good money to put up a front, which, when it is up, is already five or ten years behind the times. While many theatre operators throughout the country are pulling down the old style three-sided marquees and putting in V-type marquees, you will frequently see another theatre operator spending good money to put up a three-sided marquee. I had the pleasure of working out and installing the first V-type marquee on the Omaha theatre in Omaha, for Tri-States Theatres less than two years ago. I predicted this would be the most widely imitated front installed in twenty years, and the way it has swept the country, certainly proves my point.

About the same time I was having some very interesting conversations with engineers at Nela Park on the subject and got them very much "sold" on the idea of the V-type marquee. They conducted considerable research work, under the direction of Mr. Francis M. Falge, engineer in charge of theatre lighting research, who developed the data set forth in the accompanying comparative diagrams. You will note whereas the V-type front is 100% efficient in copy space, all other types ranged only from 20% to 66 2/3% efficient. When I say 20%, I mean a front that is 12 feet on the ends, and from 50 to 100 feet across the front, as you will frequently see. All too often across the street from this long front, you will find a shoe-shining parlor or some other group of low-grade stores denoting very poor circulation. Yet, here is all of this wasted front. Not only is it wasted, but it costs a substantial amount of money forever for electricity to operate it, which is a thing that is frequently overlooked by the theatre operator. Also, it takes a great deal of time to change this copy, which is frequently done by high-priced stage hands or electricians at time and a half, because it has to be done after the house is filled, in the late evening.

The V front is just as efficient across the street as a three-sided marquee and is the only shape that properly reaches that important factor—fast moving auto traffic. Mr. Falge also brings out the thought in his article that in changing of fronts, we should do something besides just put sheet metal over the same old shape. It is possible to spend a great deal of money doing this, and be very much disappointed from three to six months, in the fact that your front looks about the same.

The marquee has gone through a great evolution in the past 30 or 40 years; originally put up to shelter the elite (who were the only ones who could afford to go to the theatre before the advent of the movies) while passing from carriage to theatre entrance, the early exhibitors who took over legitimate houses found marquees in place. Being showmen, they started using the marquee for advertising purposes. Also, before seating capacity reached its present state, they were used to shelter the lineups, waiting to spend their money.

Today it is a recognized fact that the theatre front is first and foremost a promotional medium, as necessary as good sound, good seats, etc. Not only is it necessary to use the most effective design, but change in appearance is of great importance. We must shed our depression appearance and meet the public with a new, shining, carefree, modern identity.

There are many things that can be done to put this so-called sex-appeal into a theatre front. One, of course, is to use the new modern shapes such as I have just been discussing. The same as new modern ideas are used in lobbies and the steel furniture of modernistic design that is used in a theatre today and carpet patterns and so on, theatre fronts, by all means, should reflect modernism and modern functional designing. One of the best new ideas that has been brought out is the traveling band of lights that go right back to the box office. After all, the box office is the heart-throb of the theatre, and the more attention you can attract to same, the better your results are going to be. Therefore, I feel today that one of our elements that can do most good is the traveling band of lights, preferably in V-shape, back to the box office.

These can either be exposed lamps or inserted behind opal glass. Strips of neon can also be carried back to the box office if desired, but in my estimation, they are not nearly as effective as the lamps because they do not give you the action effect of pointing right back to the box office. Neon in various colors can be used very effectively as trim and for settings, but I still believe the traveling border, above and below the copy is a vital factor in the appearance of a theatre front. I think the trend is definitely back to traveling lamps, as a theatre front should have punch, vim, vigor and life, and this can only be accomplished with color and motion. I believe that most theatre operators who have tried using neon borders have gone back to the lamps. I think the neon is very effective for the trim and setting, and also for the name of the theatre, but the border and striplight should be in lamps.

The letters in the changeable copy should also be modern in design and construction. They should be mounted to insure no sagging, nor rattle and no rusting, and should be of a finish that would either be permanent or easily renewed.

The light in back of these letters should be just right. Too much light causes a glare and an halation that makes the copy hard to read and throws it together at a short distance away. Too little light, of course, gives you a dead appearance and an unreadable message.

One very valuable factor to accomplish this with a low current consumption is porcelain reflectors in back of the changeable copy. One of the greatest difficulties in the past has been that a painted reflector would, within a short space of time (three to six months) become faded and dirty, and the part of the finish that could not be successfully cleaned would get dirtier and dirtier as time went on, and after a year or two the operator might get excited and put a coat of paint on these reflector spaces, but more frequently it will be three or four years before he will do so. I have seen them so dirty that you could scrape the dirt off them a quarter of an inch thick. Also, I have seen the lamps encrusted with dirt. Actually the theatre operator is then only getting about 10% efficiency out of the current consumed and his front presents a dirty, smudgy appearance that is a disgrace to everyone. With the porcelain reflector, a damp cloth will remove all the dirt in a few moments time, then the reflection is brought back to 100% efficiency. There can be a great saving in current as well as a more equal distribution of light and the complete elimination of repainting by the use of this porcelain enamel reflector. However, if a porcelain reflector is impossible or impractical to obtain, then let me urge you to keep your reflecting surfaces as clean as possible and repainted at flash and action.

There was a trend several years back to use very conservative colors on theatre fronts. For instance, a great deal of plain black and silver; however, I think the trend is unquestionably away from this to color, least once a year.

In conclusion, let me say that the heart and soul of your business is showmanship, as you well know, and certainly the place where your showmanship can most profitably come in contact with the public is not inside your house, but outside. After you have them in, you naturally have to deliver the goods. But the showmanship should get them and the marquee does that.

MODERN PROJECTION

Actual Theatre Reproduction With the Two-Way Horn System

● Describing the special arrangements at the Astor Theatre in New York, installed for the presentation of "The Great Ziegfeld" and employing the so-called Shearer method recently developed

INSTALLED originally for improved reproduction desired for the MGM production, "The Great Ziegfeld," a special sound system incorporating, for the first time under such commercial conditions, the so-called Shearer two-way horn system, has been brought to perfection at the Astor theatre in New York City. Possessing a number of new characteristics, it most directly represents the researches of Shearer himself, and of Mr. Lester Isaac, director of projection for Loew's, Inc.

Seated down front, in an end seat, at about a 45° angle to the screen, the writer, attending a performance with Mr. Isaac, found the sound of an unusually high quality. From straight in front of the screen it is as nearly perfect as one could hope sound to be. Not only is the system itself worthy of detailed examination, but the story behind it is interesting. In telling it, after the performance, Mr. Isaac really described the workings of the system. His account, more or less accurately quoted, was as follows:

"Some two years ago a horn system known as the 'Fletcher System' was demonstrated, the same being the property of the Bell Telephone Laboratories. Several demonstrations were given by means of direct monitoring, whereby the performance of Stokowski's Symphony Orchestra, then playing in the city of Philadelphia, was transmitted to New York City and reproduced through the 'Fletcher horn system.' The reproduction was so excellent that the attention of various technicians was drawn to it.

"I immediately took the matter up with a certain sound equipment company, requesting it to duplicate the Fletcher horn system for theatre use. I was promptly assured that it was impossible, due to physical and engineering design of the horn system then in use.

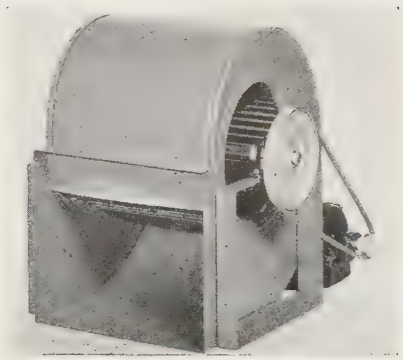
"Being of the well known never-say-die type, and willing to take reasonable chances on anything that gave promise of improvement in projection results and therefore the production of better shows, I discussed the matter in detail with Douglas Shearer, director of recording for MGM at Culver City.

"During the discussion, Mr. Shearer conveyed the idea that he was not satisfied with reproducing systems then in use, in which view I was in complete accord. I informed him, however, that due to lack of facilities it would be physically impossible for my department to experiment in the construction of the horns, units, etc., necessary to development of a proper sound reproduction system, whereupon Mr. Shearer agreed to attempt the development of a suitable horn for theatre use along the lines of those designed by Dr. Harvey Fletcher.

"After five or six months of study and laboratory experiments, Mr. Shearer requested my presence at the MGM studios, in response to which myself and Mr. F. W. Boettecher, chief engineer of sound in my department, made a flying trip to Culver City, where we found a large sound stage used by Metro for their music recording, which was acoustically suitable for the tests about to be made, and equipped with all known horn systems from the major sound equipment manufacturing companies, together with the new Shearer two-way system.

"After very careful tests of them all, the horn of one or another company was eliminated, the conclusion, after much careful work, finally boiling down to two systems, namely the three-way wide range system and the Shearer two-way system. Still further comparative tests proved beyond any possible shadow of doubt that the Shearer two-way system gave best results. In attempting to describe this system in non-technical terms I may best accomplish the purpose by comparing it with the systems now in use.

"Present day systems, as you know, consist of a multiplicity of horns carrying mid-range (which includes the greater part of the dialogue range), plus one or more high frequency horns, or 'tweeters,' plus one or more low frequency horns, or 'woofers.' This makes up the horn system for the present three-way wide range. Although upon its introduction it was thought to be the last word, the fact remains that it is considerably lacking in perfect projection of sound.



ELIMINATING "DEAD SPOTS"

"In large theatres, as well as in some smaller ones, the multiplicity of horns has proved to be unsatisfactory, due to the fact that such horns are too directional—their beam too narrow—so that it is necessary that they be flared at different angles to secure proper distribution in auditoriums of different dimensions.

"Under this condition it follows that between the end of the beam of one horn and the other, there is a so-called dead spot, and in theatres where extremely wide angles are involved, requiring anywhere from three to six horns, in walking across the front portion there would be a sort of 'picket fence' effect between live and dead spots. The dead spots in many cases contain a goodly number of seats, from which the sound, as heard by persons occupying them, lacks illusion and presence.

"The system I am describing completely eliminates this condition, because of the fact that its mid- and high-range horn is of the cellular type, so designed that a horn of any given angle may be supplied. For example, if the angle of sound projection be 45° on each side of the screen center line, then a 90° horn would be installed, thus insuring even distribution over the entire 90° angle, eliminating all dead spots. It is comparable to a narrow stream of water from a hose, and the same stream widened into a spray by readjustment of the nozzle. The spray would very well represent the sound distribution obtained by the new system I am describing.

"We have considered the mid- and high-range elements. Let me now lay before you the peculiarities of the low-frequency units, which consist of a very carefully designed wooden baffle or so-called 'folded horn' assembly, attached to which are one or more low frequency cone speakers, or 'drivers.' It is in fact an exponential horn to which are attached several low-frequency units, thus enabling the reproduction of all low frequencies in proper phase with the mid- and high-frequency ranges.

"Mr. Shearer's department in California has expended much time, energy and money in developing this system. Several were installed in Loew theatres in New York City for actual theatre tests. Through these tests, made by my department working in co-operation with Mr. Shearer, the faults were finally ironed out and the desired system perfected.

"The results provide such naturalness in sound that, with the exception of audio-perspective—which we expect soon to add —we feel that in reality the proverbial 'last word' is obtained so far as sound is concerned. Moreover, the system is available to all theatres, since sound equipment manufacturers have adapted it as part of their future sound equipments.

"However, let it be understood that the horn system does not embody all the improvements of the new, complete sound reproducing system. For several years RCA has been supplying a sound reproducing head that utilizes the so-called rotary stabilizers to eliminate flutter, at least so far as it is detectable by the human ear. It reduces mechanical flutter to a fraction of 1 per cent. Erpi has designed a similar soundhead that will be available very soon now.

AMPLIFICATION INSUFFICIENT

"Further, the type of sound recording used by all studios during the past year is of such nature that much higher powered amplifier systems in theatres is absolutely necessary if sound is to be properly produced. The majority of theatres are still operating with 1928 sound equipments, with which it is wholly impossible to properly reproduce 1936 recording. In my opinion all theatres are under-powered, so far as wattage be concerned. When we attempt to reproduce such splendid voices as Jeanette MacDonald's, Grace Moore's or Nelson Eddy's with an under-powered sound system, we cannot possibly do justice to these fine artists or the theatre-going public, because the recorded beauty of these voices cannot be properly reproduced.

"For example, numbers of present-day theatres are powered by 12-watt amplifiers, which in some cases are increased to 24 watts. In them it is utterly impossible to reproduce the proper acoustic effect without distortion. In the new systems this wattage is increased to such an extent that the average theatre will have 50 watts of amplification available, whereas houses such as, for instance, the Capitol in New York City, will have 150 watts, with proper driving net works whereby the low-frequency units will be powered at 100 watts and the high frequencies at 50 watts. The division in frequencies between high- and low-frequency units begins at 300 cycles, so that all frequencies below 300 are carried on the low-range, and all above on the high- or mid-range unit.

"The new type soundhead also embodies an additional feature, in that it will reproduce push-pull (two-track) or the present conventional single-track sound recording. The push-pull method is now available. The 'Great Ziegfeld' carries the push-pull track. Further, the new soundheads, being designed as they are, and obtainable from both major companies, will reproduce a new sound track now in process of development, concerning which we will soon be able to give you full details.

"All in all, the new system is a very big step in advance. Certainly it will do much to improve theatre sound presentation. I do not say it cannot be improved upon. Everything can be improved, but certainly it does reproduce sound, as applied to motion pictures, to the extent that music is really music and dialogue, natural and fully intelligible. It produces results such as only waits the advent of the third dimension to actually place the artists on the stage in truth.

"I want to give Mr. Shearer full credit for the hard, faithful, splendid work he has done to bring about this improvement."

One other thing noted was the rather astonishing apparent lack of visual distortion in the screen angle, though the Astor projection angle is heavy, as also was the side view from the above described seat. The writer remarked upon this to Mr. Isaac and his answer was both interesting and enlightening. He said:

"Although it is quite true the angles are both high and the distortion in reality present, it is not objectionably visible for the reason that visual results upon that screen are very nearly perfect. The elements of the optical trains of the projectors are all of the very best obtainable. Not only that, but they are in perfect alignment, in addition to which I have the very finest type of diffusive type screen surface now in use. I think you will agree with me that all this tends to make distortion due to angular projection and view less visible. In other words, perfection in other visual effects tends to make such faults less visible."—F. H. RICHARDSON.

F. H. Richardson

ANSWERING INQUIRIES CONCERNING TELEVISION

JOHN L. SIMMONS of Jacksonville, Fla., has written me as follows:

"I note your expressed disbelief that television will be unable to serve motion picture theatres unless or until radical changes have been made in some parts of its structure. Will you be good enough to tell us exactly upon what you base that opinion?

"Thus far everything written concerning television has been couched in such highly technical terms and so cluttered up with X, Y and Z formulas, cube roots and symbols that have no meaning to any but trained engineers, that to me, and I think the average man, they mean just exactly nothing at all. Would it be possible, Mr. Richardson, for you to reduce all this scientific flub-dub to simple language that can be understood by average humans—myself for example?"

What is asked for here is really out of my line. I could write but very little, all by myself, that would not cause the television experts to elevate their honorable noses at more or less sharp angles. Moreover, matters like television are not easily "explained clearly" entirely in lay terms. However, with the help of some persons more familiar than I with the mysteries of television, I will attempt to give Mr. Simmons and others who have made similar inquiry from time to time, some idea of "what it is all about."

First of all, did you ever separate an ordinary photograph into tiny squares, each, say, one sixty-fourth of an inch on each side, and then, by photography, enlarge each piece and reassemble them, each in its proper place upon a canvas screen, you would have an enlarged picture exactly the same as the one you cut to pieces.

That is about what television does so far as the picture itself is concerned. A beam of light "picks up" minute successive "spots" in the subject of the television broadcast, each section of the light beam acquiring an intensity in accordance with the tone (light) characteristic of the subject. Exactly as in sound reproduction, this beam of light, its brilliancy constantly varying in accordance with the successive spots picked up (or that it has passed through, if that makes it plainer) as it moves in a straight line across the picture, is transformed into electric current, the strength of which varies as the brightness of the beam varies.

This enormously weak current then is stepped up to a very high level, if it is to be transported through the air, or to a moderate level if it is to travel by wire. At the receiving end (this might be a theatre) it will be picked up just as is the radio impulse, retransformed into a beam of light, and by a suitable optical system, projected on a screen in magnified form.

And now comes the next big item—so big that it is almost beyond belief to the uninitiated. Upon the screen only just one of those "spots" picked up can appear at one time, the remainder of the screen being blank. How then does the whole picture appear? It appears because the eye has persistence of vision which causes it to retain, for a small fraction of a second, images impressed upon it. These "spots" are projected to the screen continuously. Persistence of vision lasts a sufficient time to enable the retention of all the spots in each picture until the whole picture is complete and the next one is under way.

Let us now examine a few of the various items of operation involved. Disregarding details, of which there are plenty and to spare, and without an intent to describe actualities of practice except in a general way, let us assume we are to broadcast a motion picture positive print, with a beam of light focused thereon of such tiny diameter at the point of contact that 343 of its diameters will just equal the width of the picture in the direction it is to be "scanned." Let us assume this spot to be focused upon the upper left hand corner, and that it moves in a straight line across the frame (picture) to the right and that upon reaching the completion of its travel it drops down (the movement may be either horizontal or vertical) a distance exactly equal to its own diameter, flashed across the picture again, and continues that operation until the entire picture has been covered, or "scanned." In this operation for the sake of clarity we will regard each diameter of the beam, as it moves across the picture, as a separate "spot," so that it is no large jump to imagine each separate spot in the photograph as being picked up separately, even though the picking up be rapid and continuous. We also may see that the length of the light beam representing each "spot" will be of brightness in accordance with its photographic density.

In ordinary motion picture projection, the beam of light that has passed through the film, carries the photographic shading of the whole picture within it, while the picture is over the aperture, but (try to comprehend this clearly) in the case of television the variations in photographic density are carried in the length of the beam itself, since various sections of its length have passed through various sections or "spots" of the picture area. In other words, were we able to view the entire length of the light beam, its brightness at various sections being visible, we would discover that in its length it carried the entire photographic shadings of the picture it had scanned. True the movement of the beam is extremely rapid, as well as continuous, nevertheless in effect it has rested upon every point or "spot" in the entire picture for an infinitesimal fraction of a second. Hence we may say that every spot has been viewed (scanned) separately.

And right here I feel competent to explain the basis of the opinion cited by Friend Simmons. We have seen that only one spot in the picture is illuminated or "scanned" at a time. We have seen that the spot so scanned is of extremely small area. We have seen that after the beam of light has been changed to electric current, traveled to its destination through the air or by wire and been transformed back into a light beam, it is projected on a screen. Understand clearly that hundreds of thousands of such "spots" must be placed on the screen to make up each picture, with all but one of them retained until completion of said picture by persistence of vision. Right here is the crux of the whole matter.

It will be readily understood that no very large amount of light can possibly be forced through a point so very small as the area of the scanning beam, at its point of contact with the film, and that amount of light is all that is available. Now if the receiving screen be of equal dimensions with the scanned subject itself, a satisfactory screen brilliancy might be obtained. A quite acceptable brilliancy may be had, I believe, with a screen one foot square. But when we undertake to magnify the various "spots" to a size that will cover a theatre screen—well, we attempt the impossible, so far as screen brilliancy is concerned.

Let us assume the scanned picture to be one foot square and the theatre screen to have 100 square feet—a very small theatre screen. Is it not evident that the light received upon the theatre screen will be one hundred times less bright than was the sum total of light impressed upon the picture itself? For this reason I have said that until such time (television engineers believe it some day will be, though admitting that it is wholly in the future) as a far more powerful device for picking up television pictures is discovered, the introduction of television into theatres is wholly impossible. I might add that in this opinion I am backed by very eminent television engineers.

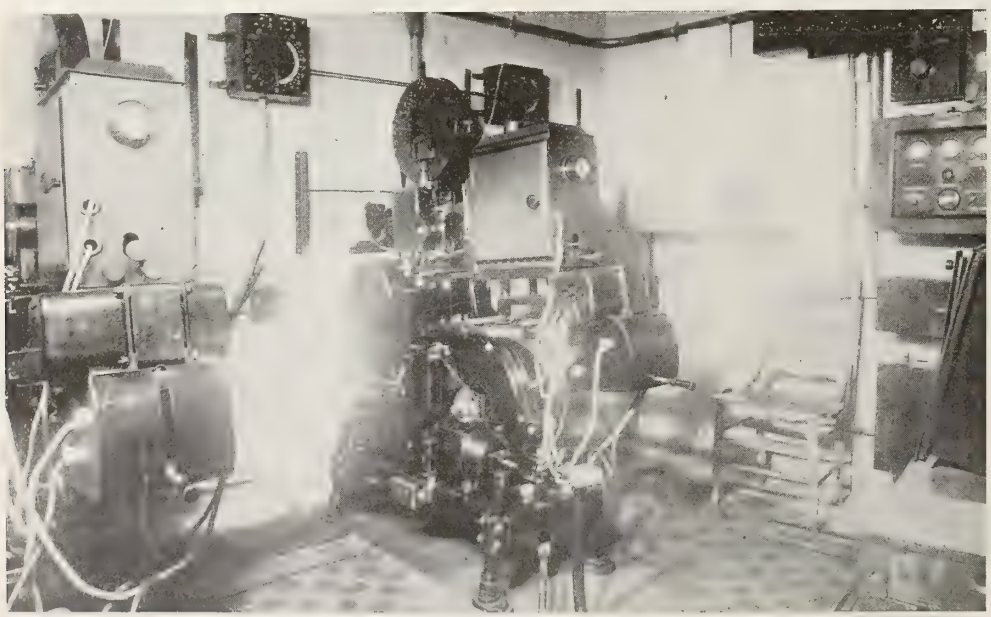
And now here is some interesting information I have acquired in consulting television engineers regarding this article. Television is transported through air entirely by "short wave," and short wave is but very slightly affected by static. It would probably be right now possible to transport acceptably a television picture by air through a rather sharp electrical storm. Oddly enough that would disturb it but little, but automobile ignition raises hob with it, particularly that of large trucks and machines in which the ignition is faulty. Steps are being taken right now to secure shielding of ignition on autos.

To my way of reasoning, some temporary competition might be offered by television (if it would offer any at all) if it became as accessible to homes as radios. Home receiving sets are indeed right now available, but only at a price in advance of $500, with a 5x7-inch picture the limit. It seems to me that such tiny pictures could not compete with the theatre. They could, in fact, be one of the best possible advertisements for motion picture theatres.

As to projectionists worrying about television, while it is wise to post yourselves so far as possible, I would not do too much worrying about its being dumped into your hands as sound was—not for a good while yet. There are formidable problems to be solved before television can adequately serve theatre screens.

WHY SCREEN ILLUMINATION FADES

H. G. SAMUELS of Boston, writes, "We are told that screen illumination is not nearly so bright at the edges as at the center, and that the fall-off is gradual from center to edge. We are assured that on all screens the central section is from three to four times as bright as the edges. If all this is true, will you favor me, and I am sure many others, by explaining why this is? I have asked several Boston projectionists, but to date none have made any satisfactory explanation."



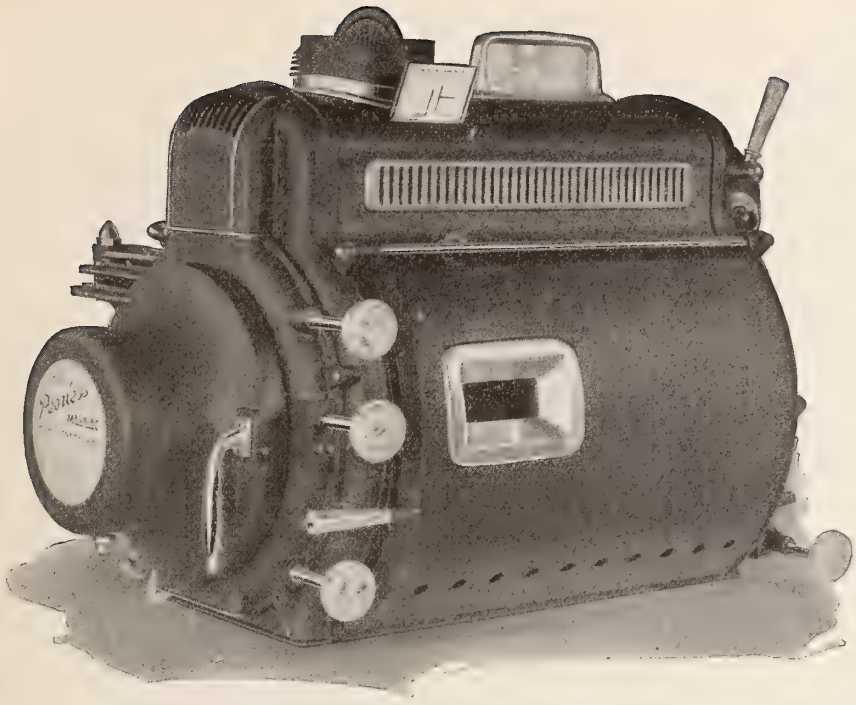
The reason why screen centers are brighter than are their edges is that all present day projector optical systems project almost the full brilliancy of the center of the light source to the screen, but all other light source zones waste a portion of their brilliancy on the cooling plate, and this waste is progressive as the center of the light source is receded from.

Just why the eye is largely unable to discern the very great difference in illumination in various sections of the screen I am, myself, not able to understand, but am well convinced that at least a portion of it is due to the sharp contrast between the black or very dark colored border and the reflection surface itself. That this would have considerable effect in reducing the visibility of the fall-off seems fairly evident. How great the difference is may be viewed by examining page 126 of your new Bluebook of Projection, where you may observe that, whereas the central zone shows a brilliancy of 24.3 candle power, the next zone drops away to 13.6, and the outer one to only 5.9. Incredible but true! The measurements were made for me by an engineer than whom this great industry has no better—L. A. Jones of the Eastman Kodak Company.

And now as to the practical demonstration. Thin some coach painter's black, ground in Japan, with turpentine. The materials are not expensive and may be had at any paint store. Be careful to get none on the back of the mirror. Paint the glass surface and let it dry. It may afterward be washed off with turpentine and after that with soap and water. The mirror will not be in any degree injured.

In this paint, using a sharp-pointed toothpick, make several tiny holes, being sure to wipe the glass perfectly clean, which will require several toothpicks, used one after the other. Make these holes at different distances from the mirror center and at different points in its circumference. Also make them just as small as you possibly can. Strike the arc and you will discover that there will be a succession of spots of light at the projector aperture and that different portions of each spot will pass through the aperture. The farther away from the center of the mirror the beam comes from, the less the amount of each beam which gets through, and the more that which is wasted on the cooling plate. At the center you will probably find the entire beam to be passing through the aperture.

This is an interesting experiment. It may, with variations, be applied to the condenser type arc, with approximately the same result.



Snapshot sent in by Berry B. Simpson, projectionist of the Showell theatre in Ocean City, Md., showing the projection room of that house, which is managed by Mrs. E. S. Strohecker. The projectors are Simplex, the sound Western Eletcric. Light sources are 30-30 mazda. "The projection room," adds Brother Simpson, "is nothing elaborate, but our screen image and sound are best on the East Shore, bar none!"

RECT-O-LITE

to myself, to be based not so much on theory as upon practical work and actual theatre practice, which so many writers seem to either be unadvised of or to wholly ignore. I have shown this official your Bluebook (a splendid book for exhibitors and managers as well as for projectionists) and your Comment in BETTER THEATRES. He has agreed that if I submit the question to you he will abide by your decision.

The question is: What fire prevention measures are necessary in motion picture theatres? What, if any, fire drill is advisable? I will deeply appreciate a detailed answer to these questions, but please do not use my name or name of city if your reply is printed."

This exhibitor has only a film fire in mind. First of all you will find details of this matter, insofar as concerns the projection room, on pages 258 to 261, inclusive, of your Bluebook. They include, briefly, fireproof construction, fireproof port shutters so suspended that within half a second of the start of a fire they will, with very little noise, fall automatically. Above all things, there must be means established to provide for draining out all smoke and gas as fast as formed by the fire, and that means must be put into full effect automatically when the port shutters fall. If this be done and well done, the audience will not know definitely that there is any fire, regardless of its size, making a panic unlikely.

This may be done and panics made highly improbable, but it is not what can be done but what is done that counts, and in a very large number of our theatres, what I have set forth is not done in anything even faintly approaching an adequate manner.

Conditions in different theatres vary widely, of course, but in them all it is highly important that all emergency exit doors be opened quickly. The natural tendency is to go out by the main entrance. Experience has demonstrated that in the excitement of panic, people will rush past a closed emergency exit door toward the main entrance, where congestion may and frequently does set up a highly dangerous condition.

The chief use of a fire drill therefore is to get emergency exits open in the least possible space of time. So far as possible, assign one employe to each emergency exit door, with orders to open it wide instantly the fire signal sounds or shows, and to stand beside it announcing (not yelling, but cooly announcing, in a loud tone of voice) "This way out." The periodic drill is to determine how promptly and efficiently each employe responds.

ANOTHER OLD TIMER PASSES

I AM ADVISED by Local No. 219, IATSE & MPMO, Minneapolis, that Charles R. Wells, one of its organizers and old-time projectionists, has passed on.

Charles R. Wells was a veteran showman. One of the organizers of No. 219, he was its first business representative and financial secretary. He has ever since that time been active in its affairs. Charlie was a familiar and well liked figure at IATSE conventions, most of which he attended as representative of Local 219.

As an old-time projectionist, he ranked high on the list, having become projectionist at the Minneapolis Orpheum theatre in 1905. He held that position until the final roll call.

SUITABILITY OF MAZDA LIGHT

LEONARD A. TRALL of the Sioux theatre, Anthon, Ia., presents the following request for information:

"Dear Mr. Richardson, I am the owner of a small house where high cost of electrical current makes economy in its consumption imperative. We have two 6-B Powers projectors equipped with the old-fashioned arc using the near-vertical carbon setting. We use a motor to pull a generator which converts the 110-volt, 60-cycle a.c. to d.c. Projection distance 72 feet. Screen image 8x11 feet. Will you advise us as to whether or not 1,000-watt mazda lamps would be as satisfactory and could they not be used on a.c., so that no rectifier would be required? In the event the mazda would be at all satisfactory, we feel that the reduction in electric power consumption would justify us in making the change."

Mazda, properly handled (make note of that, please), with projection lenses of proper diameter, can be made to supply plenty of illumination for an 11-foot picture at 72 feet projection distance. No rectifier is required.

I mention projection distance, not because added distance causes any appreciable loss, but for the reason that if a too-long focal length projection lens is necessary, the working distance (distance of rear surface of projection lens to film when screen image is in focus) will perhaps make it impossible to get all the light beam (which diverges between lens and aperture) into the lens. However, your condition is such that by using projection lenses of large diameter there should be no difficulty in this respect. But don't attempt to make small diameter projection lenses serve.

As to whether the resultant illumination will be "satisfactory" or not depends upon what your ideas of "satisfactory" may be. Mazda light does not have that rather harsh brilliancy provided by the modern electric arcs now in general use for projection of motion pictures. Its light is, by comparison, very soft and slightly amber-tinted, though viewed alone it looks perfectly white.

MAKING EQUIPMENT DATA AVAILABLE

FROM a projectionist in the Middle West comes this letter, with the request that the name of the writer be withheld:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: This is my first letter to you, though I have been a projectionist since 1913, in which days, as you have often said, we were really only machine operators. But just the same I have read your articles through all the years, which carries us back into the days of the well-remembered Moving Picture World, of which I still have all the old copies on file. Also, I have all editions of your Bluebook and want to add my say to the others that they are the best in the business. [The italics are his, though he used capital letters.—F. H. R.]

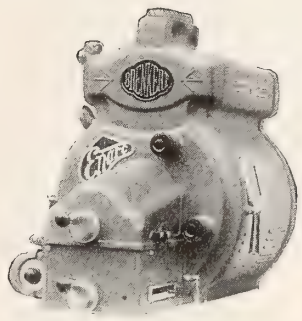
"And now for the reason for this letter. Why are not we men who have to put on the picture and reproduce the sound, able to obtain more detailed information from equipment manufacturers concerning their various equipments? It seems that for some ununderstandable reason they are afraid to supply us with the blue prints, etc., that we want. In the past I have tried hard to gain every bit of information possible concerning the machinery—electrical, magnetic, acoustical and mechanical—it was possible to obtain, but the big job seems to be to get the desired information.

"I am a union man, both projectionist and stage hand, and want to be efficient—in other words to be "the tops." Can you help me? I want a membership in the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, but understand they won't consider a projectionist as a regular member unless he has in some way been an outstanding man."

I am sending the good brother an SMPE application blank which, if it be returned promptly, I will properly present. I believe such a man as this should be eligible to active membership, which is next to the "fellow" grade. It is, as I understand it, right to regard a man who really studies his branch of the business, whatever it may be, as something more than an associate member, one who merely wishes to receive the Journal and assist financially with dues. A fellow is, or should be, a man who not only has done good work, but has been a leader in the field.

As to supplying projectionists with blueprints and full instructions, I am in thorough agreement. It is very difficult, however, to get some equipment manufacturers to take that view.

MONOPLANE AND BIPLANE LAMPS



J. R. PATE, assistant manager of the Royal theatre in Samson, Ala., writes, "I would like information about a matter that I believe will also interest all your theatre manager and projectionist readers. The question is: What is the relative advantages of biplane and monoplane mazda projector lamps; also, the relative value of lamps containing the granulated tungsten employed to scour the deposit off the interior of the lamp globe, and the lamps that do not contain it?

"As to the value of BETTER THEATRES and your Comments therein, every one knows they are indispensable."

The monoplane mazda has four coils of tungsten metal, between which is a small open space which is filled by an image of the said coils. Thus if the adjustment be correctly made and maintained, a solid surface of light is presented to the collector lens, which surface is of sufficiently even brilliancy to serve the purpose.

The biplane lamp has more coils, so located that they themselves present very nearly a solid surface of illumination to the collector lens, which is of course an advantage. However, this is largely counterbalanced by the fact that such lamps consume approximately double the wattage, hence not only are just that much more costly in operation, but also, because of the greater heat, they require larger bulbs.

I append below further comment by Mr. F. E. Carlson of General Electric:

"Almost twice as much tungsten, and therefore twice as much wattage, can be put into a biplane source of a given size. Therefore if, as Mr. Richardson has pointed out, it is possible to increase wattage, the substitution of a biplane source for a monoplane source makes possible increase in screen illuminations of the order of 60% to 80%, while such increases in wattage of the monoplane source might not, and probably wouldn't, produce any worthwhile improvement.

"On the other hand, increasing wattage in a projection lamp isn't always quite so easy as it sounds. Such lamps are designed to work with optical systems in which the distance from source to condenser is fixed. This limits bulb diameter and when wattage is increased without a proportional increase in bulb size, the amount of blackening on the bulb increases and the temperature of the bulb rises. Unless forced ventilation is provided, the bulb temperature may rise to a point where the glass softens and ultimately fails.

"Even if no increase in wattage is possible, it is still quite likely that the substitution of a biplane source will produce an improvement in screen illumination. This will depend upon how effectively the optical system is utilizing the light from the monoplane source. If it is evident that the beam from the monoplane source more than fills the projection lens, then it is obvious that more of the beam from the more concentrated biplane source will be intercepted by the projection lens. The improvement may represent an increase in screen illumination of as much as 50% or even more.

"Just about the only time when the biplane source does not provide an appreciable improvement in screen illumination is when the beam from the monoplane source either just fills, or does not fill, the projection lens, and no increase in wattage is possible. In this case it is evident that there has been no increase in incandescent tungsten in the useful area and therefore the only improvement possible is from concentrating the tungsten nearer the optical axis where it is utilized more effectively."

CIRCUIT EXECUTIVE PREFERS MAZDA LAMPS

KENT G. BUCK, vice president and treasurer of Bush Theatres, San Diego, Calif., writes, "I feel that a few words of sincere appreciation is the least that can be offered you for the very fine job you have done in the prepartion of your new Bluebook. Having met you on your first visit here and heard your lecture when you came last time, I feel real pride in owning an autographed copy.

"During a period of almost twenty years as theatre owner and manager, during which time I had much experience as a practical projectionist, I have had great benefit and help from your writings and teachings. The Bluebook School, in MOTION PICTURE HERALD is fine, and your department in BETTER THEATRES a great improvement over your work of years gone by.

"Your statement, pages 410 and 411 of the Bluebook, concerning Mazda projection lamps, is of particular interest. I demonstrated its truth back in 1926, when we built our Egyptian theatre, which then was one of the finest neigborhood theatres in this section. I installed Motiograph projectors, with the special Motiograph Mazda lamps, Cinephor condensers and the small aperture lens Matiograph supplied with this outfit.

"This was done without encouragement from our projectionists and against the advice of some of them. However, I believed results could be gotten with the outfit. We projected a 16-foot picture at about 95 feet, using a beaded screen. The results were so excellent that in a number of instances it was necessary to take men to the projection room to convince them we were using Mazda. Of course, when sound and its perforated screens came, it was necessary to install reflector arcs."

I have long thought that it really might be quite possible that many of the smaller theatres would be able to use Mazda with very good results were greater attention paid to the optical system, particularly with regard to paralleling the light beam, or at least narrowing its divergence between the aperture and projection lens.

The condition with Mazda is such that the divergence there is wide. A properly designed lens, installed either ahead of, or immediately at, the rear of the aperture, surely would stand the temperature; also surely the added losses at its surface would be much more than counterbalanced by the parallel or near-parallel beam resulting. If this be successfully done, then Mazda might be available for projection at almost any distance, provided, of course, the picture be not too large. This is especially true where conditions are such that a specular screen can be employed without objectional fadeaway.

DETERMINING TYPE OF SCREEN NEEDED

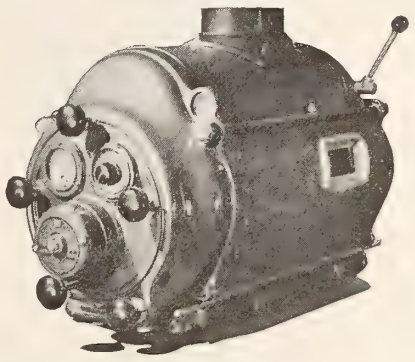
DEAN DRESP, projectionist of the Fox theatre in Beatrice, Neb., desires advice as to the type of screen needed in a theatre seating 525 persons, all on one floor.

"Distance from rear row of seats to front row is 63 feet, 6 inches; seating space is 48 feet wide; distance of 19 feet, 6 inches from front row of seats to screen, making the total distance from screen to rear seats 83 feet. The projection angle is very slight, the lens ports being almost on a line with the top of the screen. Projection distance is 83 feet. The picture is 16 feet wide. Light source is low-intensity reflector type arcs, now pulling 30 amperes each."

Friend Dresp has done something few do—given all the data necessary for a competent reply to his question. Presumably he has the latest Bluebook of Projection. If he will turn to page 154 he will find (Figure 49) that since the width of the seating area is 48 feet, and the distance of the front row from the screen is 19 feet, the end seats of the front row will have approximately a 60° viewing angle to center of screen, and considerably more to its furthest side. Also, a considerable number of seats will have a rather large viewing angle, which demands a screen surface that is highly diffusive. Unless this be provided, there will be fade-away at all seats falling outside a 30° viewing angle, and heavy fade-away if a 40° viewing angle be exceeded.

All screen manufacturers are or should be able to supply a screen with such a surface. Screens, their dimensions, location, surfaces, border and surroundings form a very important matter, and on the whole, one that is treated in a disgracefully inadequate manner.

A 16-foot picture, under the conditions named, cannot be criticized, but it is true that one 2 feet less in width would serve every necessity, so far as rear seat patrons of normal eyesight are concerned, and would improve matters materially for all patrons seated outside a 30° viewing angle. Not only that, but with suitable alterations in the projector optical systems, it would provide either a considerably brighter picture at the same current, or equal brightness with less current.



ONE-MAN ROOMS MAKE JOBS SCARCE

time, but what with some wiring, some radio servicing and some projection work manage to get by. Then, too, I work as part time man in the Sturgis postoffice.

"I would like to tell you of my equipment, of which I am a bit proud. I have a Supreme 491-PA analyzer, which is a very handy piece of apparatus for projectionists to own. It may be used on any a.c. or d.c. circuit up to 1250 volts. Current ranges are from 0 to 250 microamperes, and 0 to 1250 milliamperes, in several steps, and from 0 to 12 amperes. The ohmeter ranges are up to 250 megohms. The outfit also checks capacities and has a decibel meter incorporated. It is arranged to provide complete facilities for circuit analysis, as well as point to point testing.

"My tools include a large assortment of pliers, a soldering iron, midget socket wrenches, a set of larger socket wrenches; also a set of open-end and a set of box wrenches, plus a set of crescent wrenches. I have a variety of screwdrivers and hammers, a drill and other parts and tools I find use for in the modern projection room. I hope to own a good film splicer and a test reel before long, at which time I will feel well equipped to take care of any projection room and do any ordinary radio servicing as well."

As I have said many times, the one-man room of today is the result of both men in two-man rooms letting the projector run the show with neither of them beside it, thus getting the idea firmly fixed in the minds of exhibitors and managers that two men were unnecessary. Unions permitted this to be. Warnings were disregarded.

Giving the married men preference is all right provided they be as competent as the single men available. However, I hold, as I have always held, that competence is the one right guide. It should determine who is employed and who holds the best jobs. I shall never alter my views in that regard.

Some of you city chaps who kick like a bay steer at steady work and a wage that men like Brown would consider a near-fortune, take note how this good brother digs in, fights his way through in three or four part-time jobs, and equips himself with knowledge and tools.

VACUUM-CLEAN YOUR LAMPHOUSES

BARNEY DE VIETTI of Helper, Utah, writes, "Observing what a messy, mussy job cleaning the lamphouses was, I worked up a brain storm. As you know, the light, fluffy ash which is the residue of the carbons, collects on the interior walls of the lamphouses and scatters all over kingdom-come when one tries to wipe it off, unless a wet cloth be used, and that is not so good. My idea was that it could be sucked out by using the vacuum cleaner with the attachment that is ordinarily employed to clean the drapes, etc.

"Appropriating one of the theatre's suck-'em-ins and the right attachment, I soon had the interior of my lamphouses looking as immaculate as the proverbial hound's tooth. They almost sparkled, and all without a single flick of dust in the air. I have always tried to keep my lamphouses respectable, but never were they as clean as they now are.

"The idea may be old as Adam to you and some of the chaps, but to me it was original, hence credit me a couple of credits. Those who have never used it will be as tickled as a small boy with two or three lollypops."

The idea is not new, Brother DeVietti, but you nevertheless are entitled to credit. You used your brains to reason out a better way to do something, and that is the mark of a good man. You are wholly correct. The vacuum cleaner is the only right tool with which to clean lamphouses. Does a bang-up job, leaving everything shipshape.

But that is not the end of it. The vacuum cleaner should, as I have told you all many times, be used in the projection room once every week. First clean the lamphouses, then using the proper attachment, clean the walls, ceiling and floor. Such cleaning is important. It reduces the amount of dust in the air, which not only gets on the film, producing minute scratch marks in both picture and sound track, but also gets in bearings, accelerating the rate of wear. We thank Brother DeVietti for bringing the matter again to our attention.

PROJECTION IN SING SING PRISON

WELL, I'VE BEEN in jail—and some jail, too, if you ask me! No less than the famous Sing Sing prison at Ossining, New York. Mr. Harry Brewer, who uses motion pictures to exploit the product of the Chevrolet Motor Company, had been invited to give a show in the Sing Sing prison theatre. By invitation I accompanied him, watched the assembly of the complete motion picture-sound outfit which he transports in his motor car, and witnessed a performance that would rival that given in many theatres.

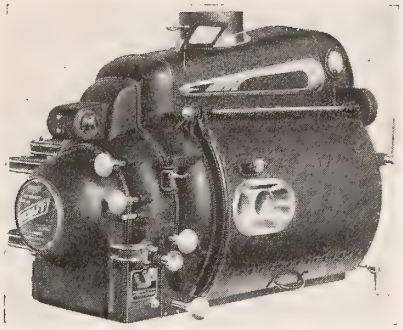
In Sing Sing prison there is a really nice theatre, built entirely of pressed brick, concrete and iron. It seats 1400. There is a stage of good dimensions. Everything was excellent except the screen, which needed cleaning. The projection room is lined with pressed brick, some of which is in color. It is spacious and is equipped with two Simplex projectors and RCA Photophone. One of the men acts as the regular projectionist—I withhold his name because he has lived in Sing Sing for some while, rather much against his will. He will be leaving soon, however.

Here is the odd feature of the whole thing. It was shown to me by the director of recreation, Mr. Gerald F. Curtin. From the center of the rear wall of the auditorium for a distance of perhaps 60 feet, a brick structure runs forward. It is of considerable width and advances almost, if not quite, the length of the auditorium. Between the walls of this structure is the projection room, and below the room is a passage through which the inmates pass to and from the theatre.

At the front end of each wall, on each side, is a pocket in which are eight huge sliding doors, each fully 3 inches thick, about 25 feet high (to the ceiling) by 5 feet wide. These doors, placed side by side in the pocket, form a thickness, of something like 2 feet, yet they may be pulled out and, by a most ingenious track arrangement overhead (concealed except for slots) be finally arranged in a perfectly straight line, thus wholly separating the space (perhaps 60x25 feet) from the auditorium. On Sundays these doors are extended, huge steel curtains at the opposite end are raised, in back of which is a Roman Catholic pulpit on one side, and a regulation protestant pulpit on the other, and thus two complete churches, wholly separated, from the theatre, can be quickly effected.

A signal was given and some 2,000 men filed in, and took their seats. At no time were more than two guards present and they bore no arms, not even a club. The inmates police themselves. All wore gray pants and most of them wore white shirts. The assemblage certainly showed appreciation of the show put on by Mr. Brewer and his assistant, Mr. B. Marsden.

REMEMBERING THOSE WHO HAVE HELPED



DURING THE twenty-seven years that I have been writing on projection, in the old Moving Picture World and in MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES, I have tried very hard to render service to the motion picture industry, particularly to exhibitors, theatre managers and projectionists. To what extent success has crowned my efforts, I must leave to my readers to decide. Alone and unaided, however, I could not have accomplished very much. First I had the loyal backing of James Chalmers, owner of the Moving Picture World, until he met the Grim Reaper many years ago. After his demise, his successor, John Chalmers, and John Wiley, general manager of the World, stood firmly behind me in what was in those days a very real fight for the improvement and recognition of projection as an important part of motion picture processes. Then the Quigley Publishing Company absorbed the Moving Picture World and me with it, since which time I have been able to carry forward my work effectively, and perhaps in a better way.

In this connection I must name my coworker, Mr. George Schutz, editor of BETTER THEATRES, who often has been called upon to, and has exercised, much patience in dealing with your 'umble servant, who (no one knows better than myself) is not always easy to get along with. But we always "made the grade," adjusting our not infrequent differences.

In addition to the two companies and the individuals named I have received much valuable aid from Herbert Griffin, who recently was named vice-president of the International Projector Corporation. Not only has "Herb" been always ready to help, but P. A. McGuire, advertising manager of the company, has been at all times glad to co-operate. (It was "Mac" who evolved, invented or what-have-you, the slogan, "Better Projection Pays," which was very effective in the cause of improved projection.)

I have had invaluable aid from many companies. John Hertner, president of the Hertner Electric Company, is another who has given unstintingly of his time to help. Larry Porter and others of General Electric, the Westinghouse engineers, Erpi, RCA and Bell Laboratory engineers have responded whenever called upon, which has been many times. The National Carbon Company engineering department has also been most helpful and kindly.

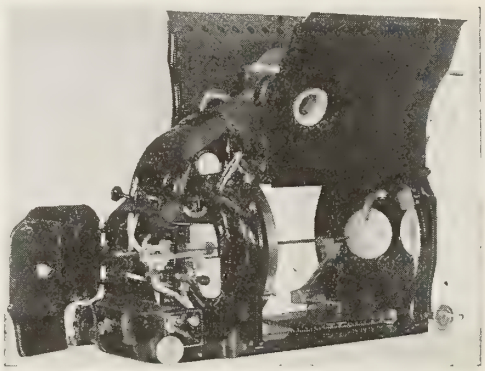
And when I come to projectionists, I hardly know where to begin or where to stop. John Griffiths of Ansonia, Conn., surely did yeoman service in aiding in the field of projection optics. Chauncey Greene of Minneapolis is another who has been of great help, and that young-old war horse, George Edwards, whom you all know, did likewise. Lester Isaacs, director of projection for Loew's, and M. D. O'Brien, his very able assistant, must not be overlooked, while Harry Rubin and Jessie Hopkins, who hold corresponding positions with Paramount, are likewise to be gratefully remembered.

Then there are Harry T. Dobson and Charles Dentlebeck of Toronto; G. W. Bennewitz of Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; the late Arthur Gray of Boston, and many others. They were not merely of help to me, but they contributed generously to the cause of better projection that I was working in. Oh yes, I almost failed to mention my old friend, W. G. Woods, of San Francisco, who years ago, when help was needed badly, gave of his time and energy liberally. "Pop" Woods was one of the very real pioneer projectionists.

And many others—too many to be read here. Don't want any of 'em to think I'm one of those take-and-forget guys. Hence this little reminder of my gratitude.

REMARKABLE SOUND QUALITY

THE OTHER DAY Lester Isaac, Director of Projection for Loew Theatres, invited friend daughter and her dad to visit the Capitol theatre in New York and witness Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "San Francisco." It was one of those parboiling days we "enjoyed" a short while back, and we were not keen, but Mr. Isaac assured us we would see and listen to some remarkable effects. So, knowing the thing must indeed be quite out of the ordinary to cause Mr. Isaac thus to enthuse, we went—and take it from us, we are glad we did, for while it is not the province of my department to describe shows, I can and should compliment Mr. Isaac and his able assistants, as well as the projectionists of the Capitol theatre.



The visual effect was such that we offer no criticism thereupon; the sound, particularly in earthquake scenes, was unusually realistic and effective.

The sound we heard at the Capitol cannot as yet be duplicated in all theatres since in the Capitol there has just been installed new, highly improved sound equipment.

NEW SUPREX ARC PROJECTION LAMP

A NEW MODEL projection lamp designed for use of suprex carbons, has been developed by the Morelite Company, Inc., of New York. It has been given the trade-name of Morelite Mon-Arc.

The lamphouse is of sheet steel and aluminum. On either side is a large door (both are open in the illustration to show the interior mechanism) held normally in closed position by spring action. When raised to open position a lamp inside is automatically lighted and the door is held in open position until pulled shut, which action automatically extinguishes the lamp.

The carbon jaws are of heat-resisting composition metal; the means for clamping the carbon in place are very simple and effective. The front or tip end of each carbon is supported by a V-shape guider of heat-resisting metal, the one supporting positive adjustable vertically; the other both vertically and horizontally.

The 14-inch elliptical reflecting mirror may be moved backward or forward horizontally, or tilted as may be required. Its backing is of imitation stone. Immediately in front of the reflector is a metal dowser designed to protect the mirror surface from pitting by incandescent carbon or copper particles when the arc is struck. This dowser is so connected with the regular lamphouse-cone dowser that one handle operates both simultaneously. A movement of this handle opens the cone dowser and raises the one in front of the mirror up out of the way. An opposite movement of the handle closes both. Directly beneath the arc, on the lamphouse floor, is a metal tray.

The arc control is ingeniously planned. Near the lamphouse floor, immediately under the positive carbon, are two coarse-thread rods about 0.75 of an inch in diameter, called twin feed screws. They are separated from each other a short distance and are approximately 10 inches long.

The twin feed screw furthest from the projectionist carries a spur gear with worm connected, through a ratchet device, to the motor. It therefore rotates whenever the motor is in operation. The second of the twin feed screws is connected, through proper gearing, with a hand-wheel outside the lamphouse, which latter may be turned fast or slowly without interference with operation of the first feed-screw. Each movement of either twin feed screw moves a freely revolving small gear that is in mesh with both feed screws, in such manner that any movement of either feed screw carries this small gear forward or back, whether the movement be caused by the motor or by the before described hand-wheel. The small gear is attached to the carbon arm base, hence as it is moved backward or forward it carries the carbon arm and carbon along with it.

At the rear of the lamphouse is a space enclosed by an aluminum metal door which, when open, gives access to all parts.

There are, of course, all necessary control knobs, handles, etc., conveniently located. Speed of both carbons may be mechanically adjusted by so-called speed regulators, in such manner that either may be made to feed forward faster or more slowly while the arc is in operation, without in any way affecting the speed of the arc control motor.

As extra equipment, a "Mir-O-Guard" is supplied, consisting of a sheet of glass about ⅛-inch thick and bent to fit the face of the mirror, shielding it from pitting or other damage.

There is a double screen, visible from either side of the projector, upon which an image of the arc is focused. An automatic cut-off is supplied to prevent the burning of carbons too short

THE WHY OF LIGHT REFRACTION

OUR OLD FRIEND, John Griffiths, projectionist and author of "Dynamic Ether," writes, "Dear Frank: May I offer comments upon the simplified explanation of light refraction contained in June 27th issue of BETTER THEATRES, in which John Randall writes, 'My puzzle now is that I cannot quite understand why the direction of light is altered when it enters glass or passes out of same. Have read many explanations, but none seem to make the matter clear.' May I suggest that the matter still remains unanswered, despite the simple explanation offered.

"A column of soldiers on march could cross a strip of deep sand, placed diagonal to the line of march, without in any degree altering the direction of the line of march, provided it be not required that their front line be at right angles to the line of march. The actual cause of the change of direction is due to the fact that light can only travel in a direction normal to the wave front represented by the front row of the column of soldiers. Were the soldiers in single file, there would be no alteration in their direction. There would be no influence to change direction, hence we cannot assume the change in velocity and incident angle to be wholly responsible for the alteration in direction.

"The only reasonable conclusion that can be drawn is that each light ray carries or has its own wave front, and until science is able to at least approximately define a 'light ray,' it cannot be certain what the answer to Brother Randall's question is. The answer therefore is as yet unavailable from the viewpoint of the scientist.

"However, this writer is able to offer a solution to the question for the reason that he believes he can define or explain what a light ray is. He holds himself as able to do this by reason of his new conception of the atom, which he holds to be a perfectly balanced mechanical system in the form of a bipolar vortex, the same having a magnetic field in the form of a disk encircling the equator of the vortex. [And this from a projectionist! Phew!—F. H. R.], the system having the same general form as the planet Saturn, in which the rings of the planet represent the magnetic field of the atom. Note, the lighter atoms have a magnetic field of smaller diameter than the heavier ones.

"Whenever a light source is created, the atoms in the air immediately surrounding it polarize into lines, which radiate outward in every direction from the light source, the positive pole of each atom pointing towards the light source. Each of these lines constitute what is known as a light ray. It is composed of atoms that are joined together by their opposite poles like so many tiny magnets. Each of these rays have a wave front in the form of a magnetic field which surround the nucleus, the plane of which is at right angles to the axis of the nucleus.

"Note that this conception of a light ray is practically a counterpart of an electric current, with its magnetic field, but involving only one line of force. It represents the indivisible unit of electric current.

"A ray of light through air atoms has a magnetic field of smaller diameter than the same ray through a glass medium. When a light ray passes from air into glass there is an exchange of energy between the air atom and the glass atom. The glass atom absorbs energy from the air atom and causes the field of the air atom to increase in diameter, while the field of the glass atom decreases in diameter until the fields of both are of equal diameter. When the ray leaves the glass medium and enters air, the opposite action takes place, and the field around the ray decreases when it emerges from the glass. It is this increase and decrease in the diameter of the field around the ray which occurs at the surface of the glass that causes refraction.

"The bending of the ray occurs in the air just before entering the glass, and also in the air just upon leaving the glass. There is always a strain present in the ray if it does not enter and leave the glass in a direction normal or perpendicular to the surface, and it is this strain that causes the refraction at the emergence surface when the field around the ray decreases in diameter.

"When a ray enters a glass surface in a direction normal to the surface, the field around the last air atom is parallel to the surface of the glass so that it is free to expand and contract without coming into contact with the glass surface. Such a ray will therefore not be refracted.

"When a ray enters the glass at an angle, any expansion of the field will cause the edge of the field in the acute angle, to push against the surface of the heavier medium, causing the field to be thrown out of its parallel position to the other fields of the ray. The nucleus of the air atom will follow so as to keep the displaced field around the equator of the nucleus, thus changing the direction of the axis of the nucleus. The angle of refraction will depend upon the incident angle and the amount by which the diameter of the field is increased. We thus get a simple mechanical explanation of refraction."

Reflecting upon all this, I am forcibly reminded that away back about 1912 or 1913, when John Griffiths entered the field as a contributor to my "Trouble Department" and advanced ideas as to the projector optical system, he was more or less laughed at because his ideas (they more or less coincided, I must confess, with my own) were quite at variance with those of the optical engineers. But the laugh was finally proven to be ill-judged, for John's views were found to be more nearly correct than were those of the optical engineers, whereupon the said engineers suddenly made "discoveries" which were strangely akin to the views set forth by Brother John Griffiths. So, gentlemen, I am glad to lay his views concerning light refraction before you, with distinct pride that a man who has been a working projectionist for nearly 30 years, and an off and on contributor to my department for at least 25 of them, is able to present such an argument. True, they are at variance with the views of scientific men, but I am not in the least inclined to question the possibility that he is right.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF PROJECTION ROOMS

SOME WHILE ago we suggested the submission of photographs of projection rooms. Many snapshots have been received, but few have been just what is wanted. For example, Joseph Dina of the Bijou theatre in New York, sends two photographs, but one picture is merely a view of his sound amplifier, the other shows one of his projectors. Both are photographically excellent, but they are not views of a projection room. Instead as stated, they are merely views of two pieces of equipment, which may be had in any manufacturer's or dealer's catalogue.

I will be glad to have views of projection rooms, provided a good view of the general layout is shown. I well know the difficulty of obtaining such a view in very many projection rooms, but of some of the larger ones excellent shots can be made. I prefer, where possible, to have the projection staff included.

Most everybody has a camera capable of taking such pictures in time exposures, and with a little ingenuity, the projection arcs can be used to give proper light.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE DEPARTMENT DEALING WITH ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN AND MATERIALS, DECORATION AND FURNISHINGS

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES: One of the principal functions of this department is to answer inquiries pertaining to preliminary considerations in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. All questions receive the personal attention of Peter M. Hulsken, A.I.A., contributing editor of this department and a practicing architect who long has specialized in theatre design. He will be glad to offer advice, suggestions and criticism. Working plans, however, cannot be supplied. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification.

THE QUESTION:

I HAVE a theatre room located upstairs. This was built about 30 years ago of brick—plastered and wood floor. The room is 56 feet wide by 100 feet long, auditorium ceiling 22 feet high at stage arch, and about 20 feet at back of room. Three banks of seats, ten seats in each bank, eighteen rows. Back of auditorium to stage opening, about 70 feet. Stage opening, 32 feet wide by about 16 feet high. Screen sets back about 12 feet. Sound horns in tower dressing rooms under stage.

Have a big cooling fan in center dressing room with air ducts opening each side of stage into auditorium. I am at present just using outside air for cooling. My method of heating is very poor—two stoves in back of auditorium, a floor heater in front in one corner. How can I make a combination heating and cooling system? Could I use my cooling fan to advantage?

Approximately what would a 500-seat house cost to build on the ground floor, using cinder blocks and the cheapest kind of construction—building alone, including heating and cooling, additional for equipment. Lot 40 feet wide, 160 feet long, on corner.—J. G. S.

THE ANSWER:

ACCORDING to your inquiry, I understand that no heating plant is provided for in your theatre. If you want to make a combination heating and ventilating system, it will be necessary to install a boiler to provide steam for the heating coils. If natural or artificial gas is obtainable in your community at a low rate, your problem could be easily solved, as combination units are obtainable so that no piping except for gas is necessary.

The most efficient way to place the heating and ventilating apparatus would be to build fan rooms on each side of the proscenium arch in the form of flare walls. These fan rooms should be about 8 feet above the floor and should be of fireproof construction. The fresh air is taken from the outside, and the fans blow the air through the heating coils into the auditorium. Vent ducts should be provided to exhaust the foul air.

For cooling, air washers could be installed.

The minimum cost of a 500-seat theatre with one floor, using the most inexpensive materials for construction, and exclusive of any equipment, would be $20,000.

THE QUESTION:

I AM PLANNING to buy a building which is 36 feet by 100 feet. It faces the east, and on the north half of the building is a room which is now used for a theatre. On the south half of the building is a room now occupied by a barber shop. In the center, dividing the theatre and the barber shop is a stairway leading to the second story and apartments. Now what I should like to do is tear out the stairway and move it over to the extreme south of the building, throwing the rest of the barber shop into the theatre. Allowing 6 feet for the stairway and walls I would have 30 feet of front left. The new building would be 30 by 100 feet.

I would appreciate your telling me how to arrange the theatre to these specifications and how many seats it would have. I should like to know how to plan the booth and how high the ceiling should be, what slant to the floor, how to arrange the seats, and where to put lounge rooms and furnace room.

Would I have to put some kind of a beam in where I tear out the stairway, or not? If so what kind of a beam would you suggest. Please tell me about what you think this sort of a job would cost. I am in a small town of 1,800, but we want to have a nice theatre within our means.—W. W. R.

THE ANSWER:

AFTER LOOKING over your sketch, I find that the plan will work out quite satisfactorily. The only item I am afraid of is the present stairhall, which may divide the building into two separate parts, with the floor joists supported by the stairhall walls. If this is the case, the entire upper floor construction will have to be removed and I-beams installed across the width of the building. This would be quite an expensive proposition.

For the seating arrangement, I suggest that you place fourteen seats in a row across the width of the auditorium with a wall aisle on each side. The maximum seating capacity will be 350 seats.

The minimum floor slope should be 4 feet, 6 inches, leaving the first 15 feet, beginning at first row level.

The projection room should be located over the lobby and foyer, and the ceiling height above the high point of the auditorium floor should not be less than 17 feet, unless the projection room can be built in part of the upper structure. In that case, 15 feet will do.

I suggest that you reverse the dimensions of the lobby and foyer—make the lobby at least 10 feet deep, and the foyer 6 feet wide.

The men's and women's toilet rooms can be placed on each side of lobby, opening on the foyer side.

The furnace room should be located under the stage; however, you may have to widen the stage a little. That, however, is the most economical location.

If my presumption concerning the floor construction, as described above, is correct, I advise you to consult a contractor to give you the necessary data on cost. Since I do not know the actual details of the building construction, my estimate would be nothing else but guess work.

Before purchasing the building, make yourself familiar with the actual construction, since if the upper structure has to be rebuilt, you may just as well build a new theatre, as all you actually would save would be the outside walls.

THE QUESTION:

I AM TAKING over a neighborhood theatre in a suburb. The population of this suburb is about 5000 and there is one theatre. The building is 40 x 110 feet, with cement block construction. A 10-foot alley runs along one side of the building. The other side abuts a two-story brick building. The front was formerly stuccoed, but the stucco has been removed except for an arch over the theatre entrance. There are two small store buildings, one on either side of the entrance, a restaurant and barber shop. There is a there-room apartment across the front upstairs, and just in back of the apartment is the projection room on one side, and a small balcony for colored people on the other.

The outside entrance 13 feet, 6 inches wide by 9 feet deep. The ticket window is in the center of the entrance to the lobby, with doors on either side leading into the lobby. The lobby is 13 feet, 6 inches wide and 20 feet, 2 inches deep, with entrance and exit doors on opposite sides leading into a foyer or cross-aisle 7 feet wide. At one end of this cross-aisle there is a side entrance from the alley which serves as a fire exit and also as an entrance to the colored balcony. The foyer

Gentlemen:

The Middleburg Hollywood theatre, which you built in 1928, is in first-class condition and the upkeep expense has been neglible.

S. O. S. CORP. 1600 BROADWAY, N. Y. C. Cable "SOSOUND" is separated from the auditorium only by a wall about 4 feet, 6 inches high made of matched ceiling lumber. Over this wall a cloth about 18 inches wide is hung on a wire.

The auditorium is 62 feet by 38 feet, 6 inches. The stage is 19 feet, 6 inches wide, and 8 feet, 3 inches to screen, as now placed. Ceiling is 14 feet at back, and 18 feet at stage. Walls are plastered and ceiling is of art metal. Ceiling is flat.

I would like to have foyer covered. How can it best be done without too much expense? How many seats can I put in? As now arranged there is a center bank of 10 seats and two wall banks. One aisle is 4 feet wide, and the other is 3 feet 6 inches. Woodwork of entrance, lobby and doors is now painted. Would like to remove paint on woodwork and varnish. Is this feasible? What acoustic work should be done? Is jute matting, such as is used under rugs, all right to hang on walls? What size screen should I use?—P. J. M.

THE ANSWER:

THE LEAST expensive way of covering the foyer walls would be to use a 16 x 32 inch beveled edge sound-absorbing tile, cemented to the present plaster surface; or to use a wood-grained wallboard held in place with chromium snap-on strips.

If I understand your inquiry correctly, the space 38 feet, 6 inches by 62 feet is available for seats. In that case, I suggest that you place the seats as follows:

Plan a center bank of twelve seats across with an aisle on each side, and two wall banks of three seats each across. This will give you 18 seats across the width of the auditorium. A depth of 62 feet will accommodate 24 rows of seats, so the total seating capacity will be 432 seats.

I cannot find any reason why you should remove the paint from present woodwork. One obtains better decorative effects with paint than with natural wood varnished. To remove the paint it would be necessary to burn it off with a torch and sand the woodwork until its natural grain was obtained. This, of course, is an expensive method. Why not use a good paint?

To obtain better acoustic conditions it will be necessary to treat the metal ceiling with "soundproof" paint, and you might place a few draped wall panels along the side walls. This would be a great deal better than the matting which you suggest.

According to the size given for stage, the largest possible projection screen which you could install would be 10 feet, 4 inches by 14 feet 4 inches.

The standee railing may be improved by covering it the same as the walls in the foyer. Build on top of it a few posts with a cornice forming open spaces, which can be provided with draw curtains.

THE QUESTION:

I HAVE watched and read with great interest your columns in past issues of BETTER THEATRES. Now here is my problem.

I have a building that is a large wooden frame affair that I want to change into a summer affair. Would want a stage where I could put on regular shows if necessary. The building is 90 feet long and 40 feet wide, with overhead beams 20 feet off the flat floor. On each side there are wings 10 feet high extending 16 feet wider on each side, making the total width of the main floor 72 feet.

There is a low ceiling "el" on the rear of the building of approximately 14 feet, to add to the total depth. I was planning on pulling out the rear "el" and building a stage with proper height there. As there are posts every 10 feet separating the side wings of the building from the main center space, I didn't want to use these wings for seating, unless necessary.

I would like to get close to a thousand seats in if possible. How high should my stage be off the present floor? What pitch should the new floor be?—L. R. B.

THE ANSWER:

AS FAR AS your problem is concerned, I figure that the space 40 feet by 90 feet is only space available for seats, as the 16-foot wings are not very well adapted to spectators on account of the interference of the posts.

It will be impossible to obtain 1000 seats in the section between the columns, even if you were allowed to run a continuous row of seats between columns and use the side wings for aisles. The maximum seating capacity you could obtain would be 864. However, I doubt if even this number would be permissible. If you have to have a center aisle, the seating capacity would be about 800. (Of course, some additional seats may be placed in the front part of the wings near stage.)

I suggest that you place the stage floor 3 feet 6 inches above the low part of auditorium floor. Leave the first 20 feet of the auditorium floor, (near stage) level. The minimum slope of the balance of the floor should be 4 foot 6 inches.

THE QUESTION:

I HAVE a garage building 200 by 45 feet. I am thinking of turning the building into a theatre. My problem is this: The height of the building inside to the iron beams is 12 feet, 4 inches, and to the ceiling it is 14 feet. I am figuring on putting in about 800 seats. The front of the building is two stories; it runs 40 feet.

My intention is to place the booth at the end of the lobby, 7 feet from the floor and dig the floor for elevation for a 100-foot auditorium. After I leave 15 feet for foyer, and 30 feet for stage, how much elevation will I need? Do you think 8 feet too much for 100 feet? Also, I intend to make two exits in the back—one on each side of the stage. But these exits have to be elevated to the street on a 35-foot run, which is too steep. How can I do this?

The floor is level with the street. Is there any other way I can fix the height? I don't want to spend much money, as I don't have it. Does the Government loan money for this purpose? I know it is a paying proposition.—E. N. C.

THE ANSWER:

THE BEST seating arrangement will be a center bank of 13 seats with aisle on each side, and two wall banks of four seats, making the total of 21 seats across the width of the auditorium. The length of the auditorium, 100 feet, will accommodate 38 rows of seats. Allowing for distance between apron and front row of seats, the capacity will be 798 seats.

An incline of 8 feet in the auditorium floor is just about the minimum. The first 20 feet from the stage may be level. Make the incline for the next first 15 feet, 9 inches; the next 15 feet, 12 inches; and so on, increasing the incline 3 inches for every 15 feet of floor space.

A ceiling height of 7 feet for lobby is rather low. The minimum should be 8 feet, 6 inches. You may obtain this by placing the top of the projection room ports on the same level with the bottom of the beams of the auditorium, and extend the upper part of the projection room through the roof.

Two exits near the stage will not be enough for an 800-seat house. It will require four—two near the stage, and two near the rear wall of the auditorium. Perhaps you can use steps inside of the auditorium to reach the grade line for exits.

The Federal government has made loans for theatre remodeling purposes. I suggest that you consult your banker or write the Federal Housing Administration, U.S. Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

THE QUESTION:

THERE IS A garage building here which I am considering remodeling into a 325- to 350-seat theatre. It is 30x120 feet. Side walls are of brick, and it has a level cement floor. Of course the floor will have to be taken out and elevated. Kindly advise best seating arrangement, also approximate cost for heating plant and air conditioning. Give me your advice about layout of box office, lobby, foyer, restrooms and distance from screen to first row of seats.—J. D.

THE ANSWER:

THE BEST seating arrangement for a theatre 30 feet wide is a center bank of 13 seats with a wall aisle on each side. To obtain a seating capacity of 350 seats, you will require 27 rows, or a minimum of 67 feet, six inches.

Place the box office in center of building at sidewalk line, with a set of double entrance doors on each side. Set entrance door flush with back of ticket booth. This will prevent doors projecting beyond front of building when open.

The width of the lobby will be 15 feet, and the depth 15 feet. This will leave space on each side of lobby for men's and women's toilet rooms. These toilet rooms should open from the foyer. The width of foyer does not have to be over 6 feet, and the foyer should extend across the width of auditorium, connecting with wall aisles.

Locate the projection room and manager's office above lobby and rest rooms.

The minimum distance between screen and first row of seats should be 20 feet.

I advise you to consult a local heating contractor to obtain an accurate estimate for heating and air conditioning, as he can inspect the premises and familiarize himself with existing conditions.

THE QUESTION:

I AM contemplating building a new house, which will have a total seating capacity from 600 to 700, in the same locality where my present theatre is located. I would appreciate your sending me booklets or publications containing suitable designs for buildings of this capacity.

Please note that this country is in the tropical zone and the temperature in my locality ranges from 80° to 100°. I would therefore appreciate your giving me suggestions as to a ventilation system.

You may send me also suggestions as to the appropriate building materials to be used and appropriate cost for building of outside wooden construction or concrete. Proposed seats for balcony 150, orchestra 500.—N. Q.

THE ANSWER:

THIS DEPARTMENT may not supply actual designs for theatres. I suggest that you look over carefully, past issues of the BETTER THEATRES. You will find many floor plans and photographs and descriptions of interiors and exteriors, which should give you some of the ideas you seek.

For building in tropical zones, it is paramount that the building be properly insulated, so as to keep the heat out; special study should be given in regard to roof insulation.

My opinion is that concrete walls should be very suitable to your climate. The inside of these walls could be furred for plaster, and the space between the furring could be filled with insulating materials.

Where cold water is obtainable, airwashers generally can cool a theatre very satisfactorily at a relatively moderate cost. Of course, the best results are obtained by mechanical refrigeration and related equipment, but I fear this method is too expensive for you, not only in installation, but also in operating cost.

Ventilating and air-conditioning methods have been extensively discussed in BETTER THEATRES, particularly by J. T. Knight, Jr., in his department, Equipment and Operation. I suggest that you look up these articles, or perhaps you might do well to write this publication specifically concerning your air supply problems, giving all information possible concerning climatic conditions, availability of cold well water, maximum cost, etc.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

THE PUBLIC RELATIONS JOB AND THE HERALD

THAT sector of industrial activity known as public relations, always a concern of the motion picture, has been given impetus and emphasis for all business by the political and social pressures of the New Deal period.

Corporations of all sorts and operating in all manner of fields and markets are establishing public relations offices. Most conspicuous among them is the staid, stable and conservative United States Steel Corporation, with a new publicity office, a press representative and now engaged in an institutional campaign.

Once upon a time, and many years ago as the motion picture counts time, the public relations job for the screen was entirely in the hands of a little group of press agents—"directors of publicity and advertising" we called ourselves then with what was a deal of daring in 1915. Issues of censorship, taxation, the women's clubs, the militant churchmen, and the great basic problem of making the motion picture the accepted medium of entertainment—all these efforts in behalf of the whole industry were the concern of the young men who incidentally were expected to do mighty things toward selling "the program."

TODAY's picture is rather different, revealing evolution into a highly specialized mechanism, or array of mechanisms.

The broader problems affecting the whole industry, in social, regulative and legislative matters, are in the hands of the big complex machine called "The Hays Office." Labour is the specialty of "The Pat Casey Office." And there are some other "offices," like the Copyright Protection Bureau for instance, seldom in print, always in action. Meanwhile the corporation publicity men have tended to become more and more super-showmen working in terms of advertising display and roadshow picture promotions. They still have "programs" to sell, but the programs are made of vastly bigger units. Each motion picture tends to be a business unto itself, as well it may with production budgets what they are.

A BROWSING through the lengthening aisles of the files of Motion Picture Herald and its ancestors and antecedents reveals, too, a closely related evolution in the operations of this journal of the industry.

Way back yonder, about the time that press books were born, there was an article, by the present editor of The Herald, then a press agent, about how half-tones were made. It was just a broad service gesture to the industry, except that all the illustrations about how to make a half-tone were pictures of Mr. Charles Chaplin, posed for the Mutual Film Corporation. There were pages no end in the journals to state and extend the glories of the masters of the movies. A star was anyone who played in a five reeler, and directors were mentioned now and then, authors rarely.

TODAY'S Herald, with its twenty years a-growing, has come to be a publication as different from the beginnings as the industry itself is from Then and Now. "Publicity" as plain publicity is not a factor any more. The line of demarcation between advertising and text, has become the line between merchandising and service. But it is as a factor of public relations, the text of this screed, that today's Herald becomes especially significant. Its pages reflect a consciousness of the eyes of the world. Its material, while addressed acutely to the industry's own audiences, is so presented that it tells a story to that important audience that in the talk of the shop we call "marginal readers"—the small but important circulation among editors, social leaders, financiers, writers. Motion Picture Herald, like its own motion picture reviews, is not written to be quoted, but it is produced with a consciousness that it will be, that it has a public relations job to do for the industry it serves.

And that public relations function has brought a line of specialized supplementary activities, too, as for instance Motion Picture Almanac, which again is ponderously pouring from the presses, with its who's who of 13,112 motion picture names, its record of all the pictures and all the picture corporations. And there's the Box Office Check-Up now in the making with its recordings of the flow of fame and success, for all the makers of pictures in all capacities. Both are, besides their function of interior service, tools of industry, also parts of the public relations job—to be spread over the world to the press and the libraries, the reference shelves of the bankers and economic researchers.

MOSTLY wherever a story of the motion picture is told there can be found in it contribution that has been made by the pages of Motion Picture Herald and its annuals, the Almanac and Box Office Check-Up.

When the other day, in the course of an article, the New York Times observed that Motion Picture Herald "is a weekly journal whose status in the industry may be compared to the importance elsewhere of the Encyclopedia Britannica or the Bible," it was thereby expressing too the reason that the press turns to the Herald and its related publications as the authority.

This Week

Social Survey

Employes in all branches of the film industry—production, distribution and exhibition—will be included in a national census of workers in all fields which the Social Security Board is expected to undertake late in November to lay the groundwork for application of the social security act passed at the last session of Congress.

The survey will cover some 30,000,000 persons working for wages or salaries, each of whom will be given a number which in the future will designate him in the Federal employment records.

The collection of data is to be undertaken by the board in anticipation of the inauguration in 1942 of the payment of old-age pensions to persons more than 65 years of age, to finance which it is expected the board will have, at the close of that year, a reserve of $60,000,000,000 accumulated from the payroll taxes which will be initially imposed next year.

The census, to be made through some 300 offices which the board will establish throughout the country, will give the Government information as to the name, address, sex, race, date of birth and employer's name of every worker eligible for pension listing. This data, together with the worker's signature, will be filed under a numerical system devised to prevent confusion arising from the duplication of names.

WPA Film Bids

Five out of more than 40 companies invited to submit bids for a contract to produce films for the Works Progress Administration were represented in proposals publicly opened and read at WPA headquarters in Washington, D. C., on July 24th. Pathe News was the only newsreel to submit a bid. The Jam Handy Pictures Company, Detroit, filed a protest against a specification providing that "contractor shall agree to cause to be released and/or distributed one newsreel story on the subject of WPA activities each month during the life of this contract through the medium of a nationally-distributed newsreel. Pathe News got the award.

Complete details of the bidding and the bids are reported on page 15.

Trade Practice Moves

The trade practice problems of the motion picture this week took fresh forms: (1) Minority exhibitors in Kansas City started the trial of major distributors on federal anti-trust allegations; and, (2) The Department of Justice renewed its efforts to contact exhibitors in the field on grievances.

British Goodwill Tour

A group of British exhibitors made their first acquaintance with American scenes, theatres and motion picture production and distribution in a visit to New York this week. The tour, which was organized by the London branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, is the first of its kind and it is noted as one expression of the growing trend toward the pooling of international cinema problems, particularly by British and American interests. During their three-day stay in New York the party was given a luncheon by the Photophone Division of RCA, a cocktail party by Martin Quigley of Quigley Publications and W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of the Music Hall, and were taken on a backstage tour of the Music Hall.

Opinions of the group on their visit and pictures taken at the various functions given in their honor appear on page 19.

Ultimatum

Executives of Tokyo's two largest exhibition circuits, the Shochiku and Takarazuka companies, called in the distributors of foreign productions the other day and informed them that henceforth they were going to buy only such outstanding product as they desired, and no more program pictures than their theatres required to fill out programs. The decision was virtually an ultimatum that they no longer would accept lesser product on a block booking arrangement in order to get the best pictures.

The new development in Japan and what it may signify is discussed in the article on page 42.

Ten Companies Profit

Financially, the motion picture situation continues to look favorable, dividends having been declared during the week by Keith-Albee-Orpheum, Columbia, Trans Lux and RCA, while substantial profits from operations were reported by Western Electric, Metropolitan Playhouses, American Telephone, Consolidated Film Industries, Publix Ohio Theatres, Trans Lux, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, KAO, B. F. Keith, and 20th Century-Fox. However, Paramount reported a loss of $476,000 for the second 1936 quarter.

The financial reports of these companies are digested on page 79.

Studios' Running Start

Production of films for the new season's schedules started in earnest last week in Hollywood with many important pictures going before the cameras as others went to the cutting room. B. P. Schulberg was a center of interest as he placed in work the first picture called for in his recently closed contract to produce features for Paramount distribution during the next two years.

Complete data pertaining to pictures started and completed is presented in "The Hollywood Scene" on page 39.

Production Abroad

While production proceeds at high pitch in England, crowding studio stages to capacity, American professionals vacationing overseas are being detained, when contract provisions permit, to participate in pictures on terms reported altogether favorable to all parties. One-way tickets have been recommended as economical for players and directors contemplating overseas holiday.

For a full report of the production situation in England, turn to "British Studios" on page 43.

Preview

The America of Andrew Jackson, no less beset by political differences than the nation of today but somewhat more leisurely in manner, public and private, is the setting of "The Georgeous Hussy," fresh from the cameras with Joan Crawford as the consequential young woman of the title and with Robert Taylor, Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone and others enacting the characters of Samuel Hopkins Adams' historical romance under direction of Clarence Brown.

Gus McCarthy's pictorial preview of the production is published on page 16.

Dodging Shells

The personal safety of motion picture representatives in war-torn Spain was of greater concern this week to American companies than the heavy money loss caused by the rebellion. J. H. Seidelman and J. Friedman of Columbia were forced to hide for two days in a suburban theatre before they could get transportation on a French steamer for Marseilles. Jacques Edelstein of MGM and M. J. Messeri of Paramount were marooned at seaside resorts. Most other managers left for other European capitals.

Further details, by Harry Chapin Plummer, HERALD correspondent, from his temporary headquarters in the American Consulate, are on page 22.

Admission and Taxes

Taxation, particularly on the part of the federal government, is preventing exhibitors throughout the country from increasing their admission scales, a detailed study of theatre conditions in key centers showed this week.

Twenty-three of 29 centers of exhibition reporting revealed that because of taxes, federal and local, showmen were finding prices "frozen" at the points that had been reached when prices were forced to low levels during the depth of the depression.

A detailed analysis of the situation with individual reports from the key centers is to be found in the story beginning on page 13.

Theatre Matrons Licensed

Children under 16, a large and avid portion of the motion picture patronage in New York City, will be admitted to theatres with the full assent of the law starting this week. Licenses are now being issued to exhibitors who, under the new regulations, must provide a special section for children.

Provisions of the new law, details of the license applications, and possible effects of the plan are outlined on page 23.

British Producers Divided

Although the Advisory Committee on the Films Act has officially announced, in London, that it will hear no more testimony, adjourning until October, producers are reported in Wardour street as sharply, if not hopelessly, divided on the major question of the quota. Interest in the possible effect of the Schenck-Ostrer negotiations with respect to G-B is regarded as having had a part in the failure of all parties to see eye-to-eye in the matter of an Anglo-American reciprocal plan under consideration.

Bruce Allan's account of the situation appears on page 44.

Sound Problems

Lubrication in sound equipment is among the problems discussed this week in F. H. Richardson's "The Bluebook School." A number of projectionists offer their replies to the questions posed.

The technological discussions are presented on page 78.

Colyumnist Gives Up

Minnesota's heat was too much for J. C. Jenkins, the HERALD'S "Vagabond Colyumnist." Despite cheery visits with a number of exhibitors from Bemidji to New Ulm and fervent invitations to join them in quest of the wall-eyed pike, Mr. Jenkins headed April Shower, his gentle but fidgety motor, toward home—if the mail address of Neligh, Nebraska, can be called home.

Mr. Jenkins' comment on the theatre situation in Minnesota appears on page 58.

Returns to Paramount

S. A. Lynch, formerly head of the far flung Southern Enterprises, returned to the field of theatre operation this week when he signed a contract to assume charge of the Paramount theatres in Miami, Miami Beach, Coral Gables and Cocoanut Grove, Florida, about twenty theatres in all. He withdrew from the exhibition field several years ago.

The story is on page 46.

Walker Treasurer

Frank C. Walker, operating head of the Comerford theatre circuit, has been named chairman of the finance committee of the Democratic campaign. Mr. Walker is a former treasurer of the Democratic National Committee and was later executive director of the National Emergency Council.

Mr. Walker is quoted with reference to his plan on page 22.

G-B Progress

Progress was made along charted channels in the tri-party transaction linking MGM, Twentieth Century-Fox and Gaumont British in an international alliance during a week which saw Isidore Ostrer returning to England and Joseph M. Schenck arriving in Hollywood prior to returning to New York early next month to sail for London to participate in final details of the deal. A. C. Blumenthal, whose name figured in early reports of the negotiations, also sailed for England. All parties to the transaction declared that the present Gaumont-British distributing machinery and sales force in the United States would be maintained through the present season.

A complete account of the developments in the deal is published on page 24.

G-N Established

Grand National announced this week the completion of its distribution setup, with appointments of managers in various exchange centers and related assignments. Production plans have been progressing steadily. The company will hold sales conventions in New York on August 10, in Chicago August 13, and in San Francisco four days later.

An account of the developments is published on page 46.

Films Without Music

Withdrawal of the American Society of Authors and Composers from the Canadian Performing Rights Society directly affects the exhibition in Canada of pictures containing musical works of the American composers represented, according to an interpretation made this week when representatives of the major distributing companies conferred with E. C. Mills, general manager of ASCAP.

A detailed report of the situation appears on page 76.

Millenium

A minor millenium dawned this week when Dudley Nichols, whose script for "The Informer" won him Academy recognition, told reporters during a visit to New York that what motion pictures need is less dialogue. Hearers reflected that Mr. Nichols has been working pretty hard and forebore to wisecrack. He was serious, though, and gave reasons.

Mr. Nichols' remarks are quoted on page 23.

TAXES 'FREEZE' ADMISSION PRICES, EXHIBITORS FIND

Showmen of 23 Key Centers Blame Federal and State Assessments for Holding Down Box Office Receipts

Taxes are preventing exhibitors from increasing their admission prices, a detailed study of theatre conditions in key centers of the United States showed this week.

Twenty-three of 29 centers of exhibition reporting revealed that because of taxes, federal and local, showmen were finding prices "frozen" at levels that had been necessitated in the depression.

Top admission in most of the situations covered is set at 40 cents because the 10 per cent federal admission tax makes any increase beyond this figure subject to assessment; if the price is increased from 40 cents to 45 cents, the amount of the increase goes for taxation. Therefore, to gain a five cent increase in theatre net the exhibitor is forced to double the amount of price increase over his previous 40-cent charge.

Besides the federal impost which is levied in every state, there are 13 states that impose sales taxes which include admissions, five with taxes on gross receipts of theatres and four states with straight admission taxes. In addition, many special sessions of the legislatures are expected this fall to levy other assessments against theatres for "welfare" and relief measures.

Those situations where exhibitors, desirous of increased admission scales, are barred from doing so because of taxes, include Albany, Atlanta, Birmingham, Boston, Charlotte, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Denver, Detroit, Houston, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, New Orleans, Omaha, Philadelphia, Richmond, San Antonio, San Francisco, Seattle, Tampa, Washington and Wilmington.

Prominent theatre operators and exhibitor leaders throughout the country expressed a common conviction that admission prices should be definitely increased, but that the problem of taxation always intervened to make such a step inadvisable.

E. V. Richards of the Saenger Theatre Corporation, with headquarters at New Orleans, expected his prices to remain as they were. Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company, at Nashville, was of the same opinion, whereas H. M. Richey, general manager of Allied Theatres of Michigan, Inc., at Detroit, saw a general tendency toward increases. Mitchell Wolfson of Wometco Theatres, Inc., at Miami, and Walter Reade, head of the circuit bearing his name, predicted that prices will have to go higher in a short while, but Colonel H. A. Cole, president of Allied Theatre Owners of Texas, felt they are quite well standardized at this point.

A spokesman for RKO Service Corporation, physical operating corporation of the RKO Theatres, in discussing the problem of increased admissions and federal taxation, said that a further raise in their prices was "for the time being, hardly practical because of the federal tax problem."

Changes Limited at Top

"Within the last year or so we have given considerable attention to our price schedule," the executive explained. "We have found that in a few locations it was possible to increase a 25 cents price to a 30 cents price; a 30 cents price to a 35 cents price, or to increase a 35 cents price to a 40 cents price. As a result of these adjustments, our average admission prices for theatres showing straight pictures has increased about one and one-half cents per admission over what it was a year ago.

"Obviously, this process of price adjustment has a very definite upper limit at the present time. I know that you are well aware of the fact that the federal admission tax makes any increase beyond 40 cents subject to very definite restrictions, for if the price is increased from 40 cents to 45 cents the amount of the increase goes for federal tax. Thus, in order to obtain an increase in gross receipts to the company, it is necessary to make a 10 cent jump. In most cases such an increase is too drastic to be attempted under present economic conditions. Being a first-run circuit, most of our basic admission prices tend to approach the 40 cent level and, therefore, our trend of increase appears to be definitely limited for the near term unless the federal taxation limit is lifted to a higher bracket."

Vincent Urges General Increase

Walter Vincent, of Wilmer and Vincent Corporation, commented: "In our territory we do not find any change in the trend of admissions, except in those theatres that never have any money and never will make any money. We have not reduced prices anywhere and we are endeavoring to get our competitors to raise prices, believing that it will have no ill effect on attendance, provided the increase is general in all theatres."

George Skouras, who shares the operating duties of Skouras Theatres Corporation with his brother, Charles Skouras, felt that theatres in the metropolitan area of New York were not charging the proper admission prices and that the scale should definitely be higher, though no change was looked for at present.

Other factors besides taxes have entered the problem. In the West and Midwest the drouth has played havoc with individual incomes, with some effect on theatre grosses. Business conditions in certain sections of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and surrounding territories were reported such that it would be suicidal for exhibitors to try for higher admission scales.

In Philadelphia, it was generally conceded that the admission prices are far below par, that patrons are getting their pictures and entertainment at a too low figure. Distributors and exhibitors said it is evident that admission advances have not kept pace with increased costs of food, clothing and household commodities, but added that contributing factors will tend to maintain that lag for an indefinite period.

The Quaker City was not alone in this situation, for the same problem prevailed in the majority of metropolitan areas throughout the country. New Orleans is operating on a lower scale than any other city approximating its size. Wilmington, according to price standards of commodities, could easily stand a price raise in theatres.

Avoiding Tax Level

Wage levels have been raised in the San Francisco area and admissions could well be scaled upward accordingly, it was felt. Aaron Goldberg, independent operator, voiced the sentiment of others when he said: "Almost everyone in the business would like to see theatre admission prices increased. If the owners of the larger houses were to make such a step, others would fall right into line. But prospects are not bright for any immediate increase, as no one seems to want to get his prices up to where an admission tax would be necessary."

In St. Louis, business conditions have helped considerably to keep first-run as well as subsequent run houses at their old price scale. In Seattle, there is in addition a state admission tax of 2 cents which cannot be absorbed by theatres, so to increase admissions would be to place an additional burden on the public, one that it cannot well carry.

Expansion at Washington

In the national capital, theatres are operating at scales inaugurated several years ago because the total volume of money there decreased but little in the early days of the depression and then began to increase as the Government expanded its activities. As a result, amusement enterprises suffered but little and never were forced to cut admissions.

Besides the 23 key situations previously mentioned, two cities reported definitely increasing their prices this fall; one situation is being forced to cut prices; two probably will be forced to reduce prices if attendance continues to fall off; one has shown a definite increase in admission scales the last few months. These six key cities are Des Moines, Indianapolis, Pittsburgh, Portland, Ore., Salt Lake City and St. Louis.

Following is a detailed report from each of the 29 situations:

PENNSYLVANIA RELIEF ADDS TAX UPON TAX

The state of Pennsylvania partly solved its relief problem in a manner that greatly concerned exhibitors. In order to meet relief expenditures, the state has affixed a tax on admissions, in addition to the regular government tax. Levying one cent on every 25 cents charged at the box office, or fraction thereof, the neighborhood manager hesitates to raise his 25 cents ticket to 30 cents. While the sum seems insignificant on a single admission, it does amount to an appreciable sum when the entire family steps up to the theatre for an evening's entertainment.

No Prospect of Increase in Albany

Admissions in Albany are the same as a year ago with no prospect of an increase. Harry Blank, manager of the RKO Palace, said: "You can quote me as saying admissions should be higher. Albany gets first-run pictures cheaper than any other city of its size."

With Albany City one of the three release centers of the state, pictures are often shown simultaneously with, or a week earlier, than in the metropolitan area and 40 cents is the top admission price.

Albany is overseated. There are about 16,000 seats in all the theatres, with a population of about 120,000. This means 168,000 paid admissions for seven days to get one and one-half houses a day.

There is little prospect of any agreement being reached for a raise in prices. Two circuses would not think of showing in Albany on the same day, but Warner Brothers in competition with the Fabian houses exhibits feature pictures similar to those shown by competitors the same week. Result, poor business at both the Palace and Strand.

The Strand recently inaugurated a policy of "Smoking permitted in balconies and loges," which has given it some pick-up in business.

Albanians object to the holiday and Sunday advance in prices; they are constantly looking for something for nothing or its equivalent. Years ago the big circuses stopped showing in the city limits, the demand for complimentary tickets being so large they could not stand the load. If the motion picture theatres would give away free umbrellas when it rains, provide free taxicabs to bring patrons to the shows, make the general admission price a nickel and serve free lunches in the lobby, it is believed their business would improve.

Atlanta Rates Are Same as Decade Ago

Admission prices to theatres in Atlanta and its vicinity, with a 40 cents top at night and 25 and 30 cents for matinees, have been at that rate for a decade, and there is no probability that any advance will be made soon, according to theatre managers.

There are four de-luxe theatres downtown, three operated by Lucas and Jenkins and one by Loew's, and the maximum of 40 cents has remained so long that it will be practically impossible to raise the rate in the face of the theatre going public's habit of paying the present prices. Another downtown house, the Rialto, independently operated and showing Columbia product, along with such other independent product as it needs to space out the 52 weeks in the year, has a top of 30 cents.

It is believed an effort would be made to boost the top to 50 cents if it did not entail the additional trouble and bookkeeping necessary to care for the federal tax which begins on admissions of that rate and upwards.

Practically all the suburban houses have a 20 cents night and 15 cents matinee rate, and all theatres admit children under 12 at 10 cents at all times.

Birmingham Advance In Subsequent Runs

The general scale of admissions in Birmingham and northern Alabama remains practically the same now as in 1935 except an advance on second and subsequent runs.

First run houses average 25 cents for matinees and 35 cents evenings. The second and subsequent run houses have advanced from 15 to 20 cents admission during the past 15 months. There are only a few houses left which charge less than 20 cents for second runs. Two years ago a charge of as low as 10 cents in many second run houses was not uncommon and double features flourished. Double featuring has disappeared.

There seems little likelihood of further immediate increase in admissions here unless the special session of the legislature expected for this fall levies an admission tax on motion picture houses.

Present Admissions Stand in Boston

Theatres in Boston are too concerned with retaining their present patronage to increase prices. Admission scales have been at a standstill for the past few years. Practically the only instance in which box-office jumps have been made is in the instance of special vaudeville nights, a practice among a number of suburban and outside situations.

Cash giveaways, dish handouts, free jewelry, and whatnot have hit the Northeast heavily. Bank Night, already cleared in the supreme courts of Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine, is by far most popular theatre stimulant in the territory. When it was banned in the Bay State, for instance, the gross of one well known exhibitor dropped from $2,500 weekly to $1,500. Conditions being thus, theatremen are of the general opinion that the time is still not ripe for hiking the prices.

The Boston first-runs average between a 35-cent and a 25-cent low and a 65-cent high. This

PATHE, ONLY NEWSREEL BIDDER, GETS WPA AWARD

Jam Handy Company Protests Distribution Clause; Says Stipulation Limited the Award to Single Newsreel Bidder

Five Bids Received, Ranging from $3,980 to $6,600 Per Reel; Award Made at Washington Five Days Later

Pathe Newsreel, Inc., was selected late Tuesday by the Works Progress Administration of the United States as the contract-employed medium through which the WPA seeks to reach the theatre public.

Ignoring the protests of some minor producing-distributing interests against the WPA's requirements of regular theatrical newsreel distribution of WPA subjects at the rate of at least one a month, the Administration awarded the contract for the making of a series of project pictures to the RKO-controlled Pathe newsreel, headed by Courtland Smith, president, and Jack S. Connolly, general manager, the contract carrying with it not only the provision to produce WPA subjects but also to release sequences in a national newsreel.

Washington had long before heard loud complaints from anti-New Dealers against any film presentation of public projects on the grounds that they too closely resembled "propaganda" intended by the Administration for use in the Presidential campaign.

Only one newsreel company—Pathe News—was found to be represented when, on July 24th, in the office of Chief Clerk Harry L. Kinnear, at the headquarters of the WPA, 1734 New York Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., bids ranging from $3,980 to $6,600, each for the production of 600-foot reels "to consist of subjects and sequences of State and/or city-wide interest recording the story of Works Progress Administration activities" were publicly opened.

Accompanying the high bid of Jam Handy Pictures, of Detroit, was a protest against a specification provision which, it was charged, made it possible for only one company to submit a satisfactory bid.

The provision attacked specified that "the contractor shall agree to cause to be released and/or distributed one newsreel story on the subject of WPA activities each month during the life of this contract through the medium of a nationally-distributed newsreel."

Although more than 40 invitations to bid had been sent out to film companies by the WPA, only five proposals were received and the only bidder having the necessary newsreel distribution available within its own organization was Pathe News.

The protesting Jam Handy company, which has no newsreel facilities, is one of the great industrial motion picture producers, numbering among its clients General Motors and allied interests.

And while Pathe Newsreel was submitting bids to the Democrats to produce the WPA "propaganda" films and distribute them, John Begg, a former Pathe newsreel contact representative, got the assignment to act as official motion picture contact man for the Republicans in their presidential campaigning against the Rooseveltians. Mr. Begg already has taken up headquarters in that division of the Republican national party in New York's Graybar Building where the collection of electioneering funds is concentrated for the Landon-Knox ticket.

Broadway this week heard reports that Mr. Connolly, holding the position of Pathe's general manager, would act, officially or otherwise, as "official motion picture contact" for the Democratic presidential campaigners. Mr. Connolly, however, dismissed the rumor with a "how the hell can a newsreel man act as a contact for any party?"

Active in Washington

Regardless, Mr. Connolly has continued his service to the motion picture industry in legislative matters at Washington, which he had started while on the Washington staff of the Motion Pictures Producers and Distributors of America, in 1926. Mr. Connolly's most recent effort in this connection was witnessed during the Pettengill hearings.

At this moment, Solomon Ariah Rosenblatt, who will be remembered for his NRA codification of the motion picture and other industries under the Blue Eagle, holds the title of motion picture representative for the Democrats in the campaign.

Officials of the Works Progress Administration in Washington refused to discuss their award to Pathe other than to say that it was felt that Pathe, while not the lowest bidder, was the lowest bidder which could meet the requirements of the specifications. It was indicated that Jam Handy's protest did not require any change in plans because that company was the high bidder anyway, and, accordingly, was out of the running.

"There was no thought on the part of this administration to confine the bidding to any limited number of interested parties, but the proposal was submitted for the express purpose of obtaining the desired result," it was explained by Mr. Kinnear, the WPA's chief clerk.

"It was definitely felt that the proposal was restrictive in no sense of the word," Mr. Kinnear added.

"Five bidders submitted proposals," Mr. Kinnear further explained, "and only one protest was received on the distribution provision. Bidding was therefore open to whoever desired to quote prices on the work required. And as five bidders submitted their proposals it is contended that there were no particulars or phrases of the contract which were proprietary."

The low bid, $3,980 per reel, was submitted by Pictorial Films, New York. The Pathe news bid was next lowest at $4,280. Other bidders were Amphilco, New York, $5,250; Mason Wadsworth, New York, $6,500, with a discount of 2 per cent for payment in 10 days or 1 per cent in 20 days; and Jam Handy Pictures, Detroit, $6,600, with 2 per cent discount for payment in 10 days or 1 per cent in 20 days.

Government Reserved Rights

Text of the forms inviting bids included the wording: "The Government reserves the right to accept or reject any or all bids or any part or parts thereof and to award the contract or any parts thereof to other than the lowest bidder as the interest of the Government may require. All other factors being equal, the award will be made to the bidder who is better able to aid in distribution, both theatrical and non-theatrical. The decision of the contracting officer shall be final."

The protest against the specification which, it was claimed, made the bidding a farce since only one company could qualify, was filed with the Jam Handy Pictures bid.

The Jam Handy company declared, "This is an unfair specification because it automatically eliminates all but one bidder, this bidder being the only newsreel sponsors who also produce commercial films.

"Pictures are not for sale," the Jam Handy representation continued, "and are available only to the one producer who publishes them and, moreover, if said producer uses his newsreel in order to gain a contract for pictures it is an unethical practice because when newsreel space is for sale it ceases to be a newsreel and becomes a commercial advertising medium. The bid is for the manufacture of motion pictures and, as we understand it, under Government conditions it is impossible to put manufacturing and distribution in the same bid."

Only two of the bidders had representatives present at the opening of the bids.

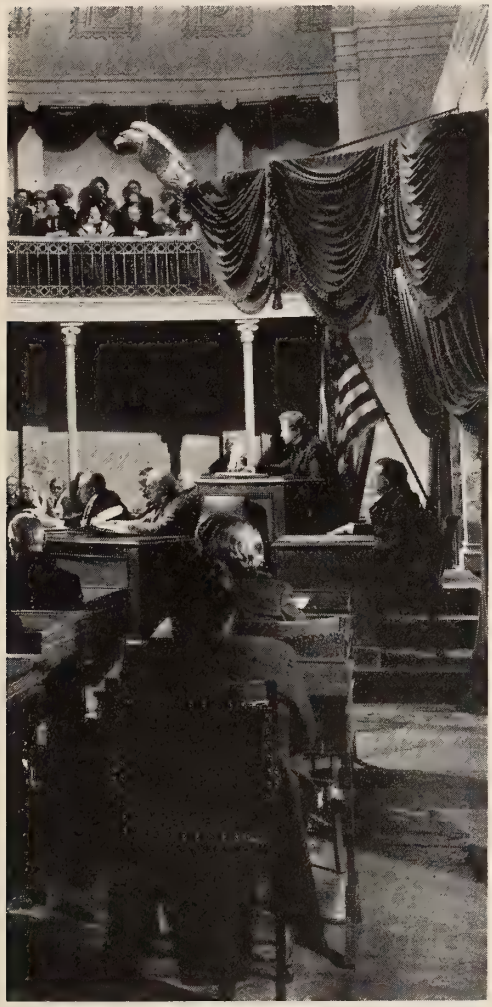
OHIO FEARS RETURN OF 10% ADMISSION TAX

Citing the possibility of reinstatement of the former 10 per cent straight admission tax to make up a part of the $12,000,000 loss in revenue to the state by the proposed exemption of food from the retail sales tax, J. P. Wood, secretary of the Ohio Independent Theatre Owners Association, is urging exhibitor-members to oppose circulation of or the signing of initiative petitions.

If sufficient signatures are obtained in time to the petitions now in circulation, the exemption of food tax and other constitutional amendments will be decided upon by the voters at the November election.

"GORGEOUS HUSSY" TELLS



AGAIN motion picture production turns to the pages of history for material out of which romance and drama may be wrought. "The Gorgeous Hussy," MGM, is the story of Peggy O'Neale, innkeeper's daughter, who rose to a position of political power and influence in the White House during the turbulent regime of "Old Hickory" Andrew Jackson. Basically, following a scheme that has demonstrated its entertainment and commercial worth in many previous pictures, the film is an intricate blending of romantic dramatic fact and fiction.

The story, which is an adaptation of Samuel Hopkins Adams' novel, concerns men and women whose adventures in the romance and drama of life caused their names to be written boldly in the chronicles of their time. Providing ample opportunity for forcefully interesting characterizations, the production, in recreating the spirit and atmosphere of its locale and time, brings to the screen a notable list of players. Joan Crawford will be seen as Peggy O'Neale, the gorgeous hussy, a woman of dashing charm and ambition, adored and hated by many men and envied by women. As the production takes shape, the feeling is spreading that in this role Miss Crawford's personality and artistic talents will blossom into full bloom and that as Peggy O'Neale she will achieve the high spot of her career.

Prestige of her name value is furthered by the quality of the featured players and supporting cast. Robert Taylor, who, through "Magnificent Obsession," "Small Town Girl" and "Private Number" zoomed to popularity, is the romantic hero who woos and wins the glamorous Peg in a whirlwind courtship. Lionel Barrymore plays Andrew Jackson and Melvyn Douglas is one of many men who pursued the volatile heroine only to sacrifice his love and life on the altar of her ambitions. A fourth personality of growing importance is James Stewart, recently seen in "Next Time We Love" and "Small Town Girl." The supporting cast includes Franchot Tone, Louis Calhern, Alison Skipworth, Marjorie Gateson, Beulah Bondi, Sidney Toler, Gene Lockhart, Nydia Westman and others.

Direction of the picture is in the hands of Clarence Brown, who has directed three previous Joan Crawford features, "Possessed," "Sadie McKee" and "Forsaking All Others." He also handled the recent "Ah Wilderness." Dramatic physical action is combined with the story of this alluring woman of the White House. The plot threads its way through the streets of Washington, into the salons of stately old homes, into the Capitol, the Senate and halls of Congress, authentically reproduced as they were during the colorful period of the story. Occasion is provided for mass spectacle, exciting thrill and gripping melodrama, as the story of Peggy and her many loves, cabals, disillusionments and triumphs is welded into a coherent unit.

In the story of a tap-room barmaid, who through her charm and the force of her personality exerted a tremendous influence on the affairs of a stripling nation as a president obeyed her slightest wish and persons of power courted her favor, there is substance for engrossing entertainment. Following the fact-fiction theory and applying it in accordance with understood precepts, "The Gorgeous Hussy" is an intimate glimpse into heretofore unpictured personal and political history. Withal, it is a romantic drama of actual people, particularly of a woman who delayed the Civil War for nearly twenty years and who was so highly regarded by Jackson that he dismissed his cabinet because its members gossiped about her.

Scenes from the picture, reproduced herewith, impart the color of the period. In the small still at lower left Joan Crawford and Melvyn Douglas, with whom she is in love in the picture, say good night by candle light. Above them is shown the slave auction at which the senator from Virginia buys a servant for the vivacious Peggy. A session of the Senate as of 1823, with a debate in progress, is depicted in the photograph divided across both pages. At upper right, in a reproduction of the courtyard of the Franklin Inn at Washington, D. C., old southern melodies are being sung by the Crinoline choir. The smaller picture is of Andrew Jackson, as played by Lionel Barrymore, silencing a crowd of hecklers.

The scene of the Senate chamber, reproduced as of 1823, presents Melvyn Douglas and Sidney Toler in a debate that might have been heard, in slightly different language, during the recent session of Congress. Their topic is none other than the inviolability of that famous and much contested document, the Constitution of the United States. In common with other motion pictures derived from the pages of history, "The Gorgeous Hussy" lays hold of the odd public interest inherent in subjects that portray a bygone period of the nation's or the world's history as, in one way or another, possessing attributes in consonance with the contemporary scene.

PROTEST WPA CONTRACT CLAUSE

which consisted of the usual formal procedure of opening and reading the proposals, Fred Ullman attending for Pathe News and Patrick Murphy, manager of the Washington office, representing the Jam Handy company.

The bids were taken under advisement and consideration with announcement of decision in a week or ten days indicated.

The New York office of Pathe News indicated on Monday that the Jam Handy representations were regarded as "one man's opinion" and no attention would be paid to them. Jack S. Connolly, general manager, declined to be quoted on the subject in any way. Courtland Smith, president, is in Europe.

Executives of other newsreels, none of them bidders for the WPA contract, expressed themselves bluntly with relation to the specification protested by the Jam Handy company.

Newsreels Executives Comment

Said M. D. Clofine, managing editor of Hearst Metrotone News, which was among the companies invited to bid but did not submit a proposal: "I don't consider that any newsreel company that has a standard of ethics and realizes its responsibility to exhibitors can bid on any proposition which compromises the integrity of the screen."

Asked why his company had not responded to the WPA invitation to submit bids, Truman H. Talley, vice-president and general manager of Fox-Movietone News, replied: "The guarantee of distribution of any number of subjects, per month or per year, would be unacceptable to us. We have had occasion to use WPA and other governmental agency subjects and have used them strictly on news value and probably will again when such subject matter is newsworthy."

Charles E. Ford, managing director of Universal Newsreel, omitted from the list of companies invited to bid by what a WPA headquarters spokesman declared "must have been an oversight," said: "I can't imagine any newsreel selling space or any exhibitor buying a newsreel that would do so."

Authority Is Traced

Complete text of the WPA invitation to film companies to bid on the production of an undetermined number of films between date of contract acceptance and June 30, 1937, was published in last week's issue of Motion Picture Herald, together with excerpts from the Presidential executive order creating the WPA and a subsequent letter from President Roosevelt to WPA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins authorizing the use of WPA funds for this purpose.

News that the invitations had been distributed followed upon publication in the lay press of reports that production and distribution of 30 such reels was planned by the WPA. First published, without definite number, in April of this year, these reports were met by anti-New Dealers with charges of "diversion of relief funds to campaign purposes."

As set forth in the specifications furnished invited bidders, "the purpose of each WPA Information Service Motion Picture Record is to present to the citizens of a particular State, or area, information about the operations of WPA in that State, or area." The text also stipulates that "The finished production is to be of such high entertainment standard as to be acceptable for exhibition in any commercial motion picture theatre within the United States."

"Subjects that must be included," according to the specifications, "are the following: (a) Public health. (b) Accomplishment. (c) The emergency relief program, particularly as it is reflected in improvement of educational possibilities and better health for children. (d) Public safety. (e) Farm-to-Market roads."

Listed as "not mandatory but still important projects to be treated" are: "(a) Flood prevention. (b) Public buildings. (c) Parks and playgrounds. (d) Airports and other transportation facilities. (e) Sewing projects. (f) Street and sidewalk improvement. (g) Institutional improvement, such as: Hospitals, infirmaries, school buildings, colleges, libraries, auditoriums, community centers, corrective institutions, armories and arsenals."

Product Is Described

The product to be made under the contract for which bids were invited is described in the invitation as "One negative and one positive on Dupont or Eastman stock or equivalent to be 35 mm. complete with sound print, cans, reels and labels, either RCA Photophone system, Western Electric system or equal, of 600 feet in length (25% variance payment adjusted accordingly) containing subjects of the character set out under topical outline and similar to the picture entitled "Making a Better Indiana" (which may be viewed upon request at the Washington Auditorium, Washington, D. C.), which represents the general plan to be followed in each of these record and information units or reels, but which shall not be regarded as a criterion of quality."

Required of Contractor

The invitation specified that "the contractor shall furnish a qualified script writer, film editor, camera crew, technicians, director, actors and actresses, the use of studios, lighting equipment, a competent production and idea man in Washington during the life of the contract, sound equipment in the field whenever necessary, and branch office facilities of contact points at convenient locations throughout the territory to be served for the adequate support and servicing of the units or reels in production, and in locations where the contractor has facilities for storage and inspection for film he shall furnish such services without additional cost to the Works Progress Administration."

The invitations were dated July 17th at Washington, D. C., and were returnable at 11 a. m. July 24th. Forms were furnished in quadruplicate. It was stipulated that "as the quantity of films is not known, one film will be used as a basis for the period."

Unions Planning Roadshow Revival For Next Season

Revival of the roadshow during the coming season may result from plans now being discussed by theatrical union leaders. Frank Gillmore, president of Actors' Equity Association, has held several conferences with executives of the League of New York Theatres and the Dramatists Guild of the Authors League, with this possibility in view.

No definite program has been laid down as a result of the discussions but progress in that direction is reported.

A recent editorial in the Equity magazine said:

"This is the opportunity of half a century for the theatre to make a comeback such as has never before been witnessed. But it can be made only if differences can be buried; if producers, playwrights and others can plan and move together.

"Equity believes it can be done. It believes the stakes are great enough to justify the attempt. And in going to the other organizations it is happy in the belief that its own membership is more nearly harmonious and united than it has been in several years."

In the past 10 years Equity has proposed three plans for a revival of the theatre, but on each occasion, according to the editorial, "personal opposition or the reluctance of one group or another to forego some possible advantage, wrecked those plans."

Writers' Guild Is Disbanded on Coast

The Screen Writers' Guild has been dissolved. According to an announcement by the executive board of the organization the dissolution of the guild, a California corporation, was a move taken in accordance with the by-laws of the guild itself and the laws of the State of California and upon receipt of written assent to the dissolution by a majority of the active members of the organization.

The exit of the guild comes as an aftermath of its failure to negotiate a pact with the producers and the subsequent split-up of factions within the organization.

20th Century-Fox Will Move To Westwood, Sept. 1st

The moving of the production units from the Sunset Boulevard studio to Fox Movietone City will begin September 1. It is expected that the transfer of the properties will be completed by September 10. The Fox Movietone City plant is being expanded at a cost of $2,500,000, that amount to be expended to construct additional stages next year.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS VISITING U.S. FIND TRADE PROBLEMS IDENTICAL

Group of 37 Theatre Owners Entertained in New York; Leave for Hollywood and Study of Studio Methods

British and American leaders in the industry met this week to pool ideas and demonstrate anew that fundamentally their problems are identical, when executives in New York were hosts to a party of English exhibitors, accompanied by their wives and friends, on a goodwill tour of America.

The group of 37 arrived on the Queen Mary on Monday and were to leave for Hollywood and the studios on Thursday after a three-day round of sight-seeing and cocktail parties during which most the group caught their first glimpses of New York life and their initial first-hand impressions of American exhibitors, their theatres and their methods.

The American scale of doing things and particularly the impressive scope of the film industry and the splendor, size and mechanical perfection of our theatres as exemplified in the Radio City Music Hall which they visited on Tuesday, seemed to leave the most vivid impression with the visitors, their superlatives being interluded with only a few guarded restrictions expressed by "Don't you think it a bit too, well, garish?"

Concerning problems which afflict the industry in England, as here, the exhibitors seemed not at all worried. They emphasized that many as were the difficulties, the solution was to be had. And while in the main, the theatreman has the same difficulties to overcome as his American cousin, there are also conditions peculiar to their country alone which present no parallels in the American market.

Exploitation Differences

In this connection, A. H. Reed, of the Union Cinema Company, Ltd., and Associated Companies of London, pointed out that the limited population of England, and hence the potential film market, prevent the exploitation of pictures on second or subsequent-runs. When a feature has been shown in the larger houses in key cities, he said, there is practically no sale for it in smaller houses, most of the patrons having seen the film. This, he pointed out, forces the smaller houses to exhibit inferior pictures.

Mr. Reed's company owns or controls about 100 theatres in London and southern England.

Mr. Reed saw in the Gaumont British deal with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and 20th Century-Fox only indirect benefits for the independent English theatre owner. Others of the party agreed. Gaumont British features are not generally released to independents, he pointed out, being shown chiefly in the company's own circuit. Increased production promised under the terms of the deal, however, may alter this situation, he said. In addition, "quickies" made by American producers in England for quota consumption will no longer be sold to exhibitors and the general quality of the product eventually will be raised, he believed.

Pictures of the cocktail party given the British exhibitors in the studio of the Music Hall, of the luncheon in the Waldorf Astoria and of the group on shipboard on their arrival appear on the following pages.

A. Howie, of the Associated British Cinema Company, second only to the GB theatre circuit in England, praised the American product highly but added the qualifying statement that "after all, only the best of your pictures are submitted for export." He commended the reviews published in Motion Picture Herald for their informative content and said that they are invaluable to him in determining the quality of the pictures he is to receive and in gauging their possibilities.

Arthur Taylor, secretary of the London branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, sponsor of the visit, was in charge of the party. Business in England has improved considerably in the last few months, he said. On the pier after the liner docked Mr. Taylor expressed as his greatest desire a longing for a "good Jewish meal" while in New York. Up until Wednesday morning he had not obtained it.

The group was given a welcoming cocktail party in the British Club of the Hotel Gotham on Monday afternoon. On Tuesday, after a sightseeing tour during the morning they were luncheon guests of the Photophone Division of RCA Manufacturing Company in the Janssen Room of the Waldorf Astor hotel, where they stayed while in New York. Host for the company was Van Moss Philip. In a brief talk he welcomed the British visitors and promised them an interesting tour of the Hollywood studios. Mr. Taylor thanked him for the tourists.

Guests of Van Schmus and Quigley

Immediately after the luncheon the visitors were taken to the Music Hall where they were greeted by W. G. Van Schmus, managing director, and Martin Quigley of Quigley Publications. Attendants of the theatre then guided them through the maze of corridors, rehearsal rooms, projection rooms, and work rooms backstage. After the inspection tour they watched the stage show presentation from the first mezzanine.

The group then gathered in the studio room above the executive offices of the theatre for a cocktail party as the guests of Mr. Quigley and Mr. Van Schmus. During the party they were welcomed by executives and representatives of the New York offices of the major producing and distributing companies.

Compare Theatre Conditions in England with Parallel Situation Here; Optimism Is Keynote of Spokesmen Expressions of opinion at the party varied between admiration for the vastness and completeness of the theatre which they had just inspected and praise for the reception they had been accorded since their landing. Most of the group were anxious to visit the studios in Hollywood and expressed keen anticipation of the remainder of their tour. They were unanimous in saying that the tour of the Music Hall and the subsequent reception in the studio was the high spot of their stay in New York.

SPAIN CONFISCATES ALL ASSETS OF AMERICAN FILM DISTRIBUTERS

Columbia Managers Hide in Theatre for Two Days Before Being Evacuated; Others Leave Country

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
in Barcelona

The Spanish government has given distributors to understand that all of their assets are now technically the property of the Spanish Anonymous Society. The only exception to this confiscation is in the cases of unpaid film stocks which will remain the property of the subsidiaries of the American and European home organizations.

For the protection of these stocks the consul at Barcelona has provided a display certificate countersigned by the "Official Generalidad," which says in effect:

"American interests are represented by film stock in this establishment and must be respected."

The distributors in Spain were notified Wednesday to be prepared for an inspection of their offices and plants.

International News Service reported that Red Labor groups have invaded all factories and taken control.

American Film Men Narrowly Escape Death

J. H. Seidelman, Columbia foreign manager, and J. Friedman, London manager for the company, narrowly escaped with their lives from Barcelona during the most severe fighting, when Barcelona's streets were red with blood. Both were in Spain attending a sales convention and were virtually trapped in the beseiged city for five days before they were allowed to leave with the French nationals and embark on a French steamship for Marseilles where they entrained for Paris. They had hidden in a theatre in the suburbs for two days.

On Wednesday the only American distributors' managers on hand at Barcelona were William B. Morgan, of United Artists; R. Huet, of Warner Brothers, and M. Aguilar of Universal. Sydney Horen of Twentieth Century-Fox succeeded in negotiating Marseilles, and others left for other European capitals.

Reports coming by cable from Barcelona on Wednesday indicated that employees were taking over the Arenas circuit of theatres in Barcelona's suburbs, reopening, perhaps, on Wednesday.

The outcome of the recent settlement of the general strike, which involved theatres and other lines, returned to the speculative stage, following the opening of the civil war. The regional government in Barcelona had decreed a 40-hour week and 15 per cent wage increases as part of the settlement, but when hostilities started the Solidaridad Obrera, leading Syndicalist newspaper, counseled that no attempt be made to effect any drastic labor reforms until the Fascist movement finally is crushed.

Harry C. Plummer, MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S correspondent in Barcelona, advised Monday that Theatres in Madrid were reported to have reopened, with the national regional government rapidly reestablishing order. Foreigners were receiving the utmost consideration during the rebellion. Cameramen were filming the events under the direction of the Bureau of Propaganda of the Government. The Coliseum and Femina Theatres in Barcelona had been commandeered as headuarters for the enlistment of the anti-Fascist militia.

The American Consulate there had been broadcasting for information concerning the whereabouts of Bernard J. Gottlieb, managing director for Columbia in Spain, his wife and daughter. It was reported that the three had reached Barcelona from Sitges, nearby resort, and sailed on a British warship, for Europe.

The Spanish managers of at least two other American distributing companies in Spain, as well as the general foreign and European managers of another, were they to pool their experiences, might turn out a lively scenario, based on their efforts to conduct business with a minimum of danger in a country in the throes of an armed rebellion.

That scenario would tell of being marooned in the Balaeric Islands, off the east coast of Spain, of the discomforts of sleeping in a theatre for two nights, and of a hasty flight to a much safer port than is Barcelona today.

Moves to Consulate

Out of cables from Correspondent Plummer in Barcelona were detailed merely the superficial status of the industry in Spain, and sundry facts relating to the difficulties resulting from the sudden military uprising which, from its source in Spanish Morocco, has torn the country wide open.

At the close of Mr. Plummer's latest cable was the advice that his temporary address is "Consulado Americano," which means, in English, that he has left his home and headquarters at the Ritz Hotel to find shelter and a typewriter at the American Consulate.

The industry in Barcelona for a while was completely paralyzed, Mr. Plummer reported, with business communication with the interior of Spain (Barcelona is situated on the northeast coast) entirely cut off. No specific information was available from the interior, but every indication pointed to a similar situation throughout the country.

FEDERALS TAKE OVER BARCELONA THEATRES

The Spanish Government on Tuesday took over all Barcelona theatres, together with the Ford and General Motors plants.

Control of them was placed in the hands of the National Confederation of Labor.

MGM and Paramount Managers Marooned at Seashore Resorts; Employees Taking Over Barcelona Theatre Circuit

M-G-M in Spain, was marooned at Palma de Mallorca, resort in the Balaeric Islands. M. J. Messeri, Paramount managing director in Spain and Portugal, was in a like position at Sitges, a seashore resort close to Barcelona. But there was no indication that they were enjoying the bathing.

Fox Movietone, Mr. Plummer cabled, was hard at it in Barcelona, shooting with cameras at the shooting with guns, the results eventually to reach the screens of this country, if all goes well.

Directly involved in the business significance of the struggle are some 3,450 motion picture theatres which until last week were operating peacefully and for the most part profitably.

Frank C. Walker Heads National Democratic Fund

Frank C. Walker, operating head of the Comerford Theatre circuit and close friend of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, this week was named chairman of the finance committee of the Democratic campaign. Mr. Walker is a former treasurer of the Democratic National Committee and was later executive director of the National Emergency Council.

"I don't know how much we will try to raise as yet," said Mr. Walker when his appointment was announced in New York by National Chairman James A. Farley. "At any rate, we are not in debt as we were in 1932," continued Mr. Walker, "and it will take me a few days before I can announce just what we hope to do in the way of money and how we hope to get it."

Mexican Industry Digs Out of Strike

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

Mexico's theatres and exchanges have returned to normal business activity following the abrupt settlement Saturday of the 10-day strike of the employees of the country's largest electrical company. The walkout had deprived theatres of power in seven Mexican states, causing them to close and resulting in heavy losses. Film studios were closed as well.

NEW YORK LAW REQUIRING MATRONS AND MINORS' SECTION IS IN EEFECT

Licensing of 3,000 Women Supervisors Starts Under Regulations to Govern Theatre Attendance of Children Under 16

New regulations governing the attendance of children at motion picture theatres in New York City went into effect this week with the issuance of the first licenses to exhibitors under which film fans younger than 16 may be admitted to theatres without adult escorts provided the exhibitor has set aside a part of the house for their use and provided also, a specially licensed matron is in attendance.

Applications for the exhibitor licenses were ready on Wednesday after weeks of conferences between executives of the large circuits in the city and License Commissioner Paul Moss. In their final form they have been approved by all parties concerned and are considered sufficiently flexible to insure practicable application of the law under all conditions.

The chief innovation under the rules is the fact that the theatre owners must set apart a separate section for children. This section may vary in size from time to time, but it can be only on the orchestra floor, may not be "too near" the screen and a seat must be available for every child patron.

In charge of the section will be a matron whose license and picture must be displayed in the box office for inspection by enforcement officers. More than 300 women had applied for licenses before the theatre applications were available and it is expected that a corps of 3,000 will be ready to take over the job within a few weeks.

Matrons to Wear Badges

The Health Department, which has jurisdiction over the new attendants, requires that applicants be healthy, strong, intelligent and must know how to take care of children. They will wear a distinctive badge to support the stern air of authority with which they will be expected to cow the more restive of their young charges. Most of the applicants so far have been of a "superior type," according to Dr. William F. Best, Health Department official who has interviewed them. Their duties will be simply to oversee the youthful patrons and keep order in the special section. They must be in attendance as long as the theatre is open for children, which, according to the law, is not later than six o'clock in the evening and after school hours in the winter and from opening time until 7 P. M. in the summer.

Exhibitors and circuit managers refused to predict what effect the operation of the plan would have on their grosses, but they believed it would be a great improvement over the old law under which children under 16 were barred unless accompanied by an adult. In recent years the law had been widely abused and a sudden drive for its strict enforcement last year, ordered by Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia to focus attention on the obsolete statute, was instrumental in enactment of the Joseph-Swartz bill by the State Legislature and the embodiment of that bill's provisions in the local law under which the present licenses are being issued.

Managers who admitted the children in spite of the old law found their troubles just beginning. Many children came at opening time and stayed until far into the evening.

In one house on Eighth Avenue which features long programs and westerns the ushers found it necessary to patrol the aisles with a flashlight and a hook, the hook being used for snaking out child patrons who scrambled about under the seats when their mothers appeared and asked that their offspring be paged.

With the matrons in charge of a special section, theatre men hope that much of this will be eliminated and without recourse to the idea of a Rhode Island exhibitor who found it necessary to advertise "free ice-cream cones to every child who leaves the theatre before six o'clock," in order to clear the auditorium for the evening crowds.

Estimates of Costs Vary

Executives of the major circuits said early this week that licenses will be obtained for all their theatres with the exception of large houses in the downtown and Times Square districts. Every neighborhood house in the city is expected to apply for the permits.

Estimates of the cost to the exhibitors vary. The annual fee for the license is $10, but the salaries to be paid the matrons are expected to show variation in different houses. It is believed that the average will be about $25 a week. Managers have not yet worked out plans for the setting apart of the special sections required, but the rule will require no more than the roping off of a group of seats. The rows designated for children, however, must be clearly marked with signs.

Commissioner Moss, in announcing that his department is prepared to receive applications, declared that every effort was made in drawing up the forms to make them agreeable to all concerned and that the regulations were designed to work no hardship on the exhibitor. He emphasized that the law, now that it is in operation, will be strictly enforced.

Federal Court Dismisses "Riptide" Plagiarism Suit

The plagiarism suit brought by Anvel E. Athenson, playwright, against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Irving Thalberg, Norma Shearer, Edmund Goulding, Jules E. Brulatour and George De Feo in connection with "Riptide" has been dismissed in federal court. The judge held that the theme "the woman tempted" cannot be copyrighted and that it dates back to the time of Eve.

Herman Frommel Dead

Herman Frommel, 67, head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer music department in Hollywood, is dead following a heart attack.

Nichols Wants Less Dialogue

Some day a producer will make a picture in which dialogue will be reduced to an almost irreducable minimum, and thereby restore to the screen's least common denominator of patronage that emotional thrill which was part of the original basic appeal of the silent screen.

That is the opinion of Dudley Nichols, screen writer for Radio, vacationing at his farm in New Milford, Conn. Having completed the script for the screen version of the Sean O'Casey play, "The Plough and the Stars" recently, he is keeping his hand in on "The Robber Barons." It will tell the story of the high-handed financial and corporate tangle which revolved about the railroads of an earlier day.

In order to complete that screenplay, Mr. Nichols has postponed his scheduled trip abroad from Aug. 8 to Aug. 19, when he will sail on the Aquitania with Mrs. Nichols. That trip will take him to the Dramatic Festival in Moscow, with return stops on the Continent and in Great Britain. Mr. Nichols is of the opinion that Moscow and New York are the two most active theatrical centers in the world.

That picture with almost no dialogue, the writer is convinced, will not be easy and it will be in the nature of a gamble on the part of the producer. But he feels that the effort will be worth the gamble.

"To write good dialogue is hard, make no mistake about that," he said, "but it is still harder to write a situation or a piece of business which will convey an entire idea without the use of words."

The current trend toward biographical and historical subject matter in films Mr. Nichols attributes to a large extent to the activities of the censors.

Hays, Hess To Talk Rockefeller Pictures

Gabriel Hess, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., New York office, has arrived in Hollywood for meetings with Will H. Hays to devise a system for allocation of the $50,000 appropriation for the "Secrets of Success" film series sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation. The films are to be exhibited in schools and universities and will deal with the subject of character training.

Showings may be made at 10 a. m. August 4th at the Bankruptcy Court Room, Post Office Building, Jersey City, N. J.

HOUSE OF COMMONS QUESTIONS EFFECTS OF SCHENCK-GB DEAL

Members of Parliament Seek Expression of Policy from Board of Trade President; Told to Await Information

While boat, plane and train bore principals swiftly and in divers directions from the scene of its announcement last week, the tri-party transaction linking Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Twentieth Century-Fox and Gaumont-British in an international production-distribution alliance moved steadily along charted channels toward a variously conjectured conclusion.

Milestones:

In the British House of Commons a spokesman for the Board of Trade declined to answer questions pertaining to "American steps to obtain control of the film industry in the United Kingdom" pending receipt of details.

Isidore Ostrer returned to England on the Ile de France July 23rd. A fellow passenger was A. C. Blumenthal, reported active in early negotiations.

Joseph M. Schenck flew to Hollywood the same day.

In New York it was announced that the existing GB distribution organization would be maintained intact through this season, although consolidation of MGM and Twentieth Century-Fox sales forces in England would take place within five weeks.

Official statements dispelled the impression that the transaction would affect distribution machinery on a "world wide" scale.

Questioning of the Board of Trade commenced in the House of Commons on Monday of this week when Brigadier General Spears interrogated the president as to whether he had received information regarding the acquisition of control of Gaumont-British by American interests and whether he was satisfied that information of a holding company in which 65 per cent of the shares are held by British interests and 35 per cent by American would insure that control would remain in British hands.

Captain Cruickshanks, Minister of Mines, spokesman for the president, replied that full details of the agreement were not yet available and that the Government was not in a position to affirm or deny that British control had been maintained.

His interrogator then asked, "Will every endeavor be made to keep this important means of propaganda under British control?" He received no reply.

Questioning Goes On

Member Harry Day asked, "Will the Minister consider asking the president of the Board of Trade to refer these matters to the committee that is at the present time considering the amendment of the Films Act?"

Vice-Admiral Taylor asked if it were not a fact that "American interests are taking definite steps to obtain control of the film industry in the United Kingdom."

Member Harry Hall inquired whether the president of the Board of Trade was satisfied that the American-British merger would not involve breaches of the Films Act.

To all questions Spokesman Cruickshanks reiterated that he could express no opinion pending receipt of complete details of the transaction.

Ostrer Returns to England

Accompanying President Ostrer of Gaumont-British to his boat, Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of Twentieth Century-Fox, and Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, joined him in announcing that consolidation of the three companies' sales forces in England would be consummated as soon as possible, definitely estimating that the operation would be completed within five weeks.

It was at the same time and place that Joseph Schenck said, in reply to a question, that the GB sales force in the United States will be continued for the present season.

Mr. Ostrer declined to quote figures but said that the agreement worked out "will mean enormous savings for Gaumont-British," adding, "The deal also is of considerable value to both MGM and Twentieth Century-Fox." He said "the deal is very simple, and I don't see why there is any speculation about it."

Mr. Schenck likewise declined to quote figures as to the amount of stock the American companies would receive in the new holding company for GB, saying it was impossible to do so while the deal was in what he defined as "embryonic stages."

Blumenthal Also Sails

Arriving at the dock separately, and speaking only briefly with the Messrs. Schenck as the boat was about to leave, A. C. Blumenthal was quoted as follows by the ship reporter of a morning newspaper: "I'm going over to London to complete the picture deal I just engineered. Metro and Fox have bought a controlling interest in British Gaumont. I'm just going to put the finishing touches to the agreement." At the press conference announcing the transaction, Joseph Schenck had replied to a question regarding Mr. Blumenthal's part in the negotiations that he had "injected himself" into the proceedings and "if he did anything worthy of compensation he will get it."

Later in the day Mr. Schenck boarded a plane for Hollywood, arriving July 24th, with indicated intention of returning early in August and sailing for London to be present at the working out of the details attendant upon formation of the holding company which will supplant Metropolis and Bradford Trust. Richard Dwight, of Twentieth Century-Fox counsel, had sailed on the Europa July 22nd. J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of MGM, has been in London some time.

Terms of Deal Outlined

Terms of the transaction as outlined by the Messrs. Joseph M. and Nicholas M. Schenck and Isidore Ostrer to the press on July 20th in New York specify that MGM shall acquire by purchase from Twentieth Century-Fox one-half of that company's 49 per cent interest in the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, the holding company now owning 57 per cent of Gaumont-British. By a subsequent operation, a new holding company is to be formed, supplanting the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, with the two American companies and the Ostrer interests equally represented in ownership of the 49 per cent interest in Gaumont-British held by the new company, and with the remaining 51 per cent held by the public. Reports gained currency, following the official statement, that the Ostrer interests ultimately will withdraw, leaving the American companies owning about 35 per cent and the public holding 65 per cent.

Announcement of the transaction, which is yet to be approved by the directors of the companies involved, was promptly interpreted in the trade as marking formation of an international alliance which would function on a worldwide scale. To offset this interpretation, the New York office on Thursday of last week issued a statement to the effect that the seven-year distribution arrangement recently entered into by G-B and Empire Films, in Canada, will not be affected. The company says: "The statement is intended to correct the impression that the Gaumont-British, Twentieth Century-Fox and MGM deal would encompass the worldwide distribution setup of Gaumont British."

To Tour Exchange Centers

This was followed closely by announcement that Arthur Lee, vice-president of G-B, and George Weeks, general manager of sales, will make personal tours of the company's branches in this country. Mr. Weeks left New York on Friday of last week for Chicago and Kansas City. Mr. Lee was to leave this week to make a circuit of the eastern branches.

Mr. Weeks told the press in Chicago on Tuesday, "There will be no changes in the GB sales personnel of any kind, despite reports to the contrary."

FLORADORA BEAUTY QUITS THEATRE JOB

Mrs. Mabel Miller has sold her last ticket at the Fox theatre in Watsonville, Cal., having resigned her position there after 15 years. Mrs. Miller, mother of Arthur Miller, long associated with Fox-West Coast, was a member of the "Ladies Ensemble" of the original New York "Floradora" production.

U. S. AND COURTS EYE UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES

Department of Justice Asks Data for Action on Complaints of Small Exhibitors; Studios Answer Questionnaire

Industry attention centers again this week on the persistent fight of minority interests to obtain what they deem to be necessary in the matter of fair trade practices in their relations with the major distributors and large competitive circuits.

Emerging from a quietness that has prevailed for weeks, since the United States Government and Fanchon & Marco won a victory over Warner Bros. in the St. Louis anti-trust conflict, the motion picture's troublesome problem of applying proper trade practices bobbed up again this week, first in the Department of Justice where the government launched new efforts to contact aggrieved exhibitors in the field, and, secondly, in federal court in Kansas City, where the majors are being sued on anti-trust allegations and trial commenced last Friday.

Nor does it seem likely that the general trade practice situation will be relieved for at least another three weeks by the MPTOA's ten-point program, for it became known that the plan will rest for more than a fortnight—and even then its final disposition is speculative, depending upon distributor action.

Questionnaires sent by the Department of Justice from Washington to distributors and exhibitors throughout the country are designed to develop information as to availability of product to round out the information gathered as a result of a similar questionnaire previously sent to the Hollywood producers, it was learned this week.

Department Uncommunicative

Officials of the Department continue to maintain an uncommunicative attitude, but it was learned from trustworthy sources that they are seeking to round up data to use as a guide in deciding the action to be taken with the large number of complaints which have been received in recent months from small exhibitors and against the large distributors and large circuits.

The Hollywood questionnaire was sent out some time ago and returns are all in at Washington. To corroborate or rebut the showing that there is adequate product which is said to have been made by the Hollywood producers, the Department is questioning exchanges and exhibitors in the field as to their views. The questionnaire now being distributed is understood to be very similar to that sent the producers, but asking for information also as to contracts.

Most Complaints from West

It is declared that while a large number of complaints have been received by the Department from local organizations and independent exhibitors, they are nearly all from west of the Alleghanies and few or no protests have come in from the Atlantic seaboard. Also, it is said, there are no complaints from the west coast.

With a serious loss of face narrowly averted a few months ago by compromising the St. Louis case after moving it to New York, the Department is following a very cautious attitude with respect to film complaints, and apparently is determined to undertake no further prosecutions unless it is practically absolutely certain of a favorable court decision.

The close-mouthed attitude taken by Justice Department officials, who refuse absolutely to discuss their film investigation activities, is in keeping with the policy of the Department to make no revelations while continuing investigations which might lead to prosecutions.

It is not anticipated that the department will complete its study of product availability for some months.

Rolsky Action Underway

The anti-trust suit of Emanuel Rolsky, independent owner, vs. Fox Midwest Theatres and major distributors got under way in federal district court at Kansas City last Friday afternoon, and on Saturday morning Judge Merrill E. Otis recessed until Wednesday.

Judge Otis denied the application of Leland Hazard, attorney for C. A. Schultz and seven other subsequent-run exhibitors, to intervene. Mr. Hazard contended that intervening exhibitors, neither plaintiffs nor defendants in the case, would be affected by a decision which might change the present clearance setup, inasmuch as their theatres have purchased product under its terms. Otis refused the application once before, at the time he denied plaintiffs' application for a temporary injunction in March, this year. However, Judge Otis allowed Hazard to continue as an amicus curiae.

Opening statements by W. G. Boatright for the plaintiffs, who are seeking a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from continuing the alleged conspiracy of Fox Midwest's zoning and clearance plan; by E. C. Raftery, New York, for distributors, and Sam Sawyer for Fox Midwest, summarized the charges of conspiracy and violation of the anti-trust laws and the denials contained in answers filed by defendants since the preliminary hearing.

THEATRE BILLS 'TIME' AS UNCENSORED

A formal protest to the State Department against a San Dominican sequence in the latest issue of "The March of Time" and deletion of the sequence during the showing at the Music Hall in New York prompted the Embassy theatre in Times Square to bill the show on the marquee this week as "March of Time, Uncensored." At the Music Hall the sequence reviewing the political situation in the Republic of San Domingo and the administration of President Trujillo Molina was eliminated after a protest from the Dominican Minister, Andres Pastoriza, who later received a formal reply from Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

Rolsky's Anti-Trust Suit Against Fox Midwest and Distributors Starts; Action on MPTOA Program Is Delayed

If the court allows the sort of zoning and protection plan Fox Midwest is using to continue, independent exhibitors here and elsewhere cannot compete with affiliated theatres, Mr. Boatright said.

Up to the 1935-36 season exhibitors have been able to contract for pictures openly, but last fall, they said, they found the market closed by agreement between Fox Midwest and major distributors. Theretofore operators of equally priced houses could play the same picture the same day if they wished, preserving active competition between such theatres. Last fall distributors and the Fox circuit decided that when a picture reached 20-cent availability, Fox theatres should have the first opportunity to play them. They zoned the city, each zone containing at least one Fox house, which showed pictures before other theatres in the zone. This agreement was reduced to writing. Its purpose was to stop day and date exhibition, they said; actually it stopped competition. Fox wanted prior runs in order to habituate the public to the knowledge pictures would be shown at a Fox theatre first. A trust thereby was created, Mr. Boatright declared.

When it became rumored on Film Row that something was in the air, independents went to distributors, who said they weren't ready to sell city exhibitors as yet. After Fox had bought what they wanted, independents were offered what was left.

It does not matter, argued Mr. Boatright, that Fox did not take first-run in every zone: the purpose was to give Fox the advantage and independents the disadvantage.

There is no question that interstate commerce is involved, he added, because pictures are made in and shipped from California; contracts finally are settled in New York.

Sees Threat to Distribution

"I agree with Mr. Boatright that this case is very important," Mr. Raftery said in opening his statement. "For if his contention is upheld, he is going to destroy the entire economic side of motion pictures—distribution."

As high as 82 per cent of all revenue paid for a picture in Kansas City has come from its first-run, Mr. Raftery continued, which pays that much for the right to show the picture exclusively—with protection.

That principle was the one that made it possible for the development of the motion picture industry from the nickelodian to its present-day position, he went on. And the principle is the same down to the 15-cent run.

Several years ago the ITO, by agreement or what not, went out and convinced everyone they should play pictures day and date. They forced the day and date issue into this territory, and took from the public choice of pictures. In every other city in the country the system of prior runs obtains.

When Elmer C. Rhoden, head of Fox Midwest, went to distributors individually, not collectively, distributors had their first opportunity in years to break away from day and date booking.

Exhibitors, in August, 1935, injected the only concerted action when they came along with a uniform zoning and clearance plan, in which they literally demanded day and date booking, Mr. Raftery said in countering charges of plaintiffs.

Mr. Rhoden wanted to buy clearance, and was willing to pay for it. But he declined longer to pay for it and then have to play day and date with exhibitors who paid less for the same pictures. Starting in April with Twentieth Century - Fox, he negotiated with various distributors until November. That was not concerted effort, Mr. Raftery asserted. Here was one man, one company, dealing with a number of distributors at different times over a long period.

The plaintiffs, with their day and date booking, destroyed the element of competition second in importance only to the licensing of the copyrighted article, clearance—the right to play exclusively, and to bid for that right in open market, concluded Mr. Raftery.

Fox Midwest Status Described

Fox Midwest is an exhibitor only, Mr. Sawyer told the court. It is connected with no distributor of film, and has no relation with producers except Twentieth Century-Fox, which owns 42 per cent of National Theatres, which owns Fox Midcentral, which owns Fox Midwest.

The circuit bears the same relation to other producers as any exhibitor, he said; other producers are competitive to Twentieth Century-Fox, making self-evident the lack of a conspiracy motive.

Cites Prior Run Policies

Mr. Sawyer explained that the purchase and exhibition of pictures by prior runs is a general custom. Licensing of film by the day and date method in Kansas City has been exceptional, and it eliminated competition, by preventing bidding for pictures. Day and date booking, instead of stimulating, depresses competition, because all theatres show the same picture at the same time.

Fox Midwest entered no agreement or general understanding with distributors, and it has no system, he said. The circuit simply stated that it desired to buy certain runs and clearances. It started and concluded contracts at different times. It bought the same run from several producers because that was the run it needed to maintain a uniform policy in that theatre.

Independents Offered Prior Run

Distributors in several cases offered independents a run prior to that of Fox, explained Mr. Sawyer. Last fall Rhoden offered—and he still is willing—to cancel all contracts and re-negotiate so as to give exhibitors an equal chance to buy.

Submitted in evidence by Mr. Boatright was a map of the city showing zones and theatres; the letter dated April 30, 1935, from Rhoden to Ward Scott of Twentieth Century-Fox outlining terms on which Fox Midwest wanted to buy 1935-36 product; a transcript of Rhoden's testimony at the preliminary hearing, and 1935-36 contracts of plaintiffs with distributors. Defense attorneys objected to admitting as evidence the consent decree in the case of Youngclaus vs. Omaha Film Board of Trade, and the consent decree and petition in the case of United States vs. West Coast Theatres on grounds the facts in those cases and in this one differed. But Judge Otis overruled.

E. S. Young, operator of the Central and Roanoke and a plaintiff, placed on the stand by Mr. Boatright, revealed that at the Roanoke, where he has three changes a week, he buys approximately 275 pictures a year, and at the Central, where he has four changes, 350 to 400. He buys approximately 10 per cent of his pictures from independent producers.

In the Roanoke Mr. Young has approximately $60,000 invested; in the Central, where he doesn't own the building, $20,000. Mr. Young objected to giving a comparison of gross receipts because so many exhibitors give away dishes and premiums, which makes their grosses high, but their net low. Net income at the Central, January 1 to July 4, 1936, was $49.18; January 1 to July 6, 1935, $2,901.91. There was no change in the method of operation, wages, rent, light. Young used "stimulants" both years with the cost practically the same.

"How do you account for the decreased earnings?" Mr. Boatright asked. The defense objected.

"The only different factor is the one that requires me to exhibit pictures so late in back of other theatres that they reap profits and leave me none," Mr. Young testified.

"Is not there one factor that can't be determined; namely, the ability of the public to attend the theatre?" the court asked, but the question remained unanswered.

Earnings Traced

The Roanoke, January 1 to July 4, 1936, earned a net of $707.80; January 1 to July 6, 1935, it suffered a $1,396 loss. Young explained the loss as due to the fact he had only recently bought the theatre in a condition run down both physically and in attendance. It had been losing $150 a week when he bought it, and he knew it would continue to lose money for some time.

The Central operated under a mixed admission policy, as Mr. Young explained it, to keep certain patrons who can't afford to pay 15 cents coming into his show; when business improves he will have retained their patronage.

Companies usually announce their films for sale in June and July. In 1935, Mr. Young testified, he asked William Warner, branch manager for Warner Brothers, when his company was going to offer film. Mr. Warner didn't know; the Fox Midwest deal was not completed in New York. Mr. Young said it was Mr. Warner's comment that the Fox circuit with its hundreds of theatres probably would get about what it wanted.

Managers Called

As a member of a committee of independents, Mr. Young called on G. C. Diamond of Warner Brothers; W. W. Benjamin, exchange manager for Universal; T. R. Thompson, RKO branch manager; Joe Manfre, manager for Paramount; Harry Taylor, Columbia manager; W. E. Truog, United Artists manager, and Frank Hensler, manager for MGM.

The committee attempted to induce Mr. Taylor to sell independents pictures for day and date booking at theatres with like admission, it was testified, but Taylor said he didn't know how his company was going to sell pictures the coming season, and indicated Fox Midwest had not yet made its purchases.

Mr. Hensler told the committee that he didn't know how MGM would sell in the city, but that he did know they would be sold in runs.

Mr. Manfre said he didn't know how pictures were going to be sold in Kansas City because he didn't know how they were going to be released to Fox houses.

In October-November distributor salesmen indicated to Mr. Young they were ready to do business with him. (Mr. Young's testimony in this connection was not received against Fox Midwest.) He called on various companies and made contracts with Paramount, Columbia, Universal, Warner Brothers, MGM, United Artists and RKO.

Objections of attorneys for the defense to allowing Mr. Young to relate conversations with salesmen with whom he dealt on contracts were sustained.

"We offer to show by the witness that the salesmen in substance said 'this is the only way we can sell you,'" said Mr. Boatright.

Mr. Raftery called for Mr. Young's gross receipts. Central, same dates, 1936, $13,236.55; 1935, $9,406. Roanoke, same dates, 1936, $11,593; 1935, $11,896. Young said the only wages he took were $60 a week from the income at the Central.

"Does zone mean to you a competitive area?" Raftery asked.

"It doesn't to me," Young replied. "In this case zones means theatres competitive to Fox theatres and not to mine."

Zoning Schedule Presented

The committee called on managers and presented a zoning schedule, Mr. Raftery recalled. He cited a memorandum dictated at that time in the office of Universal by Young saying that the schedule contained the independents' idea of clearance, that under it they had operated successfully prior to the NRA. Mr. Raftery pointed out that the only difference was in penalties for premiums and giveaways. Independents delivered one or more requests for this schedule to every branch manager. Plaintiffs signed the clearance proposal.

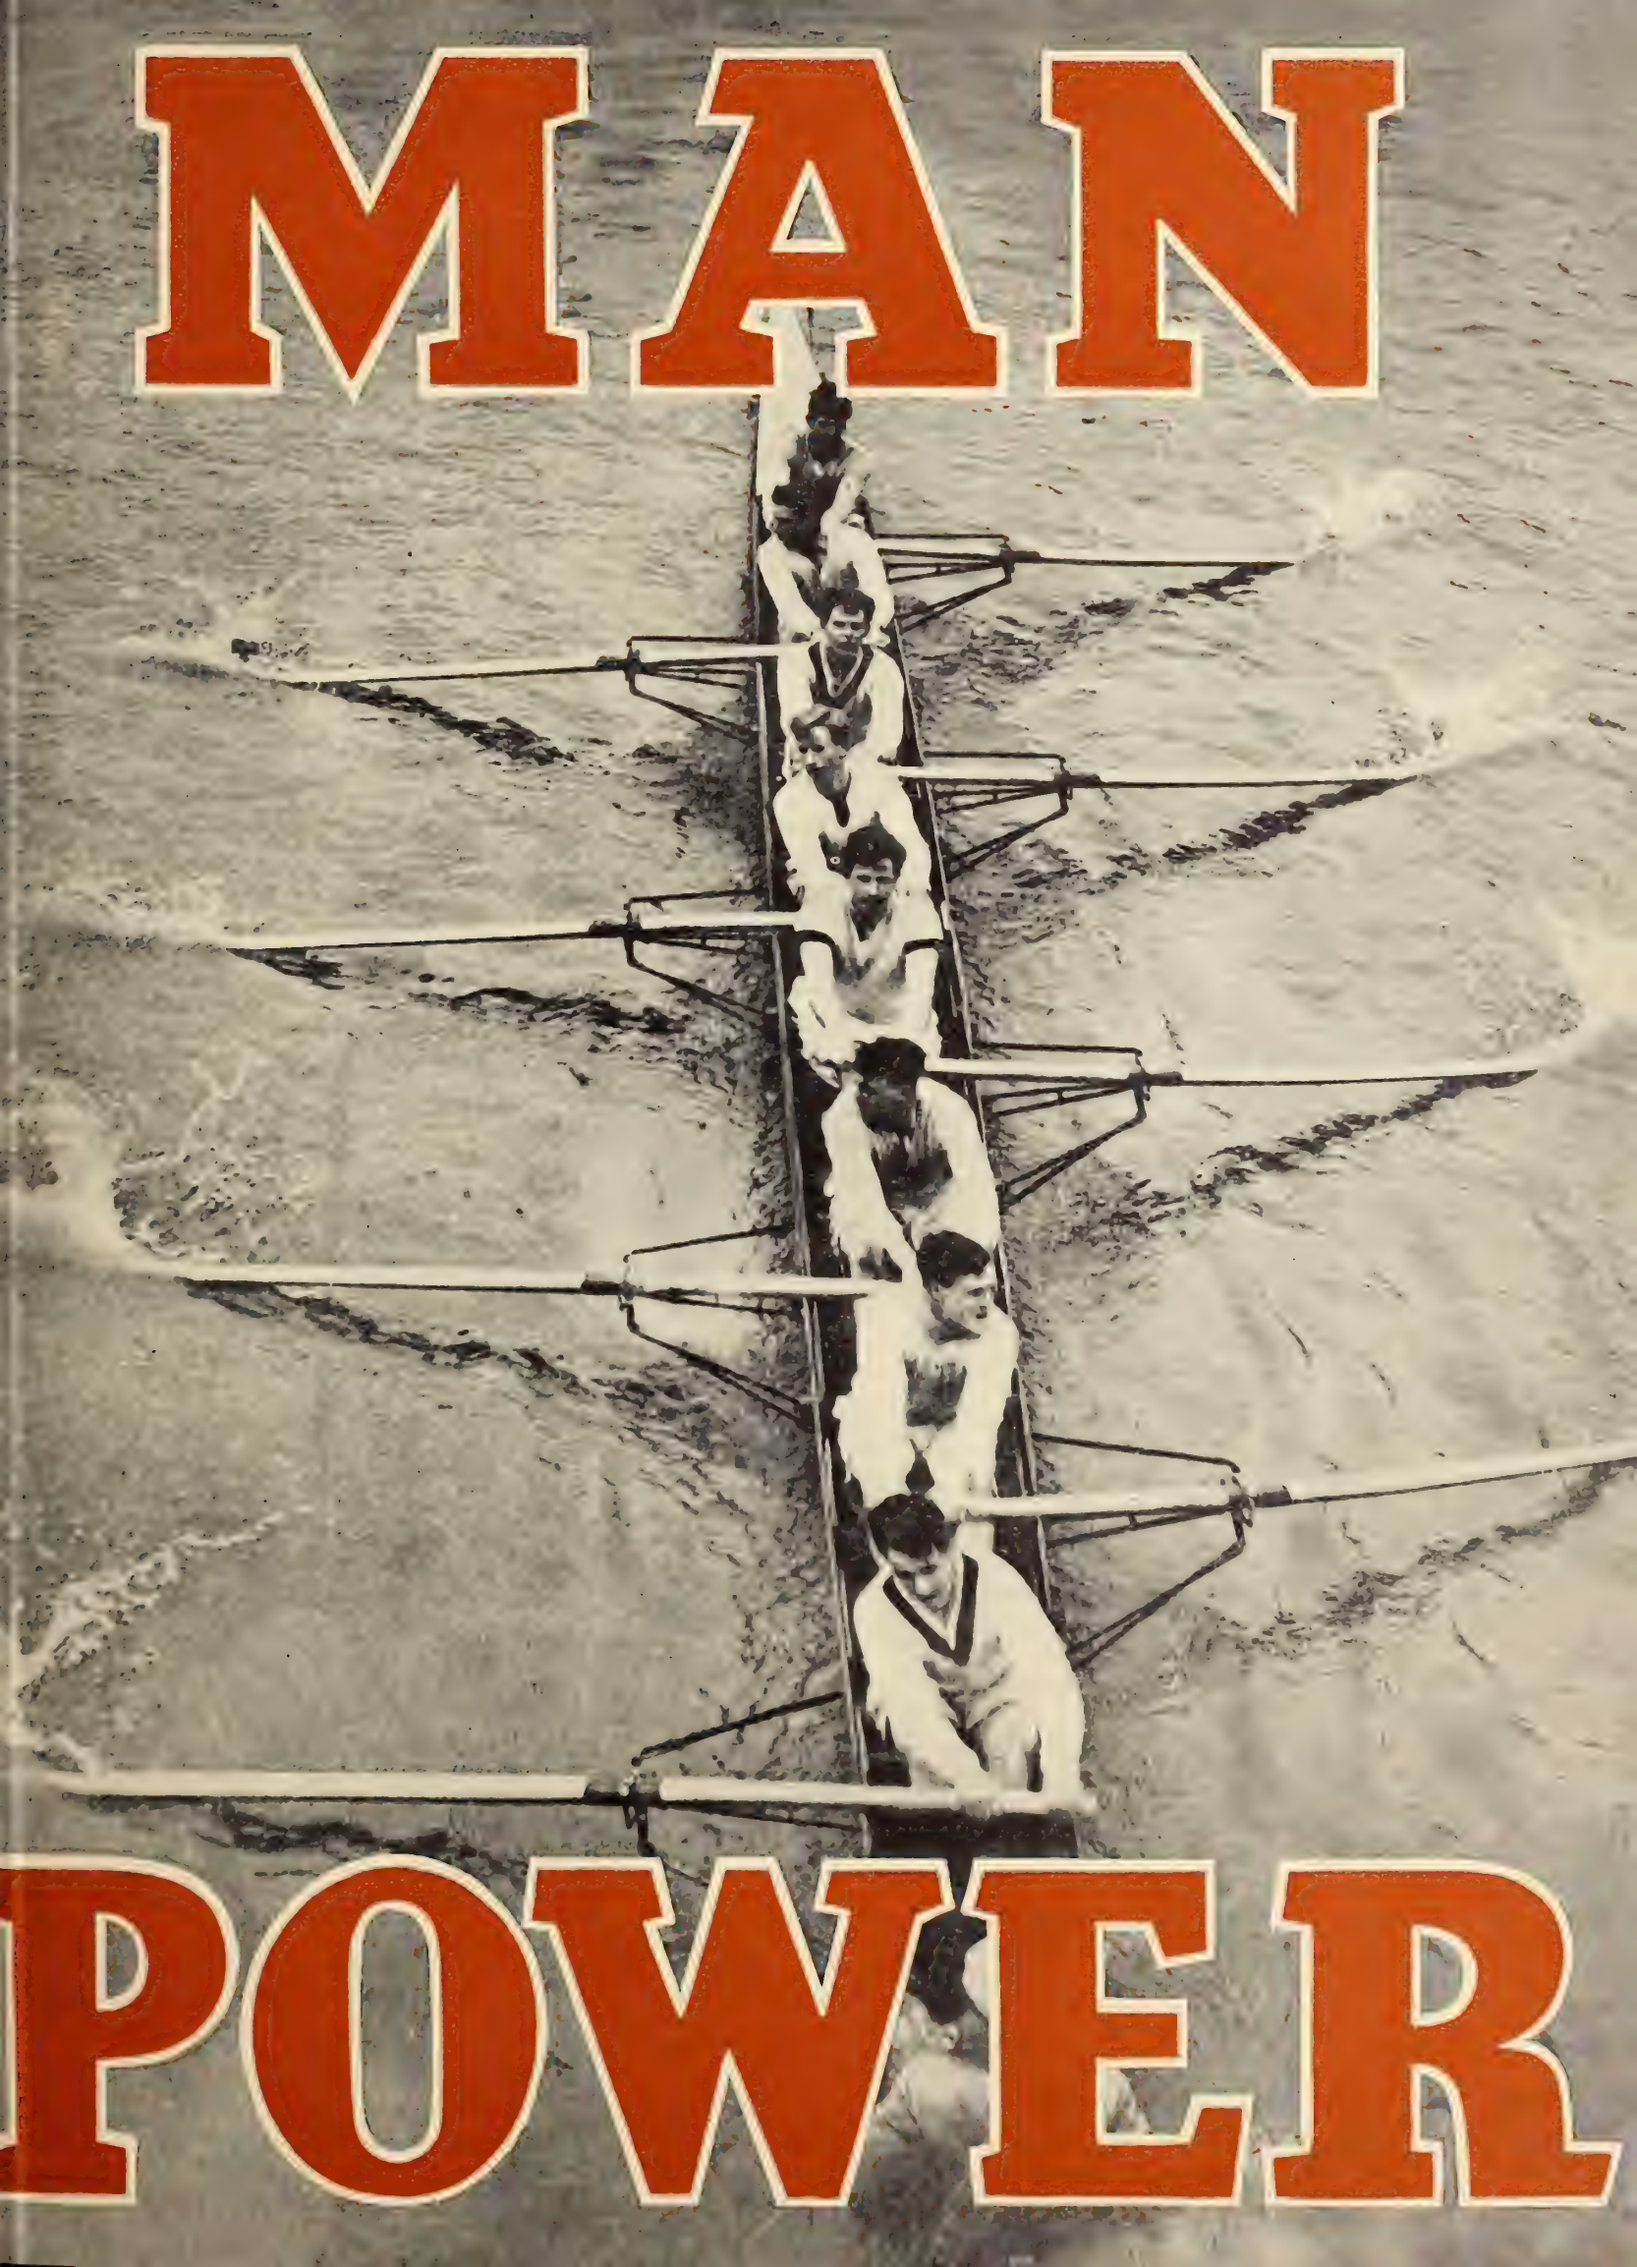
"Do you recognize clearance as a general principle?" Raftery tried again.

"Only as between houses with different admission prices," Young answered.

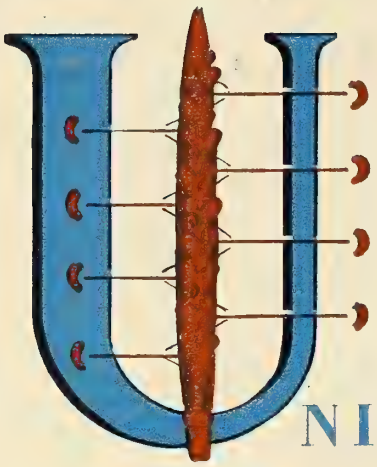
Young testified under Raftery's questioning that he played "Top Hat" second to the Fox Warwick, on December 22, 23 and 24. Gross was $170.60. "Follow the Fleet" Young played after the Warwick, Madrid and Westport, on June 14, 15 and 16. Gross was $194.70. Raftery called attention to Young's making more on the feature on which he had no clearance than on the one on which he did have.

"I certainly do not recognize the right of priority of run between equally priced theatres," Mr. Young reiterated.

He admitted that perhaps the day and date principle embodied in the independents' schedule proposed last year was not the happiest one, although it was at least fair to all exhibitors. But perhaps it would be better to stagger pictures: not give one house a chance to buy first run on every picture, but give one house a chance to buy first run from several producers, another house the first runs of several other producers, and so on.



Practically all of Film Row, and most exhibitors, were in the court room, fanning themselves as the heat soared to 110 the first afternoon and went over 100 the next morning.



Abe Baier, who operates the Lindbergh, appeared Friday morning without a coat, and the bailiff told him he had to have it to get into court. He went down and rented one, getting back to court just in time to hear the judge recess till afternoon.

Besides Rolsky and Young, plaintiffs are C. E. Esterly, State and Prospect; Frank T. Mountjoy, Circle; Abe and Rosa Baier, Lindbergh; Saline Theatre Corporation (C. H. Potter), Baltis, Murray and Admiral; Ritz Amusement Corp., Ritz, and H. F. Pautz and H. C. Rhode, Sun.

Besides Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., defendants are Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro, Columbia, RKO, Vitagraph, Paramount and United Artists.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Production

Hollywood's new season production program got under way during the past week with several important pictures both started and completed. The week was additionally notable in that it witnessed the starting of the first picture under the new Schulberg Pictures, Inc., banner.

From the standpoint of productions started, the Warner studio, with four new efforts, is in the van. In "Mistress of Fashion," which Michael Curtiz is directing, Kay Francis, Claude Rains, Ian Hunter, Alison Skipworth, Frank Reicher, Frank Conroy, Betty Lawford, Walter Kingsford and Alexander D'Arcy will be seen, among many others.

"Heroes of the Air" will present Warren Hull, Jean Muir, Howard Phillips, Gordon Oliver, John Litel, Nedda Harrigan, John Kelly, Joe Cunningham, Carlyle Moore, Jr., Mary Treen, Charles Foy, Gordon Hart and Winifred Shaw. Nick Grinde is directing.

Presently cast for "Three Men on a Horse" are Frank McHugh, Joan Blondell, Carol Hughes, Sam Levine, Allen Jenkins and Teddy Hart. Many more additions in featured and support parts are to be made. Mervyn LeRoy is directing.

Fourth of the Warner group, "The Shrinking Violet," features Dick Purcell, Ann Sheridan, Ann Gillis, June Travis, Wayne Morris and George E. Stone, with Noel Smith directing.

Two pictures started at MGM. "Libeled Lady" is a vehicle for Jean Harlow, William Powell, Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy, Walter Connolly and Charles Grapewin. Jack Conway is directing.

"Chain Lightning" started with Stuart Erwin, Betty Furness, Edmund Gwenn and E. E. Clive as principals. Edwin L. Marin is directing.

Under its own sponsorship, Paramount started "The Plainsman," a Cecil B. De Mille production. Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur are starred with a lengthy supporting cast listing Jimmy Ellison, Charles Bickford, Helen Burgess, Johnny Down, Porter Hall, Bruce Cabot, Purnell Pratt, George Hayes and Edwin Maxwell.

Marked by impressive ceremonies, Schulberg Picture started "Wedding Present," which Paramount will release. First picture on the new company's program, it features Joan Bennett, Cary Grant, George Bancroft, Inez Courtney and Purnell Pratt. Richard Wallace is directing.

Universal started "Way For a Lady," with Ralph Murphy directing. The cast includes Doris Nolan, Michael Whelan, Marjorie Gateson, Gerald Smith, Nigel Bruce, Ferdinand Gottschalk and Harry Barris.

With D. Ross Lederman at the helm, Columbia started "Two Minute Alibi." It will present William Gargan, Marguerite Churchill, Gene Morgan, Egon Brecher and Raymond Lawrence in the featured roles.

"I'd Give My Life," produced by Richard A. Rowland for Paramount release, went over with what Hollywood calls a bang when previewed in Long Beach last week. Sir Guy Standing, Frances Drake and Tom Brown have principal roles in the picture, comment on which was marked by frequent reiteration of the term "box-office."

After more than three months in production, Columbia finished "The Lost Horizon." Ronald Colman is starred, supported by Jane Wyatt, Isabel Jewell, Margo, Edward Everett Horton, Thomas Mitchell, John Howard, H. B. Warner, Hugh Buckler, Lawrence Grant and Sam Jaffee. Frank Capra directed the production.

MGM finished "Good Earth," which, like "The Lost Horizan," was a long time in production. It stars Paul Muni and Luise Rainer in the picturized dramatization of Pearl Buck's famous novel.

The MGM studio also finished "The Gorgeous Hussy," which, because of its historical backgrounds, dramatic theme and quality of cast, is of potentially important attraction caliber. Joan Crawford and Robert Taylor are starred.

Radio completed "Walking on Air," previously titled "Count Pete." Directed by Joseph Stantley, the cast lists Ann Sothern, Gene Raymond, Harriet Hilliard, Jessie Ralph, Henry Stephenson, Gordon Jones.

"See America First," a chapter in the American Family Series, was completed by Twentieth Century-Fox. It will present Jed Prouty, Dixie Dunbar, Shirley Deane, Tony Martin, Spring Byington, Kenneth Howell, George Ernst, June Carlson.

Warners finished "Draegerman's Courage." Adapted from the recent experiences of two men trapped in a Nova Scotia mine, it presents Barton MacLane, Jean Muir, Henry O'Neill, Helen MacKellar, Addison Richards, Robert Barrat, Priscilla Lyon, Walter Miller, Gordon Oliver and Joseph Crehan. Louis King directed the picture.

At Republic "Oh Susannah" was moved to the cutting room. Gene Autry is featured.

Screen Playwrights, Inc., have elected a committee consisting of Grover Jones, James K. McGuinness and Bess Meredyth to work out a program for future negotiation with producers.

The Press

Newspapers have expanded by approximately half the space apportioned to news of motion pictures, according to estimates of the press departments at the studios, during the past year.

A number of factors are cited as explanatory of this change, but major among them is the personally conducted educational campaign (mutual) carried on by representatives of various companies.

Tom Bailey of Paramount was one of the first to act as personal ambassador to the press from his studio, Paramount. He was chief of the publicity department at the time, and he made a swing around the country, interviewing not only dramatic critics but city editors.

Recently Barrett Kiesling of MGM completed a tour of 17 weeks in which he disseminated advance news of "Romeo and Juliet." Other studios are following suit. Important correspondents who never dreamed of getting nearer to Hollywood than the screens of their local theatres are making yearly treks to Hollywood. This summer more than 50 newspaper representatives have spent from two to four weeks here for the purpose of acquainting studios with their individual needs and arranging for special services.

ARBITRATION COMMITTEE FORMED BY AUSTRALIAN THEATRE GROUPS

New South Wales Exhibitors and Distributors Appoint Mediation Board After Appeals to Government Fail Twice

by CLIFF HOLT
in Melbourne

After twice failing to settle their disputes through legislation attempted by the New South Wales Exhibitors Association, exhibitors and distributors will endeavor to reach a settlement without political participation. To this end an exhibitor-distributor committee has been set up, consisting of N. B. Freeman (MGM), Herc C. McIntyre (Universal), and Sir Victor Wilson (president MPDA) for the distributors and William Harrop (Exhibitors' Association), Ken Asprey (General Theatres Corporation) and Charles E. Munro (Hoyts) for the exhibitors. Dan Carroll, prominent city exhibitor, will be chairman.

Although Australian independents never have expressed a very high regard for the Motion Picture Distributors' Association, there is a disposition on their part lately to attack the association so flagrantly and ridicule it so openly that their manner borders dangerously close to hysteria. While in some quarters it may be considered that the independents' grievances are justified, such methods scarcely lead to eventual harmony between the two factions, and, indeed, merely invite political control.

In the current issue of the independent exhibitors' official journal, there is this passage:

"The decision of the New South Wales Motion Picture Exhibitors Association to introduce a sixpenny minimum admission, and to approach the State and Federal Parliaments for further film legislation, is primarily an attempt to make further theatre building in areas already catered for a hazardous venture. But it is also an expression of resentment towards the MPDA, inasmuch as that organization is regarded as a complete 'wash-out' in contributing anything to the self-regulation of the industry."

Return for Arbitration

Simultaneously with the appearance of this item, exhibitor and distributor representatives were in conference in an attempt to remedy a number of trade disputes without the assistance of governments; but now it was found necessary to return to the New South Wales Government for arbitration on the issues over which a deadlock had arisen.

The same publication puts it this way:

"The MPDA officially says: 'Everything is all right. We have no need to regulate anything. There is plenty of competition among distributors, and the principle of barter allows the exhibitor to take care of everything and run his theatre at a profit. After all, Australia's theatres have been built with profits from our product.'

"The exhibitor, in effect, says: 'There is a 10 per cent rejection right in America, but we are told here that we do not need any. There is a Look-and-Book Act in England, but again we are told that it would ruin the business in Australia. At the same time producers are expanding their plants, increasing their profits and putting more money than ever into their top-class product. The MPDA says: 'We can do nothing for you—but don't go to the Government, either. That's suicidal!' "

Well, they have been going to the Government and the Government has been sending them back home again, because having inquired twice into the film industry within eight years, in addition to the Performing Right Inquiry in which film interests figured prominently, political administrations are wearying of our squabbles. The one concrete plan to take the whole unsavory business out of the Government's hands is the suggestion by Charles E. Munro, managing director of General Theatres Corporation, for the creation of a tribunal of six members with equal exhibitor and distributor representation. Such a tribunal has now been set up. Decisions will be dependent on a majority agreement on both sides.

New Production Company

Latest local production company to make its appearance here is Associated Players, which is being floated on a nominal capital of £40,000 ($200,000), with Claude Flemming, Frank Harvey and Gladys Moncrieff, prominent stage names, mentioned as the principals. First feature scheduled is "Little Man," to star George Wallace, who has already proved successful on the local market in the Efftee productions, "Harmony Row" and "His Royal Highness." Miss Moncrieff, who is one of Australia's most highly-paid stage personalities, will star in the second.

The Exhibitors Association here will shortly discuss a proposal that exhibitors should pointblank refuse to book any picture on a 50-50 percentage of the gross. General opinion among members is that such a rental prohibits the showman from returning a profit on the season, but others contend that so long as there are exhibitors who are prepared to pay high prices for outstanding product, even at a loss, they will continue to do so, providing they are buying goodwill from their patrons.

Success of "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" here and in Melbourne has revived interest in color, which threatened to become a definite box-office liability after the failure of "Becky Sharp." Theatre-men of this country would like to see producers make more outdoor subjects in color, and leave interiors alone until the studios are more conversant with the technique.

Acquisition of the Melbourne Lyceum by Snider and Dean Theatres, Ltd., under a leasing arrangement with General Theatres Corporation, adds another link to a chain that has rapidly gained great importance and significance on this market. Besides the Lyceum, Snider and Dean now control at least one theatre in every capital, and an extensive country circuit in N. S. W. They also have under consideration ambitious plans for expanding their circuit still further, and there are definite indications that inside 1938, the company will exercise a great influence on the marketing of films here. Assuming that the five-year period under which General Theatres Corporation is to remain the holding company for Hoyts and Union Theatres is not extended, and these two circuits return to open competition, the presence of Snider and Dean, Ltd., will undoubtedly be welcomed by distributors, should negotiations with Hoyts and Union not proceed too smoothly. On the other hand, if Snider and Dean allied themselves with one of the circuits to form a buying pool, the circuit left in the cold wouldn't be too happy about it.

The men in the control of Snider and Dean are Sam Snider, former general manager of Hoyts, and one of Australia's most capable theatre men, and George Dean, whose city, suburban and country theatre experience covers a quarter of a century. Associated Distributors, which handles the C. M. Wolff product in Australia, has sold to 33 independent neighborhood houses in opposition to the neighborhood circuit in Melbourne controlled by Hoyts. As they are already tied up with MGM and Paramount for the 52 weeks, the trade is wondering how the indies are going to find playing-time for all this British product.

J. C. Williamson, Ltd., stage producer, has obtained a supreme court writ for an interlocutory injunction restraining Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer from showing the picture "Rose-Marie." The point at issue is whether a talking picture constitutes an infringement of stage play rights. MGM holds the opinion that a legitimate show and a sound film are two distinctly different types of entertainment; that the stage rights only were sold by the author for Australia, and that the rights to talking picture production and presentation remains with MGM as the owner of the film rights.

The release of "Rose-Marie" as a silent was not questioned by Williamson's but the addition of dialogue and music in their opinion alters the matter. The case is regarded as a test because Williamson's holds the stage rights for many plays already produced or in the course of production by Hollywood companies.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Many years ago the motion picture and the stage had on their boards a rather successful comedian in the person of Billy B. Van. Born in 1870, some 66 years ago, Mr. Van, whose real name is Vandergrift, reached theatricals at age nine, when he appeared on the stage at the old North Broad Street theatre, in Philadelphia, in the chorus of the juvenile "H. M. S. Pinafore." Subsequently he played "Dick Deadeye" in the same production, and that started him on a career that lasted for 48 years, through the theatre—in the circus, vaudeville, burlesque and finally reaching Broadway stage headlights in 1908. Motion pictures came along and made him a wo-reel comedian.

Retirement eclipsed Billy Van at least half-a-dozen seasons ago, and nary a word has been heard of him since, until, the other day, he bobbed up as the author of a piece on "successful salesmanship," in the "Executives' Service Bulletin," for which he had written in the capacity of president of the Pine Tree Products Company, of Newport, New Hampshire. Mr. Van's company promises exhilaration with each package of Pine Tree pine salts for the bath.

Evidently the old comedian has carried with him to his new field of selling some of the imaginations of the theatre, now predicting, in the mind of an H. G. Wells, a salesman of the future who will make calls in rocket cars, at Keokuk in the morning and New Guinea at lunch. "Before he can say 'advertising allowance,' the customer will have an order blank and pen in his hand. The pen will be equipped with a photoelectric cell and, as he signs, the customer's order will be automatically transmitted to the home office and the merchandise in turn will rocket forth and arrive probably before the salesman leaves."

Conservative residents near the little town of Trail, in British Columbia, had for months turned their eyes every morning to a rock on the roadside on which some gospel preacher had painted the message: "Are You Saved?" Imagine their consternation when the other morning they found painted over the preachment another, and less spiritual message advising them to "Visit the Capitol Theatre—Cool in Summer. Warm in Winter."

Will Harper, the enterprising Capitol theatre manager, said he was unable to resist the "ideal location."

Lowell Lawrence, in Kansas City's Journal-Post, swears that a certain motion picture producer in Hollywood was entertained recently at the new home of an actor, where he was shown every detail of the palatial residence, listening attentively the while the actor expressed special pride in showing his new grand piano. "It's a swell layout," commented the movie mogul, "but you ought to trade that piano in for an electric one. It looks ridiculous for a star with all your money to be playing a piano by hand."

Motion pictures are not the only art that sometimes subjects itself to merchandising promotions of its esthetic accomplishments. Several apprentice Paderewski pianists, competing at New York's Town Hall for the Music Week Association, survived many eliminations and received gold medals allegedly attesting to their talents. The reverse side of the medal is completely covered with an odd V-shaped design, beneath which is inscribed: "Donated by S. Klein, Ladies' Coats and Suits, Union Square."

SHOW BUSINESS DEBUNKED

One of New York's pioneer independent theatre managers, whose identity must remain concealed for obvious reasons, gives to this department the publication rights to a literary "masterpiece" which he prefers to call "Theatrical Terminology" or, in short, "The Show Business Debunked".

"This may not apply to all houses, or to all circuits," he explains, "but no matter what the coming election may bring, we independent theatre managers agree that there is no Santa Claus." And with that rather cynical introduction, our author herewith presents the following estimations of theatre circuit executives:

CHIEF EXECUTIVE: A man who has a dozen or two morons convinced that "thar's gold in them thar theatres!" And he always gets his.

ASSISTANT CHIEF: He tries to keep the morons convinced.

DIVISION MANAGER: Lord of all he surveys—most of them the proof of "the survival of the unfittest."

DISTRICT SUPERVISOR: The guy, always in spats, who shouts loudly and long at everybody except the Chief Executive's relatives.

MANAGING DIRECTOR: One who buys a car to carry around his supervisor.

RESIDENT MANAGER: A sufferer from the Division Manager's inflated ego and a victim of the Managing Director's halitosis!

ASSISTANT MANAGER: A stooge in flannel pants, blue coat with white buttons and a cabinet-file of reliable, overworked alibis.

CHIEF OF STAFF: A rose by any other name——

ASSISTANT CHIEF OF STAFF: "Yes man" for the blooming rose.

HEAD USHER: Usually a poor relative of the Chief Executive.

USHER: A fellow with hope—and heaps of endurance.

USHERETTE: Something dainty——

DOORMAN: King Tut's rival.

SHOWMAN: That unknown quantity.

Standard Oil Company of Indiana announces that they finally had to travel all the way to Hollywood to get pictures of "goofy" people to run with "goofy" testimonials in the series of "goofy" advertisements now appearing in the midwest in behalf of its Red Crown gasoline. They engaged character players whose names and telephone numbers were obtained from casting directors.

There's "Barney Barnacle," who boasts, "Already this Red Crown's saved me more than I paid for it—and I've still got it!"; and "Lester Longbow," who crowed that he had traveled four miles on a two-ounce bottle of the gas; and "Janet G. String," who had saved so much gas driving and stopping and going around the country that she had been compelled to rent a barn to store it all in. "Lloyd Legpull" offered the prize claim, however, telling how he did 16.3 miles by merely giving the carburetor a whiff from a gasoline-scented handkerchief.

Proof of the extent to which the man in the field, socalled, can muddle the purpose of such movements as the Legion of Decency is submitted by Nelson Creswell, of the Cozy theatre, in Cedarville, Ohio.

"We played one of those 'shoot-'em-up' westerns," writes Mr. Creswell, "in which everybody is killed except the cameraman. A young farmer—a regular 'hayseed,' who does not get to town very often and who does not know what is going on except what he reads in the Sunday School papers, attended the showing of this picture. He seemed to be very much shocked at all the shooting, and so remarked to me after the show: 'I thought this here Legion of Decency was going to clean up movin' pictures, but all that shootin' and killin' don't look to me like they're doing it.'"

It seems that the New York "Times," in a certain sense with respect to their status in their fields, has named together the Bible, the Encyclopedia Britannica and Motion Picture Herald. May it not be observed that Terry Ramsaye, editor of the Herald, writes for two out of the three of them.

Mr. W. G. Van Schmus must have his problems with some of the out-of-town trade. And we find charming evidence, too, of how the double bill thing goes and grows. It seems that Mr. William R. Weaver, special writer on the HERALD staff, having recently brought his family on from Chicago, was showing his daughter, Patricia Ann, aged nine and thoughtful, around the Radio City Music Hall, its vast vistas of architecture, its heaven-high auditorium, and its wonders of impressive machinery, acres of elegance. "It's very nice, papa," Patricia observed, after they had reached home and had time for reflection, "but they only had one feature."

When not engaged in furthering its radio broadcasting interests in NBC, or its sound equipment manufacturing business in RCA Victor, or the affairs of producing, distributing or exhibiting motion pictures through RKO, in which it has a 50 per cent interest, the best brains of David Sarnoff's cohorts at the Radio Corporation of America give attention to such vital problems as "perfecting delicate instruments by which the neighborhood garage man can diagnose motor car ills as quickly and accurately as a doctor diagnoses human ailments with such devices as the stethoscope." That obstacle hurdled, and Mr. Sarnoff will stand alone, even though the device does use Rochelle salts to measure the vibrations which tell what's wrong with the old puddle-jumper. Nor is that all, for Mr. Sarnoff's thinker-uppers have also contrived a device by which the operations of a towboat may be directed from the offices of the owners. That's well nigh the acme of scientific perfection.

JAPANESE CIRCUITS' THUMBS DOWN ON BLOCK BOOKING PROGRAM FILMS

Shochiku and Takarazuka Companies Inform Distributors They'll Buy Only Their Best Pictures for First-Runs

by CHIKUSHI TANI
in Tokyo

Restriction of importation of foreign motion pictures, though supposed to come sooner or later, was broached suddenly by our exhibiting parties in an abrupt action by Tokyo's two biggest film-theatrical interests, the Shochiku and Takarazuka companies.

The two concerns called the sales managers of ten foreign picture distributing units in Tokyo to a gathering held at Tokyo Kaikan, and gave them a joint statement verbally and in writing to the following effect.

"We used to contract for one or more additional program pictures for each special feature contracted for with the foreign film distributing companies. In order to hold our own, we two companies have had to compete with each other for the purchase of outstanding productions from various distributors. Out of such necessity of competition, we until now have been obliged to buy a number of program pictures which we often have had great difficulty in consuming at our theatres. We have had to play pictures against our liking, and our patrons were the greatest losers. Now we have jointly agreed not in the future to contract for or play any pictures beyond the practical need for first-run release at our theatres.

"Our men will be present for previews at the customs house on request from you, the distributing party. This plan will not only mean that we shall get the best possible pictures to suit the patrons but will help the foreign motion picture to gain and retain popularity, with the result that there will be more increased attendance, thus contributing much to the prosperity of our motion picture industry.

We ask the cooperation of every foreign film distributing company."

According to Messrs. S. Kido and J. Yoshioka, managing directors of the Shochiku and Takarazuka companies, the aim is self-explanatory, but it is also obvious that on one hand they are trying to relieve themselves of block contract arrangements for program pictures.

This move is a matter for serious consideration in the eyes of distributors, particularly such as Paramount, RKO and Towa Shoji, who have made block contract arrangements with the two big exhibitors for a large quantity of pictures.

Every distributor faces the fact that the best production is the surest to win on the picture-to-picture basis of sale. The fear entertained by some managers is that the public will demand deluxe productions only.

In addition, as it is generally presumed that European distribution in Japan is at the point of saturation, the home offices in America may be expected to raise the quota for Japan to a very considerable degree, and their Japan offices may be in a difficult position, having to come in amicable contact with these big customers on one hand, and still to make successful attainment of the quotas set.

Cultural Films Popular

The Japan Motion Picture Association (The Dai-Nihon Eiga Kyokai) recently presented a petition to our government for compulsory exhibition of cultural pictures in the theatres. In keeping with this move, the majority of our producing companies have now established at their studios cultural picture departments to take care of the production and distribution of such product.

Shochiku Cinema since early this year has had a special motion picture section succeeding its former newsreel section. Nikkatsu newly founded a cultural picture department. So did Daito Cinema, while Shinko Cinema has shown activity along this line by having released "The Policeman" and "The Great Tokyo Series," although it has no section at the studio bearing such a title.

Nearly all such pictures have proved very popular with the public.

Room on Programs

Now comes the question whether a place should be allotted on each week's theatre program for cultural pictures.

According to a survey made by Kokusai Eiga Shimbun among typical theatres, including high, middle and low classes, 99 per cent of them replied that their programs had room for cultural pictures. The remaining 1 per cent said they used newsreels on current events.

Those theatremen who replied all agreed that producers should do their part to meet the demand of general exhibitors by supplying such productions made on a high standard of educational content.

Most theatremen favored the narrative, scenic and historical pictures, and particularly musicals in the foreign picture field.

It is indicated that Ichizo Kobayashi, theatre magnate and importer of films, shortly will launch his long reported large scale production venture. He returned recently from a tour of Europe and the United States, during which he studied film methods.

He has just completed plans for a new distributing organization, in association with P.C.L. and J. O. Talkie, which will handle the distribution of Japanese films. A joint investment of 1,000,000 yen has been made in the new company, it is said. The plans call for six productions monthly from P.C.L. and J. O. Talkie.

Indication of the intention of Japanese producers to impart a more universal appeal to their product is seen in the fact that the Shochiku Cinema Co. sent a unit to location in Tibet to film "Male vs. Female."

A second production of the same character is in work by Yokohama Cinema Company, which has sent an expedition to South America for six months.

PUBLIC LIMITS STAR TO FIVE FILMS A YEAR

Francis Lederer took his production problems to the public in a questiontionnaire which he sent to 2,500 film patrons, critics and theatre managers, and the results reveal that 57 per cent of those who answered believe that too many pictures a year are injurious to a star's standing; that Mr. Lederer should make between 4 and 5 pictures annually and that he should appear in light romantic vehicles.

Of a total of 2,413 answers received by Lederer, 1,368 expressed the belief that too many films were harmful to a star. The critics, particularly, were against overproduction, 85 per cent of them voting for restriction of a player's appearances on the screen.

Exhibitors Freed in Bank Night Cases

Two theatre managers in Massachusetts were acquitted of gambling charges in connection with the operation of Bank Nights and a test case on a similar charge was begun in Virginia this week.

In Boston Charles S. Wilson, manager of the Dorchester, and Roy Heffner, manager of a theatre in Brighton, Mass., were found not guilty of a lottery charge in superior court.

Charles A. Somma, theatre operator in Richmond, Va., has been arrested and charged with operating a lottery at the Hippodrome theatre, in which he has a proprietary interest. Mr. Somma denied that he was violating the anti-gambling laws of the state and announced that he would make a fight in court to establish his right to award "attendance prizes" to holders of lucky numbers.

Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., is suing Rube Finkelstein and Robert Rhodes in Kansas City for payment of royalties on the use of the term "Bank Night." The defendants have maintained that Bank Night is a lottery and have refused payment for the scheme.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

Impending

At B. I. P., Elstree, plans are practically completed for the lineup of subjects already announced. First to go on the floor is likely to be "Star of the Circus," for which John Monk Saunders has delivered his story. Buddy Rogers, Noah Beery, Clifford Evans, George Graves, W. H. Berry and Steve Geray have been cast and a Hollywood feminine lead is likely to be announced. Brian Desmond Hurst is directing.

Herbert Brenon, who made "Living Dangerously" for BIP, is to direct "The Dominant Sex" for them. The Michael Egan play was a real theatre success and there was heavy competition for the screen rights. John Lodge will be the lead. Mr. Lodge starred in "Ourselves Alone" for BIP and also in the recently completed "The Tenth Man," advance reported as one of this studio's biggest efforts; he has a lengthy contract with BIP which will probably put him in "Bulldog Drummond at Bay," and "Murder Gang," the latter likely to be retitled "Sensation."

Gaumont-British put no new pictures on the floor this week, for the good reason that the five current productions absorbed space at Shepherd's Bush and on exterior lot at Northolt. These films are "Head Over Heels," "Sabotage," "The Northing Tramp," "The Nelson Touch," and "O. H. M. S." For the latter, Raoul Walsh this week directed war scenes at Amesbury, using a thousand British troops from the Royal Warwicks, the Queen's, Royal Engineers and Royal Corps of Signals. The soldiers play crowd parts as Chinese bandits as well as figuring in their regular capacity.

Antoinette Cellier, daughter of Frank Cellier and J. Farrell MacDonald have joined the cast of "The Great Barrier" on Canadian location.

Production

Erich Pommer's first production for London Films, "Fire Over England," went into active work at Denham this week. From a screen play by Clemence Dane, of "Will Shakespeare" fame, and Sergei Noldanov, this is the long schemed feature starring Flora Robson as Queen Elizabeth and it is being planned on very ambitious lines. Direction is in the hands of William K. Howard, with another Hollywood man, James Wong Howe, at the camera, and the cast includes Raymond Massey, as King Philip of Spain, Leslie Banks as the Earl of Leicester, Laurence Olivier, Vivien Leigh, Lawrence Hanray, Tamara Desni, Morton Selten and Henry Oscar.

The high spot of this production will be the coming of the Spanish Armada to England and its defeat in one of the crucial naval battles of history. Such famous episodes as Drake's game of bowls and the Queen's address to her troops at Tilbury are also likely to be seen. In period and historical sequence "Fire Over England," picturing the life history of Henry VIII's famous daughter, looks like a logical follow-on of London's greatest picture. It is being produced by Pendennis Productions.

Alexander Korda is in the fourth week of his personal direction of "Rembrandt," with Charles Laughton, current scenes picturing the painter at work on his masterpiece, "Saul," in his house at Amsterdam. Roger Livesey is playing the part of the model for Saul. Recently shot are sequences of the banquet in honor of the public display of that other famous picture, "The Night Watch." Gertrude Lawrence, playing the part of Rembrandt's housekeeper, sings an old Dutch song, "The Naughty Girls of Kield recht," in this scene. Songs are also provided for Elsa Lanchester and Roger Livesey and a period musical background is schemed for such scenes as the reception of the Prince of Orange by the Amsterdam burghers.

The next big star on the London lot will be Marlene Dietrich, booked to start in "Knight Without Armor," with Robert Donat, within seven days. Miriam Hopkins, in the Victor Saville "Dark Journey," Edward G. Robinson in Atlantic Films' "Thunder in the City" are two other Hollywood stars at work.

All stages at the big Denham plant are now active, the current productions, in addition to those mentioned, being the New World "Wings of the Morning," Pall Mall's "Paderewski," Tom Wall's "Dishonor Bright," and the Tauber "Land Without Music."

Help Wanted

Illustrating at once the shortage of first-class director and star talent in England, and the advisability of a vacation in London for any Hollywood people of reputation whose contracts allow of an outside picture or two, are two stories of signings this week.

Tay Garnett, dropping in at Southampton on the good ship Athene, on a world cruise in search of exteriors, has revised the itinerary in order to direct a picture for the Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., company, Criterion, at Worton Hall. James Durante, here for a variety tour, has been grabbed by Max Schach's concern, Capitol, for a part in "Land Without Music" at Denham, and just lately, Richard Barthelmess, with nothing but a vacation in mind, found himself fitted with a Twickenham contract to play opposite Dolly Haas, in his own old picture, "Broken Blossoms."

The moral for Hollywoodians seems to be that the make-up kit should go in every bag packed for the London trip, and that a roundtrip booking is just another way of wasting time for the steamship companies.

Mr. Garnett's feature for the Fairbanks outfit will be a spectacular piece with the battle of Flodden as its big moment, and it won't go on the floor until the end of August because the War Office, already lending soldiers and munitions for two British pictures, will be asked to give its usual assistance for the scenes of the historic English-Scottish battle. John Balderstone, of "Bengal Lancer" and "Berkeley Square" fame, is writing the script in consultation with Richard Fisher, British period expert. Scheduled to cost £150,000, "High Treason" (working title) will have an American release through United Artists.

While Messrs. Garnet and Fairbanks are picking locations, Criterion will start at Worton Hall on "Gang," the Louis de Wohl novel scripted by Norman Alexander, jointly produced by Fairbanks and Marcel Hellman and directed by Alfred Zeisler, lately of UFA. Harold French is supervising the dialogue. Many of the scenes in "Gang" occur in a department store and the Selfridge establishment in Oxford Street is being used for authentic backgrounds.

Mr. Durante's part for Capitol will put him into costume and wig for the first time. He plays, in "Land Without Music," a "special European correspondent" of the New York Evening Echo of 1830, crossing the continent by donkey-cart with his daughter Sadie in order to record the events consequent on a Royal ban on music in the principality of Lucca.

How They Stand

Twickenham Film Studios is beginning two new pictures: the Flanagan and Allen "Underneath the Arches" and the Edward Everett Horton-Genevieve Tobin "The Man in the Mirror." Originally scheduled to direct the former, Albert de Courville has had to relinquish the assignment, due to commitments at the G-B studio, and Redd Davies will now be in control, Sydney Blythe acting as assistant director. Enid Stamp-Taylor, Aubrey Mather and Harvey Braban have been added to the cast.

Maurice Elvey is directing "The Man in the Mirror" at the J. H. Studios, Elstree. Genevieve Tobin got in on July 13th, and Everett Horton was due three days later, with the first scenes scheduled for July 22nd.

Another current Twickenham feature, "Beauty and the Barge," is still held up by the quinsy from which Gordon Harker is suffering. The Cockney star appears in practically every sequence.

"Spy of Napoleon," Elvey's current feature for Twickenham, had one day's studio interiors to complete, after its return from Scottish location. With heavy rain continuous in London, they had perfect weather conditions on Loch Lomond, the only delay in production being due to the fact that, using the model village on Sir Ian Colquhon's estate at Luss, they had to lay off work for the Scottish sabbath. The captain and crew of the river steamer Princess Patricia were put into eighteenth century costumes for lake scenes.

BRITISH FILMS ACT COMMITTEE CLOSES HEARINGS OF EVIDENCE

Producers Still Divided on Policy; "Exhibitors Only" Quota and Anglo-American Reciprocal Scheme Talked

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Although the Advisory Committee on the Films Act has officially announced that it will hear no more evidence, proposing to adjourn until October for a final consideration of its findings, it is a more or less open secret in Wardour street that the production section of the industry is divided, perhaps hopelessly, on the major question of the quota.

The Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, representing every production unit of importance, submitted an official case to the Committee. An increased quota and the imposition of a minimum cost clause were its chief demands. From this policy, G.-B. and A.B.P. dissented, A.B.P. resigning from the Group.

This week there was a further meeting of the producers' group. No official statement has been made as to what happened on this occasion, but unofficial comment suggests that, far from healing the differences among members, the discussion emphasized them to a point which makes the formal withdrawal of the previous official policy a distinct possibility. Such an announcement might seem superfluous, in view of the recognized split in the camp, but the leading fact in the situation is that this policy was put up to the Moyne Committee as that of the Group, was printed in the official Minutes issued by the Board of Trade, and, presumably, must be one of the main factors in the general consideration of the problem on which the Committee is to found its suggestions to the Government.

Assuming the division in producer opinion to be as acute as is suggested by all available opinion, the intriguing question of the moment appears to be whether the Moyne Committee can adhere to its decision to hear no more evidence. What if it is asked to hear a revised "case" from the Group?

New Base Is Possibility

This is definitely a possibility. At the recent meeting it is a fact that several alternatives to the bigger quota—minimum cost proposals were canvassed. Among them was the proposal that the quota should be imposed on exhibitors only. Also discussed was a reciprocal deal with American companies whereby the latter would agree to distribute in America a certain footage of British films, to be determined by their American footage released in England. Both suggestions are believed to have been rejected, but that they should have been discussed makes it plain enough that the Film Group has no agreed policy and that the Moyne Committee has before it a series of suggestions which can be, and undoubtedly will be, challenged by important producers as well as by exhibitors and distributors, immediately there is any suggestion of legislation based on them.

To this sufficiently confused situation further confusion has been added by another trade happening which at first glance has no connection whatever with the Moyne Committee's activities; the Schenck-Ostrer deal in Gaumont-British shares is alluded to here.

No one who read the minutes issued by the Moyne Committee can have failed to notice the indication on the part of several of the members of a desire to be assured about, and perhaps to insure against, a possible domination of the British industry by foreign (meaning American) interests. In this attitude they undoubtedly reflected a very important British official policy. In recent years there has been action by the Government definitely directed to securing that financial control of important British industrial concerns shall remain in British hands.

What the British Government thinks of the Schenck-Ostrer deal will not be known until the details of that deal are released, but it can be taken as a certainty, first, that pressure will be brought to bear upon ministers in the House of Commons and secondly that, if it is not thought that British interests demand special action in this case, the general case for protecting the British film industry will be strengthened by the fact that major holdings in a major British company have been allowed to pass to another country.

Directly as a result of the F. B. I. Film Group's recommendation to the Moyne Committee in favor of the removal from the Films Act of the stipulation of a British scenario writer for quota films, a British Screen Writers' Association has been formed under the aegis of the Incorporated Society of Authors, Playwrights and Composers. Kilham Roberts is the organizer and, it is believed, hopes to persuade the Moyne Committee to relax its decision to hear no more evidence, in order that the special case of British screen writers may be presented.

Dillon Damen Production Corporation, Ltd., has been formed for the purpose of production and the control of studios with Dillon Damen, recently director of publicity to Columbia Pictures as its active principal and the Hon. James Benson as a director.

Lord Tyrrell of Avon, president of the British Board of Film Censors, presented the Film Weekly prize for the Best British Film of 1935 to Alfred Hitchcock, director of the Gaumont-British "The Thirty-nine Steps," at a luncheon at the Savoy attended by many leaders of the British industry. Michael Balcon, producer of the picture, was associated in the presentation.

The award for the best acting performance of the year went to Elisabeth Bergner for her work in "Escape Me Never."

Ranked closely behind the Hitchcock picture, in patron votes, said Herbert Thompson, editor of Film Weekly, were London Films' "Scarlet Pimpernel" and B. & D.'s "Nell Gwyn," while Robert Donat and Leslie Howard ran second and third for the acting prize.

The Right Hon. B. S. B. Stevens, Prime Minister of New South Wales, Australia, received a deputation from the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries during his current visit to London, for the purpose of hearing objections to certain features of the N. S. W. Quota Act, which came into force on July 1st. Outstanding feature of the act is the provision that imported films must be covered by a percentage beginning at 4 per cent of Australian-made films. The British group objects, in chief, to the fact that British films are classed with American as "imported." The companies represented include Gaumont-British, Associated British, British Lion, British & Dominions and Sound City, and they reported a "receptive" attitude on the part of the Australian premier.

Stating that "General conditions operating in the studios are highly satisfactory," the National Association of Theatrical Employees, in its annual report, makes a pointed comparison between this state of affairs and that obtaining in the theatre end of the industry. It is asserted that in certain areas exhibitors, in order to evade equitable wage agreements, are sheltering behind the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, while the CEA branch appears to shelter behind individual exhibitors. Declaring this policy to be obsolete, the report states that "If the CEA want to make a conflict on the question of trade union recognition, we are quite prepared to meet the challenge and fight it."

Come and Get It

(U.A.-Goldwyn)

Drama

Adapted from an Edna Ferber novel, the story told in this production is elemental drama. Being played by a large cast it concentrates its plot upon one man whose life was a long turmoil of soaring business ambitions and disillusioned romantic dreams. Located in the lumbering sections of Wisconsin's forests, it tells of a man who sold his hope of happiness for wealth and power. Grown rich, old and influential, he sees in the daughter of his old sweetheart a girl who means everything lovely that he dreamed of and lost. His domestic life turned into a chaos, the power of the situation is intensified when he finds that his son is loved by the child he adores. Desperate, he fights with his boy, and as he hears the girl say "Don't hurt him, he's an old man," he comes to his senses.

Theatric ingredients of story and substantiating production efforts being of the character that definitely have proved their entertainment and commercial value, the cast which will be seen is unique inasmuch as it presents new personalities with established players. Edward Arnold, lately in "Sutter's Gold" and "Meet Nero Wolfe," is starred. He is supported by Frances Farmer, currently in "Rythm on the Range"; Mary Nash, a newcomer from the stage; Walter Brennan, remembered particularly for his work in "Barbary Coast"; Mady Christians, seen in several MGM pictures; Charles Halton, Andrea Leeds, Clem Bevans, Edwin Maxwell and Agnes Anderson.

Exploitation potentialties represented by the story, character and cast as well as production features—all action occurring about lumber camps and realistic in conception of that atmosphere—are furthered by additional production credits. Besides her other screen contributions, Edna Ferber is a widely read author. Similarly the scenarists, Jane Murfin and Jules Furthman, have definite prestige. Director Howard Hawks' recent credits include "Barbary Coast," "Ceiling Zero" and the forthcoming "Road to Glory."

See America First

Domestic Comedy

Something more than the ordinary incentive to produce a wholesome family character series appealing to wide audiences seems to be inspiring the production of the American Family Series. Maybe a glance at the fan mail received may suggest the reason. One man who writes that he and his family who patronize a Bronx "insectorium" lauds it highly. Another, president of one of the country's biggest mercantile concerns, is equally enthusiastic as to the quality of entertainment provided.

At any rate, with the principal familiar characters again appearing, this third episode in the chain is typical all-family entertainment. In it, as the title indicates, the Jones family, desirous of a vacation but harassed because finances are lacking, attain their dream by taking off on an American tour via auto and trailer. As its predecessors did, "See America First" concentrates on the adventures, comic and seriodramatic, which befall the family and similar to the others brings in two youthful twin romances.

Based on a story by Robert Ellis and Helen Logan which is topical in character, the production is being directed by James Tinling, maker of the other two pictures.

Jed Prouty, Spring Byington and Florence Roberts again are father, mother and grandmother. The three younger children, William Mahan, June Carlson and George Ernest, again appear, as does Kenneth Howell in the big brother role he has had throughout the series. Shirley Deane and Dixie Dunbar, featured in "Bringing Up Father," are included. A newcomer, Tony Martin, radio favorite, will be seen. He is also in the forthcoming "Sing, Baby Sing."

Divided by Two

(Invincible)

Mystery Drama

Much of the action of this picture is backstage and upon the stage of a theatre. Thus its developments involve much of the atmosphere of a theatre and the staging of a show.

Though the story is essentially mystery drama, it has the expected romantic and comedy counterparts. It concerns itself with a writer of mystery plays who suddenly finds himself face to face with the necessity of solving an actual twin murder case. Technique adapted in writing, preparation of the screen play and in acting causes the author-sleuth's investigations to take on the character of a play. The method, with the principal suspect as the audience, is to reenact the crimes. The motive for each is established and the manner in which they were committed is portrayed. The writer-detective's methods force the culprit to acknowledge guilt. Departing from formula, the story is unique in its deceptive character inasmuch as until the anti-climax it is practically impossible to form an opinion as to the guilty person.

Based on an original story by Arthur T. Horman, directed by Phil Rosen and produced by Maury Cohen, the production has a cast made up of well-known personalities, including a group of veteran performers. Again departing from formula, all the players are featured. Reginald Denny is the fiction writing detective and, save Inez Courtney who teams with him in the romantic comedy phases of the story, the roles of the others are primarily dramatic. Among them are Evalyn Brent, Jack LaRue, John Marlowe, Claude King, Bryant Washburn, Robert Homans, Crauford Kent, Robert Frazer and Miki Morita.

I'd Give My Life

(Paramount)

Drama

For his first production for Paramount release, Richard A. Rowland has chosen a dramatic story in which he will present a cast composed almost exclusively of wellknown players. The screen play is adapted from the stage play "The Noose," a popular feature of about a decade ago. In 1928 Warner made it as a motion picture.

Though the story has a romantic content, it basically is drama. It concerns itself with a boy who killed in self defense. The man he killed was his father. The motive for the slaying was to save the man from scandal and to avert unhappiness for his mother, who subsequently married the governor. As the secret is known only to the boy killer and his mother, the hero accepts a death sentence rather than to talk and thereby set in motion influences that would save his life. But in true dramatic style incidents happen which compel the governor to grant a stay of execution, during which further melodramatic events take place through which happiness is brought to a woman to whom was visioned a lifetime of sorrow as is exoneration for the boy.

Directed by Edwin L. Marin, particularly adept in handling material similar to the character of this story, the film features Tom Brown, Guy Standing and Janet Beecher. They are the boy, the governor and his wife. Yet the value of screen names is not confined to this trio. Others who will be seen in parts ll important to the story's delineation are Frances Drake, Robert Gleckler, Helen Lowell, Paul Hurst, Charles Richman, Clarence Wilson, Thomas Jackson, Charles Judels, Robert Elliott, William Buress, Corbett Morris, Franklin Parker and James Eagles.

Man Without Fear

(Columbia)

Action, Romance, Drama

As western pictures seemingly continue to rise in popular and exhibitor favor, a continual effort is underway to present this form of entertainment on different themes. Generally the trend is to give them some sort of historical background. This production is no exception.

The early part of the forthcoming feature has a war atmosphere in which appear several exceptional action sequences of the Spanish-American War battle of San Juan Hill. These incidents serve to identify the characters, the relation they have to each other, and, tersely, form the basis for the ensuing western story development. As the initial prologue is unorthodox, the substantiating thrill action, romance-leavened motivation also is unusual. Typical of standard western themes, this moves to the tune of hard hitting, fast riding action adventure, in which two enemies, one a lawbreaker and the other a supporter of law and order, vie for supremacy, with the hand of a girl for the victor.

While the novel entertainment idea, in which all that has proved of value in the past as well as much that is unique is introduced, seems to be the outstanding exploitation quality, the production has other worthy merits. The story on which it is based was written by Zane Grey, whose many screen contributions are familiar to all. The screen play is by Harold Shumate, and direction is by Erle Kenton, who also appears in the film as the rough rider Theodore Roosevelt.

Jack Holt, currently in "San Francisco," is the leading player. Practically all the action rotates about him, Louise Henry and Guinn Williams. Others contributing to its effect are such players as Douglas Dumbrille, Gene Morgan, George McKay, Tom London and John McGuire.

LYNCH IS RETURNING TO PARAMOUNT OPERATION

Will Handle Company's Theatres in Florida Centers; R. E. Anderson Resigns as Para. Vice-Pres.

S. A. Lynch, head of the former Southern Enterprises theatre holdings, returns again to theatre operation this week with the approval by the Paramount board of directors of a five-year management contract under which Mr. Lynch will operate the company's theatres in Miami, Miami Beach, Coral Gables and Cocoanut Grove, Florida. Approximately 20 houses are involved in the operations.

The board also accepted the resignation of R. E. Anderson, financial vice-president of Paramount, who was a former vice-president of Electrical Research Products, Inc.

Paramount's contract with Mr. Lynch fixes his compensation on a percentage of the theatres' earnings, the company said. The theatres being turned over to Mr. Lynch's management have been operated heretofore by E. J. Sparks, although they have not been a part of the contract operations which Mr. Sparks has with Paramount. With the exception of the four towns turned over to Mr. Lynch, the Sparks operations remain unchanged.

Mr. Lynch built up the huge Southern Enterprises circuit which dominated the south for many years and which was finally acquired from him by Paramount. He then went into retirement and lived for a number of years on the French Riviera. He reentered Paramount following the company's bankruptcy in the capacity of adviser on theatre reorganizations to the Paramount bankruptcy trustees, a post which he held for more than two years. The present type of management and partnership operating contracts under which 950 of Paramount's 1,100 theatres are operating were devised by Mr. Lynch during the reorganization period.

He withdrew from Paramount about a years and and has been living in Miami where he was also interested in hotel operation.

Mr. Anderson's resignation came as a surprise to the trade, inasmuch as he had been reelected financial vice-president of the company only three weeks ago. The post of financial vice-president will be abolished, it was stated within Paramount, with the bulk of the duties of the office being absorbed by Walter B. Cokell, Paramount treasurer.

Mr. Anderson said that he has undisclosed negotiations under way which may be consummated in 30 to 60 days and which would involve his remaining in the film industry. He is not returning to Erpi. He stated that he "greatly appreciated" the confidence in him shown by the board in reelecting him to his post for another year, but felt that the resignation was advisable and that his leaving was an "amicable" one. He was not a member of the Paramount board.

Several Paramount theatre partners have been in New York to confer on new product with Y. Frank Freeman, head of operations, among them Martin J. Mullin and Samuel Pinanski, Robert B. Wilby, M. A. Lightman, Carl Banford, George W. Trendle, A. H. Blank and Ralph Branton. L. J. Ludwig and John Friedl are expected next week.

Meanwhile, in Hollywood, it was revealed that Harold Lloyd has signed a Paramount contract as an independent producer. The pact calls for the making of one picture a year but no information concerning the time limit was available. Francis Cockrell has been signed to prepare the first story on which production is expected to start shortly at the General Service studios.

60 to 70 Features Coming from Tobis

Tobis Corporation, largest single film enterprise in Germany, plans a total of 60 to 70 features next year. Adolf Engl, former president of the association of German theatre owners, has joined the Tobis board of directors.

Negotiations are underway between Dr. Homan, Hungarian Minister of Culture, and the German Government on the development of an agreement on films which would facilitate the exchange of domestic pictures between the two countries.

Suits Against Union Must Go to Trial

A motion made by Joseph Basson, president of Local 306, International Association of Theatrical Stage Employes, to have eight independent theatre owners amend their complaints in suits filed for an aggregate amount of $650,000 for damages, has been denied in the New York Supreme Court. The court expressed no opinion, but decided that the matter should go to trial.

Grand National Perfects Setup

Grand National's distribution setup has been completed 100 per cent in the United States, Edward L. Alperson, president, said as he arrived in New York from Hollywood this week.

With 52 features scheduled, of which eight will be westerns and eight melodramas, the first three months' releases will be announced next month. The initial attraction will be ready for release around the middle or latter part of August.

The pictures will be sold in a series of groups as scheduled by the various producers it was stated by Carl Leserman, general sales manager.

Among the producers lined up are B. F. Zeidman, who will make a minimum of seven and a maximum of 10; George Hirliman, scheduled for at least nine; Douglas McLean, six; Boris Petrov, four. James Cagney will appear in two or three. Contracts for five additional producers are now being signed and will be announced next week.

Various studios on the coast will be used, among them being Talisman, RKO Pathe, the Fox Westwood and others.

Releases after September will be at the rate of one a week. The first will be the color production, "Devil on Horseback," with Lili Damita, and "Crusaders in White." Mr. McLean's first Grand National picture will be "23 Hours Leave." Boris Petrov's first will be "Hat's Off." B. F. Zeidman has completed "Crusaders in White," and will next make "In His Steps" with Eric Linden and Cecilia Parker. He has also scheduled "The Five Little Peppers."

Changes in the distribution set-up of Grand National include the appointment of Bradley Fish as San Francisco branch manager. Jack Kaplan has taken over the Buffalo office; William Shartin will manage the Cleveland branch, and Russell Borg will open a GN exchange in Kansas City.

Mr. Alperson was to leave this week for England where his plans call either for setting up a Grand National distribution system or making a deal with a local company to handle the 52 pictures. The Grand National president denied he was going over to acquire any English films. He will be gone a few weeks.

French Exhibitors Meet New Laws In 10-Point Plan

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

Three hundred French exhibitors have adopted unanimously a 10-point plan by which the future activity of exhibition in the country will be governed. The meeting was called to plan a course of action based on the new laws, rules and agreements affecting workers which were adopted following the recent French strikes.

Present were members of the two large exhibitor organizations, the Exhibitors' Syndicate and the Chambre Syndicale, as well as a number of exhibitors not affiliated with any organization.

The resolutions adopted by the meeting were:

1. Approval of the agreement signed between the two exhibitor organizations and the Cinema Workers' Trade Unions.
2. Expression of confidence in the exhibitor delegates who will work with the union representatives in the establishment of new employment contracts.
3. To seek to further the plan of a complete unification of industry activity, to include production, distribution, exportation and all technical phases.
4. To effect, immediately if possible, an affiliation of the Chambre Syndicale of French Exhibitors, the French Syndicate of Exhibitors and the regional federations with the Union of the French Chambres Syndicales of Motion Picture Theatres.
5. Adherence to this union by all exhibitors who are not members of any organization.
6. Immediate action looking toward equalization of taxation. Exhibitors demand tax rates which are no higher than those assessed on other types of business, and will fight for the elimination of special taxes on entertainment.
7. The formation of an "inter-syndical" committee which will be actively in charge of the tax reduction fight. The committee will be headed by Raymond Lussiez.
8. Promise by all exhibitors that admissions will not be increased if the fight for the limitation of special entertainment taxation is successful.
9. Confirmation of previous resolutions on admission prices and overbuilding.
10. Immediate elimination of the so-called "billets de faveur," tickets obtainable in various stores which entitle the bearer to a substantial reduction from the established admission price at designated theatres.

Another meeting of exhibitors is to be held soon.

RAMSAYE WARNS OF SCREEN PROPAGANDA

Trouble Makers Would Make Motion Picture Instrument of Dissention, Bucknell Is Told

"Beyond all other great industries the motion picture is interested in peace, international amity—no industry has so much to lose by wars. And yet those who make war, foster bitter nationalisms, create hatred and selfish causes, disturbances of organized society, are endlessly striving to make the screen an instrument in the service of dissention."

That in essence was the message that Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, delivered in a lecture in the course on "Propaganda" at the Bucknell University summer school at Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, Monday.

The course is under the direction of Professor Hardwood L. Childs, of Princeton, and managing editor of the newly founded Public Opinion Quarterly to appear this autumn. Other speakers on the course include Elisha Hanson, attorney for the American Newspaper Publishers Association; Edward L. Bernays, of New York, public relations counsel, and Lawrence Westbrook, assistant administrator of the Works Progress Administration.

Points to Pressures from Abroad

In his discussion Mr. Ramsaye pointed out that only in America is the screen even approximately a free medium, and that the pressures of strife-torn and dictator-ruled foreign states were exerting adverse influences even here.

"The international success of the American picture has made all the world problems also problems of the organized industry. What happens today in the Balkans or on the Bosphorus is something for Hollywood to start worrying about tomorrow.

"Also with the eyes of the world upon the motion picture, international as an art, as merchandise, in its personnel and even to a growing degree in its corporate structures, the screen is made sensitive to and responsible to far too many authorities.

"A condition has developed under which we see the Secretary of State of the United States having to discuss the contents of a newsreel in terms of foreign diplomacy.

Problem of Its Patrons

"Never before were there so many persons about, some of them persons of power and influence, burdened with messages and special causes. Practically all of them want to enlist the motion picture and to get attention on the screen of the theatre because that is where the eyes of the millions are focused. An even greater number of persons, while in doubt about what they want the screen to say, are very sure of what they do not want it to say. The result is a rising tide of restrictive measures in most every other civilized or semi-civilized land in the world. The screen has been made substantially an instrument of the government in all the dictator states.

"If the screen is to hold for itself what freedom it still enjoys in America it will have to defend itself with zeal—and that is a problem of its patrons."

No Detroit theatres will be admitted.

Girl's Dormitory

(20th Century - Fox)

Dramatic Romance

Any picture introducing a widely exploited new personality is naturally a matter of interest to exhibitors and patrons. As such "Girl's Dormitory," featuring Simone Simon, becomes an object of public curiosity and showmanship attention. The newcomer evinces definite possibilities. In appearance, Miss Simon is not similar to any other player now featured. She possesses a distinctive and attractive personality. Though her diction is marked by a slight French accent, it is not unpleasing. She demonstrates a flair for both drama and comedy. The producing company handled her debut intelligently. While she is continually the center of attention, her initial appearance is aided greatly by Herbert Marshall and particularly Ruth Chatterton, who makes noticeable personal sacrifices to assure the girl of an auspicious start. Additionally the capable supporting cast devoted its efforts to helping her. Handled by showmen in a judicious manner that averts the temptation to become too enthusiastic and promise too much, the picture should serve as a favorable beginning for Miss Simon's American screen career.

Continentally locaied and atmosphered, the motivation is a dramatic study in infatuated adolescent romance versus mature judgment. The main setting is an exclusive and rigidly disciplined German girls' school. Actually it is a clear-cut demonstration of how impetuous and menacing youthful ardor can triumph over enduring and affectionate devotion. Accused of writing a passionate love letter, pupil Simon, though defended by Marshall and Ruth Chatterton, is persecuted into hysteria by Constance Collier and J. Edward Bromberg, and confesses she had Marshall, the school principal, in mind when she wrote it. She confesses to Chatterton, who long has borne a silent love for Marshall. The child never knew of this. When she hears janitor John Qualen upbraiding Marshall to Chatterton following the principal's succumbing to Simon's burning kisses, she realizes what a tragedy she has brought to her friend and counsellor Chatterton. To effect a remedy, Simon tells the swept-off-his-feet Marshall that she does not love him, that she lied when she said she did. Graduation follows, Marshall gives the class kindly and practical advice, directing his remarks pointedly to Simone. The locale shifts to a Paris cafe. Simone refuses her escort's invitation to dance. She hears a voice. It is Marshall's, and she falls into his arms.

The picture is no ordinary dramatic triangle romance. Nor is it an ordinary child in arms-old man love affair. Basically, it is mental, romantic and dramatic conflict. Sympathy rests in Miss Chatterton. If it were an ordinary love story, the heroine would be a villain as that character is usually accepted. Miss Chatterton is the one who stands aside and makes the sacrifice just as silently as she treasured her dream of marriage to Marshall. In this departure from formula, there is a novelty and difference that makes possible two kinds of interest stimulating campaigns. A drive can be made to center attraction on Simon if believed wise. Another can take the theme of the story for its premise. Most effective, however, would seem to be a combination of both.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese Theatre following presentation of "Suzy." Audience reaction to the theme and to Simone Simon was favorable. t did not seem to expect too much of her, but was sympathetic to and appreciative of her efforts. It was distinctly noticeable, however, that the audience had a clear understanding of the cooperation and help that Marshall and Ruth Chatterton were giving her.

Hot Money

(Warners)

Comedy

Discovery of a substitute for gasoline, long a favorite objective of get-rich-quick schemers and dreamers, is presented as an accomplished fact and made the basis of a stock-promotion campaign, exclusively for comedy purposes, in this swift, coherent and sufficiently convincing fabrication. Enacted by players unfamiliar to electric-lighted billing, save Joseph Cawthorn, the picture relies upon speed, comedy, dialogue and situation for attraction power.

Mr. Cawthorn is cast as the business men persuaded to back the stock-selling venture and shares prominence in the cast with Ross Alexander, who portrays the glib promoter, formerly a get-rich-quick artist of the Wallingford school here engaged in his first honest enterprise and calling to his assistance his aides in previous shady undertakings. Beverly Roberts is the girl in the love story, Andrew Tombes is the promoter's first assistant, and Paul Greatz is the chemist whose discovery gives rise to the action.

As the story goes, eccentric Dr. David has discovered a substitute for gasoline and Max Dourfuss is persuaded to finance its marketing, an operation undertaken by Chick Randall, fresh out of the penitentiary by reason of previous dishonest stock promotions. Randall fits out a lavish office, employs among others, Grace Lane, and sells $300,000 worth of stock on the basis of an option to buy Dr. David's formulae. When investors and investigators demand proof that the company owns the product represented it turns out that Dr. David has vanished. Randall has fallen in love with Miss Lane and she has invested her father's savings in the company. He staves off a test of his representations until, when search for Dr. David has failed and all seems lost, the eccentric inventor returns in time to substantiate the company claims and bring about a happy ending.

The Three Maxims

(Wilcox-GFD, London)

Melodrama

This subject offers definite selling values in a final scene picturing a trapeze act in mid-air as the background of a triangle drama involving the men and girl of the troupe. Crazed with jealousy, one of the men intends to let his successful rival fall to his death. Threats are whispered as the performers' figures fly through the air to the applause of an unsuspecting audience; the doomed man tries to keep the girl up to her act. In the moment of greatest danger she faints and the would-be murderer swings his enemy back to the trapeze to her rescue.

This scene is admirably produced, directed and acted. Shots of an actual trapeze performance are most deftly cut with closeups of the leads, and the episode is likely to put over the picture with almost any audience. Exploitation angles suggest themselves in connection with this scene.

Also box-office values are the names of Tullio Carminati and Leslie Banks. Anna Neagle is shapely and convincing as the girl athlete, and acts with real intelligence. The backstage atmosphere of the whole production has its own appeal.

The girl Pat, Toni an Italian, and Mac a Scotsman, are "The Three Maxims," a high trapeze act with a small French circus. They are seen and engaged by the American manager of a big theatre in Paris. Mac, in love with Pat but afraid to speak to her, asks Toni to propose for him. Pat's response makes it clear that she thinks Toni to be speaking for himself and that she loves him.

Mac believes he has been double-crossed, gets drunk, and stabs Toni in the arm. Pat, in order that the show may go on, pretends that she loves Mac and promises to marry him. He accidentally learns the truth. While the act is in progress, without a net, he whispers threats to Toni, while swinging in mid-air, and tries to let him fall. The audience thinks the near-accident is an exceptionally clever piece of work. Pat wants to end the performance, but Toni compels her to go on.

When the big moment of the act is reached, Pat senses that Mac is about to let Toni crash down. She faints. Mac swings Toni back to the trapeze on which she is precariously resting. The act finishes to uproarious applause. The conclusion suggests that Mac has been purged of his jealousy and the "Three Maxims" will continue.

Over and above the realism and intense suspense value of the big scene, the film has that attractive backstage atmosphere, some good crowd scenes and very fair humorous relief. Its action values make it audience material, apart from the special appeal of Tullio Carminati to women patrons. He looks good in acrobat's fleshlings and the role can be talked about as one very different from those in which he previously has been seen.

Trade-shown, Piccadilly Theatre, at night. Well received by an invited audience. Undoubtedly the trapeze act climax got them all and got them good. The women fell heavily for Tullio.

Anna

(Amkino)

Russian Drama

A topical Russian drama with the inevitable injection of Communism as the predominant theme, this latest importation from Moscow is by way of being more melodrama than drama, with the acting at times effective, at other times obvious and stilted. Inadequate English titles are superimposed on the film.

The story concerns the love of Anna, loyal Communist Party worker, for Pavel, a wanderer from Siberia, of whom little is known. Yasha, in love with Anna, and like her a party worker, sponsors Pavel, obtaining for him a position in a machine shop and presenting him as a candidate for membership in the party. Pavel, in truth an enemy of the party, resorts to sabotage when suspected by Anna, and emerges as a hero in her eyes because of his trickery.

Anna and Pavel are married and Yasha, heartbroken, leaves for Siberia, in the region where Pavel was born. Pavel steals Anna's party card, and Anna is expelled from the party. Yasha returns from Siberia and exposes Pavel as a traitor. Pavel is led off to whatever fate is awaiting him.

Western

A fast-moving action picture, this should please the western fans. A G-Man angle gives the picture an up to date story but all the trappings of the oldtime cowboy are retained. Interspersed are fighting and shooting, the denouement arriving after a pitched battle in the streets of the town.

Tim McCoy plays the lead with assistance from Lois January, Ted Adams, J. Frank Glendon and Ralph Byrd. Concentration on combination of the western locale, the star and the G-Man story content appears to be the most acceptable selling method to adopt, with a spotting on the theatre's action days.

McCoy, a former government man, while roaming the range is of assistance to a stranded medicine show. He joins the show in the capacity of an expert pistol and rifle shot. In one of the towns on the route McCoy meets an old G-man comrade, still in the service, who is after a bank-robbing gang.

The Federal man is killed and McCoy is granted permission to continue the chase. Disguised as a Mexican, McCoy, with the aid of Lois January, sweetheart of the slain officer, learns of a planned bank holdup. The stage is set and when the gang arrives it is met with bullets. After some plain and fancy shooting the robbers surrender.

Master Will Shakespeare

(MGM)

Very Good

A very interesting short subject on some of the highlights in the life of William Shakespeare. this picture is the first of a new series to be known as "Milestones of the Theatre Miniature." It is well produced and directed. Anthony Kemble Cooper as Shakespeare gives a thoroughly convincing performance. He is shown on his way to London by foot, taking care of horses, as a prompter in the Blackfriars Theatre, amending others' plays and finally watching scenes from his own. Romeo and Juliet as produced 200 years ago and also scenes from the forthcoming motion picture version are a study in contrast. Running time, 10 minutes.

Screen Snapshots No. 11

Warner and others of the English colony as players; afternoon tea, players at work on the various sets, and a costume party in honor of Jackie Coogan with a host of actors and actresses making an appearance, are scenes of interest. Running time, 10 minutes.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

St. Cloud, Minn.

Dear Herald:

When we left Bemidji we made a resolve, regardless that the mercury stood at 102 and there was a hot south wind, to conduct ourself like a good boy. We stuck to this pretty good until we got to Cass Lake and stopped to see Charlie Perrizo of the Lyric theatre, and from then on we won't have a thing to say. Charlie wanted us to stay over and go fishing with him, but we told him we were a working man and couldn't do it. (Doggone the doggone luck, anyhow.) And he said, "But you will have to be awfully careful," and we asked why, so he said, "Well, those fish are so big that if you don't watch out they will yank you right out of the boat into the lake. I have been yanked out several times myself. What do you think of that?" And we replied, "Well, far be it from us to question anything you say about those fish, for we are something of a liar ourself." He missed us with the first chair.

Well, anyhow, when you go through Cass Lake be sure to stop and go to the Lyric theatre and you will be surprised to find as nice a theatre as the Lyric in so small a town. Then you should meet Charlie, too, but don't talk to him about fishing.

When you get to Deer River don't go and eat where we did. There was plenty of it, such as it was, and as the little boy said, "It was plenty good enough, what there was of it," and they only charged us 75 cents for it, but don't think the town is too small for a theatre, as we did, but look up the Lyceum theatre—you can find it there some place—and you will be surprised at this one also.

We got the manager on the phone and he came down to the theatre to meet us and we had a very lovely visit with him, and we have put Deer River on our visiting list for all future occasions.

When you drive 50 miles through the heat and jackoak scrub brush to meet a guy and then find that he is out of town, be calm, boy, be calm, for that is one of the vicissitudes of the trade ("vicissitudes" is a good word, in case you don't know what it means).

That was the case when we drove clear down to Cloquet to meet Bill Miller, who operates the "Leb" theatre, and found that he had gone to Rice Lake, Wis., and all points east, and his wife was uncertain when he would be back (some people never tell their wives when they will be back), but we had a nice visit with Mrs. Miller and her lady friend, however, so we didn't miss Bill so very much, for we were out in the open air court over the canopy of the theatre and it was the coolest place we have found in Minnesota, and we didn't care so very much if he never came back. But that's just the way it is with that bohunk, if he finds out that we are coming he strikes out for parts unknown.

Down at Milaca we met up with another surprise. We called upon the manager of the Casino theatre and he didn't show us any violence when we called. We also met his son and they were both busy getting ready for the coming show. Here is one place where we found the theatre manager busy.

The town was named Milaca, probably because it is quite close to Milaca Lake, and Milaca Lake is where they go to catch a lot of wall-eyed pike, and other fish, but they are not as large as those fish up at Cass Lake.

Then we drove down to Foley and met Mr. Bettendorf and family who operate the Opera House, and we spent about two very pleasant hours with them; in fact, we stayed longer than we should.

There were two young ladies there and they asked me if we had ever been in Hollywood and we told them we had. One of them said she had always wanted to go out to Hollywood. That wasn't so very strange because about all young ladies have a desire to go to Hollywood, and that's probably because of the glamor that surrounds the screen, and the most of which is a lot of horseradish, but the girls don't know it.

Thousands of young girls have gone out there with the hope of getting on the screen and thousands of Papas have had to send them money to come back home on. Hollywood is a good place for some to go to and it is also a mighty good place for a lot of others to stay away from. There has been many a young girl gone to Hollywood to get on the screen who would have been a whole lot better off at home with mother. Some people out in the studios are awfully nice folks. Well, we had a lovely time visiting these folks and they invited us to come back and see them again some time, which might indicate that their heads were not working just right. We hope we may do it.

New Ulm, Minn.

When we left St. Cloud the mercury was monkeying around the 100 mark. At three o'clock it stood at 108 in its bare feet and a hot wind was blowing that would cook an egg. Doggone the doggone luck, anyhow. Then we came down to Litchfield to see C. F. Schnree of the Unique theatre and we found him in his car just ready to leave town, so we had but a short visit with him, but that short visit was a very pleasant one.

Then we came down to Hutchinson to see E. S. Noreen of the Rex theatre. We are mighty glad we did, for we had one of the most pleasant visits we have had since we have been on the road.

You know it is a pleasure to meet such people as Mr. Noreen; he makes you feel right at home and he doesn't try to impress you with the thought that he is the guiding brains of the moving picture industry. He wants you to believe that there are others who know a whole lot more about it than he does. We have met some who didn't assume that attitude, and they are generally those who pick up the papers and wield the broom around the show house.

If we should ever get within driving distance of Hutchinson again we are going to drive over there to see Mr. Noreen, darned if we don't.

This room is so hot that we'll betcha they could cook corned beef and cabbage in it right now. Are you following us, Gertie? Well, stick close to us, for we are going to reveal something to you that may sound astounding. We are heading April Shower for Neligh, Neb., U. S. A., and we are going to stay there until this hot spell is broken, if it isn't until December 25, 1936, and when we get home, and if it is still this hot, we wouldn't drive 40 rods to see our grandmother sick in bed with a stummick-ache. No, sir, by gosh, we wouldn't.

STATE SALES TAXES FOUND FACTORS

has been the condition for the past few years. Even though approximately $125,000 was spent in remodeling the first-run Loew's State and Loew's Orpheum, several thousands put out on refinishing parts of the de luxe 4,332-seat Metropolitan, and new sound and reseating jobs down on the Keith's Memorial and RKO Boston, these premier spots have not jumped their tariffs.

What with the competition by day of horse racing, baseball and the battle by night with pari-mutuel dog races and the perennial beano, theatres are thinking more of turning to premiums of various sorts than of turning up the price scales.

Theatre tickets are lower in Boston, if anything. The RKO Boston, for example, recently went off vaudeville with a resultant price cut. The Orpheum has also been off vaudeville for some months. Now word is that the Metropolitan, which has produced its individual shows for years, will drop stage shows, which doubtless means a coincident price drop.

No Change Expected In Charlotte Prices

Managers in the Charlotte, N. C., territory expect no change in admission prices for some time, certainly not in an upward direction. The last change was made two years ago and seems to be still working in a manner satisfactory to both exhibitors and patrons.

The average price at the two first run houses, the Carolina and State, is 30 and 25 cents, respectively, while the two second run theatres, the Strand and Criterion, charge 15 cents, both matinee and night.

As previously reported in the HERALD, the Wilby-Kincey interests recently acquired the Criterion and now operate four houses without opposition. There is a rumor that at least one of the two second-run houses may increase its price from 15 to 20 cents.

Cincinnati Exhibitors Want Higher Prices

Admission prices in the Cincinnati territory have been constant for the past year or more, and, according to present indications, are likely to remain so, despite a feeling on the part of many film men that prices should be raised. This feeling has found articulate expression among a limited group of suburban exhibitors, who have been quietly discussing among themselves the advisability of raising prices in the fall, to be more in line with the advances obtaining or about to be inaugurated in other lines. Whether this discussion will be crystallized into action is, at present, quite problematical. In fact, it might be said that the possibility is considered remote in view of the existing drouth and the ultimate effect it might have on the theatre business when, as and if the full extent of the reaction is felt by the public later on.

A majority of the suburban and neighborhood houses, particularly those in the outlying districts, operate only in the evenings. Matinees, except on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, have proved unprofitable, due to the first runs downtown drawing heavily from the suburban areas, with the bigger pictures being held over for extended runs. This, of course, accordingly affects the availability for the subsequents and is, therefore, a contributing factor in the part-time operation.

The subsequent runs, with exception of a few of the very small houses, charge an average of 25 cents. The excepted houses mentioned charge 10 cents.

RKO dominates the downtown first run situation. The ace houses maintain a 35- and 42-cent scale, with the 1,000-seat Family prices being scaled to 15 and 25 cents. Except for this latter house, where prices have not materially changed, the present admissions compare with an average of 40 and 50 cents charged about a year ago when the straight 10 per cent admission tax was in effect through a legislative act, and which the theatres passed on to the public. Subsequently, when this impost was suspended, and afterwards repealed, in favor of the three per cent tax on theatre grosses, in keeping with the three per cent retail sales tax, the major scales were changed to the present rate of 35 and 42 cents, which, in effect, constituted a reduction of the approximate equivalent of the difference in the tax rates.

In the Dayton sector prices are scaled at 25 and 30 cents for matinees and 35 and 40 cents evenings, with pictures usually "played on the nose" on or very shortly after national release dates. The subsequents charge on an average of 25 cents. There has been no material change in prices during the past year or so.

In Columbus, which, incidentally, is badly overseated in the downtown district, the first-run prices are and have been for the past few years, scaled at 30 and 40 cents for matinees and nights. Subsequent charge from 10 to 25 cents, the majority of them double featuring at least part of each week.

Both first-run and subsequent-run exhibitors say prices should be higher but they hesitate to make the change.

In only a single situation, Hamilton, have prices been reduced. This is at the Paramount, a Southio unit, where the evening scale dropped from 40 to 35 cents, with the likelihood of the cut being restored in the fall. Matinee price of 25 cents was not changed.

Few Reductions In Cleveland Area

With the exception of a few houses located in highly competitive situations, the admission price range of motion picture theatres in Cleveland is practically the same this year as it has been for the past three or four years.

These exceptions cover fewer than a half-dozen theatres which have reduced their prices from 25 cents to 15 cents. Another small group of subsequent run houses, playing last run in their respective zones, dropped from 15 to 10 cents when the NRA code went out. The reductions in both classifications were due more to clearance and competition than to business conditions.

First run downtown major circuit houses all maintain a single feature policy and are holding to their present admission scales of 42 cents top for straight pictures and 60 cents top for a combination stage and picture show. This price includes the Ohio tax of three per cent on total sales, and the 10 per cent federal tax.

The RKO Palace is the only Cleveland house with an established combination policy and a set top price of 60 cents. Loew's State, regularly a straight picture house, with a 42 cent top price, boosts its top to 60 cents whenever it offers a stage show.

The only other shift in downtown prices is in the case of a continuous run. When a picture is moved from Loew's State to Loew's Stillman for an extended engagement, it is shown at the scale of the State theatre and not at the regular Stillman scale which is 35 cents top as against the 42 cent top at the State.

There is no agitation in Cleveland at this time for a boost in first run admission prices. Subsequent theatre owners claim there is no talk of higher prices in theatres of their classifications until the average box office quality of pictures is improved.

Both distributors and exhibitors in Cleveland agree that the present admission scales are in line with today's business conditions.

Exhibitors operating first run subsequent houses feel there should be a greater price discrepancy between their established 30 cent top and the downtown first run top of 42 cents. They do not believe in lowering their scale to increase this discrepancy, however. They would rather see the downtown price increased.

No Change Is Expected in Denver

Admission prices in Denver range from a dime in grinds to 50 cents top in one of the Harry Huffman houses, the Denver, first run. Others of the first runs, with the exception of the Center, charge a 40-cent top. Most of the houses in Denver have a lower rate for the balcony at night than for the main floor, although the Denver gets 50 cents for balcony as well as the main floor. Most of the neighborhoods use a 25-cent top, although some charge as low as 15 cents.

Exhibitors in Denver think prices are pretty much stabilized and predict little or no change in the near future. The principal change in the past year has been a general lowering of top prices in first-runs from 50 cents to 40 cents, with the exception of the Denver.

Increased Admissions Help Iowa Grosses

HARRY BRANDT URGES N. Y. ADMISSION RAISE

Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York, Wednesday urged every New York circuit and independent theatre to increase admissions by 5 cents as a move to return at least partially to pre-depression prices from the present average level of 17 cents per admission prevailing in New York and called the lowest average price in the country.

TREND FOUND UPWARD IN MICHIGAN

sions took a general drop, the survey of business returns as made by the film companies and the consensus of opinion of Iowa film men is that there is a 25 per cent increase of business partly due to an increase in admission prices.

The Des Moines houses with the Roosevelt and Des Moines showing identical runs with 41 cents for the evening, 36 cents for the afternoon and 26 cents for the couple of hours between the opening of the theatre and two o'clock, and the Paramount with 36 cents evening, 26 cents balcony at night, 26 cents matinee until 6:30, 26 cents until two in the afternoon, top the admissions in Iowa territory.

There seems no indication of increase of admission price now. Occasional pictures have shown at advanced prices. Des Moines never paid the $5.00 prices for road shows that Eric Von Stroheim's or Rudy Vallee's were able to take in Omaha.

Sam Elman, owner and manager of the Grand Theatre, Des Moines, has operated the east Des Moines house for 22 years. Admissions have stayed about the same for this house. And Mr. Elman persists that business is always bad. Maybe it is right now with temperatures over 100 degrees.

M. A. Fauver, owner of the theatre at Victor, Iowa, which seats 200 and has been under his charge the past few months, also owner of the Brooklyn, Iowa, theatre, seating 400 which he has had for 12 years, gives the average admission for theatres of somewhat different types, but playing for the same admission. Adults at both houses pay 26 cents with 25½ cents for the theatre and one-half cent for state tax on theatre admissions. The children pay 10 cents.

Iowa City, college town of largest dimensions in Iowa, has the highest admissions of a city of its size. It ranks with Cedar Rapids, Waterloo, Davenport, Rock Island, Ill., with a 36 cents admission.

A survey showing a 25 per cent increase of business in the past year and one-half was attributed to be more largely due to increase of admission prices in a slow upward trend than in a decided increase of theatre patrons in number.

Theatre men seem to feel they will meet opposition if they speak of increase in theatre admission prices; there is some opposition to double feature programs aside from the feeling that they may forerun an increase of price. Iowa theatres came to the showing of double features much after other locations.

Almost every theatre has a bargain night of some kind one day of the week. All Des Moines houses contribute to one of two lineups for weekly Bank Nites and theatres over the state show every variety of Family Night or Bargain show.

Trend Is Upward In Detroit Sector

Returning prosperity, improved business conditions, and better pictures are the fundamental reasons given for the upward trend of prices in Detroit.

Although no further changes are now contemplated at the large first-run houses downtown, the past seven months saw prices advance at the Fox theatre from 25c morning, 35c afternoon, and 55c evening, to 30c morning, 40c afternoon and 65c evening.

Detroit's United Michigan and United Artists theatres also raised admissions, three months ago, to 35c and 40c afternoons and 55c and 65c evenings. At the leading second-run downtown houses (the Madison, for instance) and the larger "deluxe" neighborhood houses (like the Fisher and Riviera) prices remain at 25c until six for all seats, and 25c for balcony, 35c for main floor after six. Admissions at second-run neighborhood theatres of the better class, of which the Northwest, Ramona, Cinderella, Hollywood, Birmingham, Alger and Annex are typical, range from 20c to 35c.

Allied Theatres, of which there are a dozen in Detroit and four outstate, report that except for a few instances where Saturday and Sunday prices at subsequent run houses were raised from 15c to 20c, the general scale remains the same as a year ago. Indications that the general trend is up, and that Allied anticipates price advances, are revealed by the fact that a questionnaire was sent last week to all Allied theatre owners (in Michigan) asking the views of each on the subject.

Outstate, the trend likewise is up, according to W. S. Butterfield Theatres management, which operates 96 theatres outside of Detroit. Prices at Butterfield houses have been moved upward on an average of 5c to 10c, and although nothing definite in the way of further advances is available at this time, it is expected that Butterfield prices will parallel the upward trend. Admissions at leading first-run houses outstate average 35c; second-run, 25c; subsequent-run, 15c and 20c.

Occasionally, as with "The Great Ziegfeld" and "San Francisco," prices at Butterfield's first-run houses are advanced for big pictures from 35c to 40c.

Fair Profit, So Why Change? Says Houston

"Why kill the goose that lays the golden egg?" ask Houston exhibitors when price raises are mentioned.

Prices have not been changed in Houston theatres since the stage show era "before the depression," or about five years ago. At that time, in the Publix theatres where stage units were a weekly feature, top price was 60 cents.

Since that time, the Publix (now Interstate Theatres, Inc.), Metropolitan and Majestic have had a price range of 25 to 50 cents, Loew's State 25 to 40 cents and the Kirby with split week programs 25 to 35 cents.

All subsequent-run theatres in the downtown and best residential sections are 15 matinee and 25 cents night prices, and other small subsequent runs in the suburbs charge 5 and 15 cents.

No indication of price raises is seen in Houston or East Texas, according to Houston exhibitors. All theatres are well attended, and make a fair profit.

"The fact that 'San Francisco' played three weeks, with a bigger third week than a second, grossing a total take of $30,000 for the three weeks, proves that business is good in Houston when the pictures are good," one exhibitor explained. It might be added that the same week "San Francisco" grossed $14,000 as compared with the $7,000 normal take at Loew's State, the Schmeling-Louis fight pictures pulled $15,000 at the Majestic.

"We'll let well enough alone, as I see it," this exhibitor continued. "Prices are reasonable at Houston theatres, and we make a fair profit."

Slight Advance Seen For Indianapolis

Hints are appearing—not very big and not very bold—that admission charges in Indianapolis may advance a little late this fall.

Whether all houses will join in an advance, whether the first-runs alone will make it, or some of the neighborhoods only, can't be said with certainty. Apparently none of the managers have come to a decision yet, particularly because of the widespread belief that Indianapolis theatregoers won't hold still for higher prices.

If admissions go up they'll represent the first change in six years. In 1930 the first-runs chopped admissions down to a 25c-40c level. The old standard, 35c-50c, had been in force many years and was departed from when the full force of the depression hit this part of the country, about a year after the Wall Street crash. Neighborhoods with 25c top and occasional forays into 35c nights receded then in many instances to a 20c top. Now the de luxe neighborhoods have a quarter top.

A year ago or so, one or two dime houses were in operation among the downtown grind lineup. Now the "grinds" mostly have a 15c to all basis. The neighborhoods, however, stick pretty generally to a 10c for children charge.

In the first-runs (Apollo, Circle, Indiana, Loew's and Lyric) the tariff is 25c to 6 P. M., 40c thereafter, with 25c to 2 P. M. on Sundays, 40c thereafter. The Apollo and the Lyric charge 30c for balcony seats in the evenings; the other houses make no differentiation.

Because wages generally are low in Indianapolis and expenses are high in comparison, the managers tend to look askance at the possibility of a rise in prices, although several hold that even a slight increase would make them all breathe more easily. It seems fairly well established that thousands of Indianapolis theatregoers never step foot into a house that's going to extract more than 15c from their wallets.

Somewhat in contrast to the Indianapolis situation is that of the small cities through central Indiana, where 35c is the average top.

Economic conditions are better in the small cities than in Indianapolis. They benefit more

OUTSIDE COMPETITION GREAT IN BOSTON AREA

Theatre owners in the Greater Boston area are finding outside competition stronger than ever this summer, now that horse racing has been firmly established in the state of Massachusetts by means of pari-mutuel betting. Dog races and the perennial beano are still offering their share of competition and theatres are thinking more than ever of turning to premiums of various sorts as a means of maintaining or increasing patronage.

The height of the horse racing season in the Bay State is looming before showmen and all efforts now are being turned toward meeting this latest problem.

The stamp of exhibitors' approval

When we inaugurated the new Paramount Advertising Material Rental Service a few weeks ago, we thought we were on the right track. We believed this was more than an experiment, that it was the one efficient way to handle a major service problem.

But, frankly, we never had any idea that you were going to eat it up the way you have. Naturally, the only way we can tell you how delighted we are is by increasing the service, adding more features. And that we are doing right now. So get in touch with your local exchange and make certain you are getting everything that goes with the new Paramount plan.

Kansas City Prices Holding Their Own

Admission prices in this territory are holding their own. Compared to the similar season a year ago, the price level has changed very little. It ranges from 35 cents top, in the territory, to a low of 15 cents. Children, as always, are a dime.

Only in a few spots have showmen cut the admission prices, these being smaller situations. In the city proper there has been practically no price cutting. In these few instances, it is pointed out, it is only for the short summer season.

Both circuit and independent exhibitors are not inclined to juggle their admission prices at the present time. Despite intensely hot weather and dry conditions throughout this area, business has held up. This is attributed partly to air-cooled houses.

Immediate prospect of any raise or reduction in prices is slight. What will come after the new season's product is released was not made known because exhibitors have not yet made up their minds.

Milwaukee Frowns On Moves Upward

Several efforts to effect increases in Milwaukee county have failed to take and prices remain about the same as a year or more ago. The average for downtown first-run continues at 25 cents until 6 P. M. and 40 cents thereafter. Evening subsequent houses' admissions average about 20 cents.

Effective Easter Sunday of this year, an agreement was reached by the 77 exhibitors in Milwaukee county providing for the elimination of early admissions on Sundays and holidays, with the top admission price to be charged the entire day. This resulted in an average increase of five cents in admission prices.

Although several hundred dollars was spent in newspaper advertising announcing the new admission policy, the agreement lasted only about six weeks.

The advanced price policy had resulted in decreasing business at the box-office. Various exhibitors stood ready to give the new schedule a fair trial. Others maintained they were unable to withstand the drain for any great length of time.

Minneapolis Theatres Hold to Old Rates

Admission prices at Minneapolis theatres have remained about the same throughout the year with occasional changes when first-run houses add stage shows.

The Minnesota, Publix house, went to a 65 cent top with the Marx Brothers stage show here (July 17th), otherwise 25 cents to 1 P. M., 40 to 5 P. M. and 55 to closing. The change there was from 40 to 55 top, recently inaugurated. Children's tickets are 25 cents at all time.

The Orpheum (Singer house) sticks to 40 cent top except with stage show, no change from last year. It will not change this fall unless all houses agree.

The Century (Publix house) has been turned into a second-run theatre with 15 until 1 P. M. and 25 till close.

The Lyric (Publix) sticks to 20 cents up to 1 P. M. and 25 to the close, all year 'round.

Pantages remains at 15 cents all the time.

The Palace gets 15 at all times, tossing in an occasional vaudeville show at the same price. The only change is on Saturday and Sunday after 5:30 P. M., when adults pay 20 cents.

Most neighborhood houses stick to 15 and 20 with only two (the Granada and Uptown, both Publix) asking 25 cents after 5 P. M.

New Orleans Wants To Keep Them Low

New Orleans, it is believed, has the lowest admission prices of any city of its size, in any section of the country.

For the past three or four years, or at least since the death of vaudeville in the three major houses, the Saenger, State and Orpheum have maintained an even admission tariff, 25 cents till 6 P. M. and from 6 till closing 40 cents plus the city welfare tax of one cent. The Orpheum collects the 25 cents during the daylight hours, but shades the night admission, after 6 P. M., to 35 cents plus, of course, the one cent welfare tax.

As for raising prices, a well-known exhibitor who operates in the neighborhood section said that in his opinion it would be an unwise procedure, pointing to the Saenger, State and Orpheum which deliberately turned down "The Great Ziegfeld," "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and one or two others, and last but not least, "Grand Hotel" some years ago.

"Grand Hotel" was boomed to the skies at two dollars and a half, and was shown at the Strand, then went out of circulation as far as a going house was concerned. Business was off despite newspaper publicity.

Local managers in the major houses shy at "super" films with their higher prices. Imported publicity men and the local exchanges have made a wonderful mistake in attempting to put a hot one over on the unsuspecting exhibitors in other cities, by using the local newspapers exclusively. During the run of "Grand Hotel" some years ago local newspapers were used, some of which had not been admitted to second-class matter privilege by the Government due to insufficient circulation. But they were eagerly gathered up by the publicity men and mailed to exhibitors in the hope of unloading.

Neighborhood houses are enjoying excellent patronage, for many reasons. Men in shirtsleeves and kiddies are welcomed; the ladies can attend in ordinary house dresses for 21 cents in some instances in the United Chain, and ten cents in many of the independent houses. In addition they have the privilege of anticipating a cash giveaway of three figures; and a certainty of a piece of chinaware on a specified night. Street car fare also is taken into consideration, seven cents each way, and they can see the same production, even if it is a month or so old.

Upstate prices are considerably lower than in other states, and are likely to remain so.

In New Orleans proper, exhibitors are loath to discuss price changes. Most believe that the present prices are sufficient to make a fair profit on their investment.

Withering Sun Wilts Price Hopes at Omaha

With a withering sun gleaming down in devastating fashion on crops and livestock in this territory, all hopes for Autumn price increases at theatre boxoffices have practically curdled, leading showmen said.

When a season was promising early last spring, owing to the big snows that melted and soaked the soil, theatre men envisaged the opportunity to up prices all along the line.

In Nebraska City, for instance, one of the brighter business cities in the state, competing exhibitors got together and agreed to raise their top figures to 30 cents. The two showmen had been warring for several years, but feeling that better times would be here by fall, agreed to forget their differences in order that both might cash in on the anticipated heavy harvest.

At West Point, Neb., Phil Lannan, manager of the Rivola and Nebraskan, gambled with price increases this spring, demanding and getting 40 cents for certain special features such as "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" and "The Century Doctor." It was his plan at the time to educate his public to paying the increased tariff on a slow scale so that by fall he could slip the 40-cent sign into a permanent slot.

But with crops being singed daily by the hottest sun in years, dire poverty and desperate need will be the lot of his customers instead of the bulging snap-purses so promising five months ago.

Evert R. Cummings, district manager for A. H. Blank's Tri-States Theatres, with 16 houses, managed out of his Omaha office, which covers all of Nebraska and Sioux City, Iowa, said his company had planned to experiment with price increases this fall, but the bleak crop outlook seemed certain to shelve these plans for another season.

In Omaha, where 27 circuit and independent houses have been peacefully operating without a single fluctuation in prices (except in special cases where stage shows are brought in), no change is contemplated.

The Blank circuit has been getting 40 cents at night and 25 cents for matinees at the Or-

COMMODITY PRICES RISE, NOT TICKETS

Although it is generally conceded that entertainment prices in many territories are not as high as they should be when compared with commodities, theatre operators find their hands tied as far as raising them is concerned.

During the depression the price of foodstuff and clothing, along with other commodities, was greatly reduced, and later increased to normal standards or even higher, in some cases.

Contributing factors, however, are keeping admissions lagging behind the general upward trend of prices and exhibitors are being forced to wait in several key situations.

Philadelphia Prices Low, But What Of It?

Although it is generally conceded that the admission prices for the Philadelphia theatres are far below par, that patrons are getting their pictures and entertainment at a too low figure, distributors and exhibitors indicate that an upward revision in prices is not at all likely for the coming season. It is evident that the admission advances have not kept pace with increases in food, clothing and household commodities. However, the contributing factors will tend to maintain that lag for an indefinite period.

Distributors all agree that the tickets should be raised. However, they feel that the independent motion picture owners are not fully organized to the degree that an increase can be effected in an immediate period. For any one or a group of independents to set the pace would be a hazardous move in face of the keen competition. Nor has the increase in the number of neighborhood houses helped matters any. The past year has found any number of old houses being remodeled and reopened, most of these with a 20-cent maximum ticket. So great is the concentration at this figure that the public at this time hardly can be made to appreciate the need for an increase. So the 20-cent mark approximates a general average for admission prices throughout the city.

George Aarons, secretary of the Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, is of the opinion that the independents can hardly be the ones to set a price list. In view of the fact that all the first-run houses, save one, are those of the Warner Brothers circuit, all the independents must, of necessity, run along with the circuit houses. If the Warner houses raise the prices, the independents follow suit, and in like manner, any boxoffice decrease is followed by a subsequent lowering of admissions.

The scale is determined in the mid-city zone where all the theatres except the first-run Fox, operated by Al Boyd and Frank Buehler, and Abe Sablotsky's Arcadia, a second-run, are owned or operated by Warner Brothers. And due to the protection period on the first runs, from seven days to two weeks, the independents maintain a differential of five cents in their prices as compared with the circuit houses. The scale for the independent neighborhood houses ranges from 15 cents to 40 cents, with a 23-cent figure approximating a general average for the some 115 houses.

The circuit houses range from 20 cents in the neighborhood regions to 59 cents in the downtown section, the additional taxes bringing the latter figure up to 68 cents. Ted Schlanger, general zone manager for the Warner houses, is of the opinion that although the trend in admissions is definitely in an upward swing, the changes have not kept pace with the general increase in the cost of living.

Two years ago a 65-cent top was cut to 55 cents, and brought up again last year to 59 cents. Forty-cent tickets reduced to 30 cents came up a nickel. The general raise in prices last year did not reach the original mark, the general practice was to bring them up only 50 per cent of the amount originally cut. While the circuit has found it continually necessary to decrease the admissions in some houses, the lowered prices solved the problem in some instances, but in most cases only meant a loss in the additional revenue. Although Mr. Schlanger feels that there is a just need for higher admissions, no general increase is contemplated

The most important factor in the way of any move to increase prices, according to Mr. Schlanger, is in the widespread use of giveaways in the neighborhood houses.

Other exhibitors voice the suggestion that the movie company itself is in part responsible, in its contractual dealings, for the low admission price that generally prevails throughout the city. While most percentage contracts stipulate a minimum admission for adults to cut down the chances of a 10-cent ticket, other distributors, basing their percentages on a sliding scale according to gross receipts only, afford no check on boxoffice prices, and depending on the pictures bought, the scale grows wild.

The whole question of amusement taxes plays an important factor in determining admission prices. In order to meet relief expenditures, the state has affixed a tax on movie admissions, that in addition to a government tax. Levying one cent on every 25 cents of admission or fraction thereof, the neighborhood manager hesitates to raise his 25 cents ticket to 30 cents. While the sum seems insignificant in a single admission, it does amount to an appreciable sum when the movie-goer brings his entire family to the theatre for an evening's entertainment.

Exhibitors in Drought Area Start Fight to Recover Patronage

Theatre men operating in the western and mid-western states recently affected by the drouth found their business increasing at first under the heat wave, but the prolonged period of high temperature then began to take its toll at the box office, and showmen in the area say it will be some time before business returns to normal. Theatres with cooling systems best withstood the blows at attendance.

"The drouth confronts us with a mighty serious problem," said John Friedl, general manager of Minnesota Amusement Company, operating 76 theatres in Minnesota, the Dakotas and Wisconsin. "Crop conditions all through the territory appear to be as bad as they were two years ago and our outlook for the fall depends a great deal upon what the Federal Government provides in the way of relief to distressed farmers whose crops are burned out."

Reports received by Stanley P. Kane, secretary of Allied Theatre Owners of the Northwest, indicated severely depressed summer business as a whole and a dark outlook for the fall. "If we get no crop in this territory—and that seems almost a foregone conclusion—theatres will suffer great hardships, not only out in the country, but in the larger towns as well."

In Indianapolis temperatures above 100 degrees finally boiled theatre business down to figures estimated by some as half of normal. In western Montana and western Wyoming the small town houses were virtually closed during the heat wave. In North Dakota many theatres shut their doors, even in the large cities. In South Dakota it was estimated business was reduced as much as 40 per cent.

No Concerted Move For Rise in Richmond

Although theatre business in Virginia, and especially in Richmond, is reported to have improved within the last 12 months, within which time salaries for many lines of work have advanced, there has been no concerted move to increase the prices of theatre tickets.

Of course, when double bills, stage and picture attractions figure in one program, there have been increased prices for a show of magnitude.

Moderate prices continue to prevail in Richmond houses. Such places as Loew's, the Byrd, Capitol and National charge 40 cents for night shows and 30 cents for matinees. In places in which second-run films are shown the prices are 10, 15 and 25 cents. Several theatres admit children both day and night for 10 cents.

A few years ago, at the peak of the business depression, many theatres reduced admission prices. Such places as Loew's were charging 50 cents for night shows. Matinee tickets were 40 cents each.

Sam Bendheim, Jr., prominently identified with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia, Inc., said he knows of no move to change the prevailing prices. It is reported, however, that efforts will be made by executives of certain leading houses to make holiday prices 40 cents for all day.

Slight Rise But Still Low at Salt Lake City

Although the general run of admission prices has improved slightly in the Salt Lake City region, as a whole they have not been lower for many a year.

Two of the Intermountain Theatres, Inc., houses have had the top price dropped from 40c to 36c within the past several months, and at one time just before the depression hit hardest, this top figure was 50 cents, it is reported. Then quite a drop was noted. As not much over a year ago the top of these houses was 40c, it might be gleaned that the trend is slightly downward, but a general satisfaction seems to prevail among most exhibitors contacted in this regard.

Andy Floor, owner and operator of three Salt Lake City theatres, said that to his mind a 5 cent raise on both first and second run, and subsidiary run houses might be worth considering at this time, but he thought the present scale is far from unsatisfactory.

Ed Smith, operator of the local Tower theatre, called prices slightly higher.

Manager W. W. McKendrick, of Salt Lake City Distinctive Screen Attractions, Inc., may be quoted as saying that only in a few spots have prices seemed to "go up" a little throughout the Rocky Mountain west, thus balancing the score pretty well.

Ralph McGowan, in charge of theatre direction at the local Orpheum, a Fanchon and Marco house, said prices are "just right." The houses under this regime through this territory are numerous. The Salt Lake house prices now are 25c to 40c, the top price being for loges.

San Antonio Prices Low But Rise Is Opposed

Prices in San Antonio have not been materially changed in a number of years and there is little likelihood of any changes in the near future. All managers are agreed that prices are too low, but they also agree that to raise them at this time would be suicidal.

Every San Antonio theatre, including three suburban houses, is operated by the Interstate Circuit. Local ace houses are the Majestic and Aztec with 50 cents top. When occasionally there is a stage show with the picture the Majestic raises its top to 65 cents.

Grade B theatres are the Texas and Empire with a 40-cent top. The Palace and State theatres, both downtown, have a 25-cent top, as have three community theatres in the suburbs.

Roadshows like "The Great Ziegfeld" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream" brought a $1.10 top.

Theatre managers agree that the city is overseated. The theatregoing population is pitched around 75,000. With bank nights, Screeno and what not the average attendance during the summer months is 50,000 weekly.

Prices Constant At San Francisco

Admission prices in the San Francisco metropolitan district remain practically the same as they were a year ago, despite increased costs and a general improvement in wage levels. Attendance has improved, but exhibitors credit considerable of this, especially in suburban houses, to bank nights, Screeno and giveaways.

Prices in first-run downtown houses in San Francisco proper are quite uniform, being 30 cents until one o'clock, 35 cents from one until five, and .40 cents evenings. This price schedule applies to the Orpheum, Golden Gate, Paramount, Warfield and St. Francis theatres. The three last named are operated by Fox-West Coast. Prices to the United Artists theatre are 25 cents until one o'clock and 40 cents the rest of the day and evening. The Embassy has a scale of 25 cents and 35 cents, while that of the California is 20 and 25 cents.

The President, recently reopened with a double bill policy, get 15 cents, as do the Davies, Powell, Strand, Egyptian and Circle. Admission to the Fox, the largest and most elaborately furnished of all, is 25 cents.

Practically the only change in the situation during the past year has been in the increased number of downtown houses operating on a 15 cents admission basis.

"Almost everyone in the business would like to see theatre admission prices increased," said Aaron Goldberg, who conducts five small downtown houses. "If the owners of the larger houses were to make such a step, others would fall right into line. But prospects are not bright for any immediate increase, as no one seems to want to get their prices up to where an admission tax would be necessary."

Robert A. McNeil, of the Golden State Theatre Circuit, operating several suburban houses here and theatres throughout northern and central California, held similar views. "We realize," he said, "that theatre admission prices are too low, considering film rentals and operating costs, and will be glad to readjust our schedules if the first-run houses will do likewise."

St. Louis Price Change Upward If At All

First-run, second-run, subsequent-run, neighborhood and suburban theatre prices in the St. Louis metropolitan area seem to be frozen at the existing rates, but if there is any change in the immediate future the revision should be slightly upward.

With the Fanchon & Marco interests now controlling all but one of the local first-run theatres, it is certain there will be no price war hereabouts for some time at least in St. Louis with the Ambassador, Fox, Missouri, Guild Cinema (formerly the Grand Central), Orpheum and St. Louis theatres under Fanchon & Marco banner as their first-run houses, and Loew's the only other first-run house. It is very probable that the first-run price rate will continue 25, 35 and 55 cents. Perhaps if the St. Louis or the Fox adds stage shows it may raise the price scale to 65 cents top or maybe 75 cents.

The second-run prices will not be adversely affected by the fact that Fanchon & Marco will have the Hi-Point and Shubert-Rialto as its second-run houses. The Fanchon & Marco interests are considering seven additional second-run houses for the Greater St. Louis sector. Two of these will be built directly by the F. & M. organization while the other five are to be leased from various real estate interests. It is very probable they will observe the existing second-run price scales that prevail in such houses as the Hi-Pointe, Empress, Ritz, Avalon and Granada.

While the prevailing admission prices in the St. Louis area will probably not be disturbed, it is certain that an effort will be made by the Fanchon & Marco interests to eliminate double feature bills, and there may be a decided movement toward obliteration of "bargain hours," premium giveaways and other price-cutting methods that have prevailed hereabouts. Harry C. Arthur, Jr., vice-president and general manager of Fanchon & Marco, is said to be favorable to the elimination of double-features and "cut rates." And he should have the cooperation of the majority of independent theatre owners. Fred Wehrenberg, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, repeatedly has expressed himself as opposed to cut-rates.

Elsewhere in southern Illinois and eastern Missouri exhibitors feel that the existing admission rates should not be disturbed.

Most of the neighborhood theatres in St. Louis charge 20 and 25 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. The second runs have a rate of 25 and 35 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. Some of the smaller neighborhood and suburban houses charge 10 and 20 cents. In the small towns 20 and 25 cents are the prevailing prices.

There has not been much change in admission prices the last year.

The present prices are about 20 per cent to 25 per cent below the admission scales that prevailed in the peak prosperity dates. For instance, when times were good the St. Louis first-runs charged 65 cents for their night shows.

Independent exchanges would be adversely affected by the elimination of double feature bills, and for that reason they are opposed to any movement to eliminate this policy that now universally prevails hereabouts.

Conservative Seattle Prices Will Remain

situation, and have established an average admission of 25 cents for matinees and 40 cents at night. The state admission tax of 2 cents is added by law, and cannot be absorbed by the theatres.

Hamrick-Evergreen's Paramount, a dual-feature first-run, operates as a family theatre at 30 cents top, and John Danz's Palomar, vaudeville-film house, has the same rate, but the Liberty, Orpheum, Fifth Avenue, Music Box and Blue Mouse have established the 40-cent price for evenings.

In the neighborhood and suburban field, Jensen-VonHerberg's Bagdad, Venetian and Roxy have a 25-cent top. The same applies to Evergreen's Neptune and Egyptian, and a few other independent de luxe neighborhood theatres. More of the smaller theatres, however, have established a 15-cent or 20-cent rate, and nearly all of these houses offer dual features.

Downtown, the second-run situation is controlled primarily by John Danz, with an average admission of 25 cents top for his Roosevelt, Capitol, Winter Garden, Colonial and State theatres. Matinee rates are 15 cents top. All houses have double bills. Hamrick-Evergreen's second-run Coliseum also maintains the same price scale.

Leading exhibitors, when interviewed, were unanimous in expressing the opinion that the current rates probably would remain in force throughout the coming season.

Leroy V. Johnson, general manager of the Jensen-VonHerberg circuit, said present admissions reflect the approximate level of current economic conditions in this territory, and could not be advanced sufficiently to offset the loss of patronage that would follow a raise.

The federal admission tax on all tickets over 40 cents is another factor mentioned by exhibitors as tending to keep prices at their present levels. With a state admission tax already in effect, a raise over 40 cents that would bring a federal tax into the transaction also would mean too much cost for patrons, it was declared.

With few exceptions, such as big stage shows, the Seattle trend will be toward steady price levels for fall, and local circuits even are passing up the opportunity to book large stage attractions, rather than advance their prices to offset the expense.

Distributors, somewhat loath to comment, generally expressed the opinion that they are principally interested in admission rates being maintained at the point where patronage will be the greatest, regardless of whether their product plays on percentage or straight rental deals.

Tampa Admissions Not Likely to Change

Tampa seems to be satisfied with present prices. At least the theatre managers are satisfied with the present scale, and the fellow who pays the freight, old John Q. Public continues to step up to the box office.

When Uncle Sam set the tax on tickets in excess of 40 cents the two de luxe houses here dropped to that price. Prior to this their top scale had been 50c, but the lower price did not hurt them any and they are well satisfied with the lower scale. The 40c price is in effect only after 6 P. M. Matinees go for 35c.

The socalled "second run" houses in the downtown district scale from 25c low to 35c high. The children pay 10 cents in all houses.

Out in the neighborhood houses the prices, up to two years ago, ran from 20c to 25c. Now one of the houses that had been charging 20c dropped to 15c, and 20c is the top price in neighborhoods. From what managers say, there is no likelihood of any change, either up or down.

Over in Ybor City, the Latin section of Tampa, the Broadway has the lowest scale in town. Four days each week grownups get in for a dime. The other three it costs them an extra nickel, but the children are admitted at a nickel at all times.

By adding the adult scale of all houses, from the de luxers' 40c to the Broadway's dime, it figures out that Tampans are paying an average of 25c for their entertainment.

Admissions Steady At National Capital

Washington admissions are remaining steady, in many instances at pre-depression levels, with little likelihood of any change in the near future. This is due primarily to the fact that, unlike any other city in the country, Washington has been affected but little by the depression.

Washington is always the last city in the United States to feel the effect of adverse economic conditions and among the first to reflect improvement.

As indications of the manner in which Washington has escaped the worst of the depression, advertising lineage in the local newspapers, population and automobile registrations all have shown steady increases over the past few years.

On the whole, the total volume of money in Washington decreased but little in the early days of the depression and then began to increase as the Government expanded its activities. As a result, amusement enterprises suffered but little and never found it necessary to cut admissions to depression levels.

In this they were aided by the fact that the decrease in living costs during the depression period was probably as great as the salary reductions which most of the population suffered. At the present time, living costs in the Capital are increasing rapidly and, because of the fact that Government salaries remain at their fixed level, the general view is that admission price increases might be unwise.

No Change Expected In Delaware

Few theatre admission changes have been made in the last 10 years, even during the height of the depression, and none is contemplated for some time for theatres in Delaware and the Eastern Shore of Maryland of which Wilmington is the metropolis, theatremen in this section indicated.

Wilmington, one of the last hit by depression, has seen few changes in theatre prices. With the exception of Wilmington, practically all the theatres in the state and Eastern Shore of Maryland are in towns of less than 5,000 population and they operate evenings only, except Saturdays.

Nowhere in the entire area are prices above the 40-cent top. With the exception of two first-run circuit houses in Wilmington all others keep under the 35-cent evening limit, including theatres in lower Delaware and on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

Ten Wilmington theatres have an evening price average of 28.5 cents for adults and 12.5 cents for children. The matinee average for adults in Wilmington theatres (not including three neighborhood independents open Saturday matinee only) is 26 cents and the matinee average for children 11.9 cents. The matinee average for all Wilmington theatres is 25 cents and for children 11.5 cents.

Prices in down state theatres and houses on the Eastern Shore of Maryland are practically the same as Wilmington, with the exception that tops are 35 cents with an average of about 27 cents. The average admission for children is a little better than 11 cents.

A number of years ago, prior to the federal tax on all admissions 50 cents and above, several theatres carried 50-cent tops, but they were abandoned for the more popular admissions shortly after. Several of the houses absorbed the taxes themselves.

In view of the fact that admissions in Delaware and on the Eastern Shore of Maryland were not cut to any great extent during the depression years and whatever small cuts were made have been restored since, exhibitors are of the opinion that admission prices will remain at their present figures.

Reduction If Anything In Pittsburgh Area

Admission prices throughout the western Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory are remaining practically the same.

With more theatres now operating than at any time during the past 10 years, with a new building boom in progress, and with both affiliated and independent circuits expanding, the predictions are that if a general change in admission prices is made, the trend will be towards a reduction.

Officers and directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, Inc., an Allied organization, say that they contemplate no changes in present admission prices.

Two well established Pittsburgh neighborhood theatres, the Melrose, independently operated house, and the Family, a Harris Amusement circuit theatre, announced a reduction in admissions the week of July 12th.

City exhibitors say that these two admission price reductions are due to local neighborhood conditions and do not necessarily indicate that there will be price cutting or general reductions.

General Advance At Portland, Ore.

For the last six months the theatre admission prices in Portland, Ore., following a general advance of 5 cents throughout the city, have made no appreciable decline in attendance figures.

The downtown first-run houses with a straight picture fare, both single and double, have universally maintained 25c-35c-40c schedule, with only a few of the larger attractions bringing the price up to 55c on loge seats.

According to J. J. Parker, operating the Broadway and United Artists theatres in Portland, and with the supervising interest in the Mayfair theatre, this is the best price scale obtained in the last five years. He is of the opinion that prices again will be advanced, probably before the end of the year.

Albert J. Finkelstein, head of the Multnomah circuit in Portland—auxiliary of the Evergreen theatres—with the Paramount ace house, Orpheum, in the first-run column, and the Music Box, Blue Mouse, Oriental and Liberty in the subsequent-run division, is well satisfied with the same price scale of 25c-35c-40c on the ace houses and 20c-25c on the subsequent-run, and has noted that with the high type of product now being run, not only has business held up well but holdover pictures have been the rule this year rather than the exception.

Leading managers of the distributors are agreed that the price situation is much improved over a year ago, but they also believe that it is possible to step up prices at least another 5c on first-runs, and predict, too, that this will happen before the end of 1936.

Withdrawal by ASCAP Affects Canada Films

The Canadian marketing of all pictures using music copyrighted by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers is affected by the impending withdrawal of the music licensing organization from the Canadian Performing Rights Society and efforts are now being made to work out an agreement with the society which would permit the continued exhibition of such pictures in Canada even though the theatres in which they are played pay no music tax to A.S.C.A.P.

Counsel for all the major distribution companies met this week with E. C. Mills, general manager of the society, to discuss the situation which will be created by the music organization's withdrawal from Canadian licensing and to attempt to work out an arrangement which would avoid litigation over copyright infringement against Canadian theatres which bought and played pictures in which society-controlled music is used.

Indications are that the society will not adopt any extreme policy insofar as Canadian theatres are concerned while the attempts to work out an agreement with the distributors in New York are underway. It is expected that no final understanding with A.S.C.A.P. can be reached for 30 to 60 days, due to the fact that many distribution officials are or will be out of town during the next few weeks.

In addition to the concern of all major distributors in the Canadian situation, companies such as Paramount and Loew's, which have important theatre interests in Canada, are also concerned from the standpoint of exhibition.

A.S.C.A.P. intends to withdraw from the Canadian society when its current contract expires within a few weeks because of the new rate restrictions on music licensing which are being imposed by the Canadian government. Mr. Mills stated recently that the new level of authorized rates no longer makes it worthwhile for the society to continue doing business in the Dominion. He said that in the future Canadian users of copyrighted music would have to make their own performing arrangements with individual publishers and that his organization would serve only as a "policing" agency in Canada for its members. Evidence of unauthorized performances of copyrighted music would be gathered by agents and turned over to owners of the copyrights for action, it was said.

A procedure which might possibly be adopted by American distributors to solve their problem might be to pay A.S.C.A.P. the music tax on their Canadian sales and recoup it through equal advances in film rentals derived from the Dominion.

Minneapolis Allied Fights Preferred Time

Northwest Allied Theatres will wage a strong campaign against film contracts calling for percentage on week-end playing time bookings it was resolved at a meeting of the board of governors in Minneapolis.

PASTOR AND TEACHER ARGUE SUNDAY LAWS

Sunday motion pictures has become a live question with the city commission at Bristol, Tenn., and the commision has taken under consideration a request from Rollin K. Stonebrook of the Paramount theatre that his house be allowed to operate Sundays when churches are not in session.

Mr. Stonebrook is a Sunday School teacher at the State Street Methodist church, the pastor of which was present to oppose Sunday pictures.

Sunday motion pictures are shown on the Virginia side of the town, however.

Spitz Completes RKO Circuit Shifts

Realignment of the RKO circuit under the new regime of Leo Spitz has been completed with the dropping of several units and the conclusion of pooling arrangements in Des Moines, St. Paul and Kansas City.

Houses dropped from the Loop were the Downtown, Detroit; Victory, Providence; Regent, Kearney, N. J., and Strand, Rutherford, N. J. About $50,000 is being spent by RKO on alterations for the Orpheum, Des Moines, which is a part of the Paramount pool. Almost $75,000 will be spent for the renovation of Keith's, Boston. The Kansas City pool, which includes Fox Midwest houses, became effective on July 31st. On September 1st RKO will take over the Rialto, West New York, N. J.

A. P. Giannini Gets Bank Chairmanship

A. P. Giannini, Pacific Coast banker, has been elected executive board chairman of the Bank of America to succeed his brother, A. H. Giannini, who recently was named head of United Artists.

The new president and chairman of United Artists will leave the Coast for New York in the next two weeks and company executives are planning a gathering to which leaders of the industry will be invited. He will continue to make his headquarters in Hollywood but will make periodic trips to New York.

Committees representing the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce in New York and the Independent Theatre Owners' Association met last Tuesday at the Hotel Astor to discuss and formulate plans for the merging of the two exhibitor groups. An open meeting of the ITOA was scheduled for Wednesday at which the plans were to be outlined. It is expected that negotiations will continue through August.

Fox Creditors Gain Point in Solvency Suit

As recently as 1935, the year All-Continent Corporation "sold out," William Fox collateral for defaulted loans, Mr. Fox continued to "give some directions" in the All-Continent management, according to testimony of Herbert Leitsteen, Fox bookkeeper, at the Fox bankruptcy hearing in Atlantic City this week.

Mr. Leitsteen insisted, however, that Mrs. Eva Fox, wife of William, also had a frequent hand in the management. He refused to say how much of Mrs. Fox's time was devoted to this.

David Katz of Proskauer, Rose and Paskus, New York counsel for a major creditor, extracted the information. He was trying to introduce in evidence a page of All-Continent record that showed Mrs. Fox received $25,000 in salary in 1935 for services rendered. Murray C. Becker, Fox counsel, objected that no proof has been shown that William Fox had any connection with the matter, and was upheld. Federal Referee Robert E. Steedle conceded, however, that Mr. Katz may argue the point further when the hearings continue this week.

Meanwhile, in New York, the United States court of appeals decided that the five brokerage houses which handled a great deal of financial transactions of Mr. Fox must produce their books and records concerning these accounts in supplementary proceedings. The brokerage houses are H. L. Horton and Company; Loeb, Alsberg and Company; J. W. Sparks and Company; B. J. Kallen and Company; Berliner and Company, and Alexander L. Berliner, as an individual. The appeal rose out of the action brought by the Capitol Company of California in an effort to collect a judgment of $245,000 which was obtained from Mr. Fox in default of theatre leases.

Cantor Desertion Of Goldwyn Seen

Possibilities that Eddie Cantor would desert the producing banner of Samuel Goldwyn, who has been producing his pictures for several years, for that of Twentieth Century-Fox appeared in Hollywood this week when the comedian went into conference with Joseph M. Schenck immediately following Mr. Schenck's arrival on the west coast.

The comedian complains that Mr. Goldwyn's delay in preparing the story and setting the starting date of his scheduled picture has caused him financial loss because the star has to pay the gag writers working on the picture out of his own pocket even though no story has been set.

Mr. Cantor has the current year's film and one other to make for Mr. Goldwyn under a contract signed in 1929, which calls for one picture a year starting within "reasonable time of notification to Cantor."

Thomas; L. B. Smith and H. Snow; V. Sanders, J. Jensen and J. W. Davis; R. W. Williams; K. R. Holt and D. L. Maxwell; T. N. Blume; E. V. Cupero; P. L. Smith.

I think this is a good list for midsummer. Section A is replied to by the following: "In selecting lubricant for ball bearings it is of the utmost importance that those containing any acid or animal fat be avoided. Oils or greases containing either will act upon both the balls and their races, roughening their polished surfaces."

W. C. Brown says, "Grease that contains acid is very bad for ball bearings. An effective, simple way to test grease for acid content is to dissolve a small quantity of the grease in alcohol, dilute slightly with water and add a few drops of phenothalien. A red color indicates it is basic [alkaline?]; no color means it is neutral; and a slightly yellow means that it is acidic. Litmus paper also may be used."

J. R. Prater says, "Ball bearing lubricant should contain no acid, as acid will attack and roughen the balls and races. Obviously, since the bearing surface is very small, any roughening is serious. All animal fats contain acid, therefore any grease containing it must be avoided."

(B) B. Caldwell answers, "Follow recommendations of manufacturer of the equipment involved."

A. L. Cooper replies, "Use the lubricant recommended by the manufacturer of the equipment, not some cheaper just-as-good substitute."

M. and J. Devoy reply, "If the manufacturer of the device to be lubricated has made recommendations as to the kind or make of grease to be used, follow that recommendation. If not, then write asking what non-acid grease may be secured. Or, better still, if you can get the address of some manufacturer of ball bearings, communicate with him, asking what grease is best."

(C) A. L. Cooper says, "The simplest method is to use a short length of shielded cable from each photoelectric cell to the amplifier. These cables usually extend to a double-throw switch in the amplifier that serves as a fader, selecting sound from either pickup. Volume then is controlled by a potentiometer in one of the amplifier circuits. If the system has a photoelectric cell amplifier mounted on the projector, the output from that amplifier to the main amplifier may go through a fader that is built as a double potentiometer, serving both as volume control and fader. A system with or without a photoelectric cell amplifier may have that output go to a double-throw switch fader that is separate from the main amplifier, in which case the volume is controlled by a potentiometer in one of the amplifier circuits."

Messrs. Evans and Rau say, "One method of coupling the sound pickup to the system amplifier is by means of short shielded cables run direct from the photoelectric cell to the main amplifier through a step-down transformer which steps up the sound current at the projector and steps it down again to its original strength at the amplifier. Another method is by the use of a head amplifier mounted on the front of the soundhead. This amplifies the sound current sufficiently to avoid possibility of interference by stray currents."

D. Danielson says, "The three common methods employed are as follows: First, direct—by this method the P. E. cell output is fed directly to the system amplifier through a short, shielded conductor. Second, the transformer—by this method the P. E. cell output is fed to the primary of a transformer from the secondary of which the current is fed to the system amplifier. Lowering the impedance of the transformer reduces the chances of extraneous pickup. Third, the pre-amplifier—by this method the sound current is first boosted by a pre-amplifier located either on the projector base or the projection room front wall before being led to the system amplifier."

C. A. Allison says, "First, there is the transformer coupling from pickup to primary of a step-down transformer, which of course decreases voltage and increases amperage. The impedance of the secondary circuit usually is from 20 to 500 ohms. This secondary connects to the primary of another transformer, the primary impedance of which equals that of the secondary of the first one. The secondary of this second transformer matches the impedance of the grid circuit of the first speech tube, to which it is connected. Transformer No. 2 is mounted very close to the tube which it excites. Second, impedance coupling from the pickup to the system amplifier consists of connecting one side of the output of the pickup to the grid of the first speech tube through a blocking condenser in order to keep the d.c. grid voltage away from the pickup, the other side being connected to the cathode, thus completing the circuit. The pickup impedance must match the input impedence of the tube.

"Still another method would be to use an impedance-coupled preamplifier with the pickup, and to transformer-couple its output to the main amplifier. Unless the main amplifier is

The earnings were equal to $1.50 on 1,357,833 accumulative convertible preferred shares outstanding, and after allowing for preferred dividends of 75 cents a share for six months, there remained a profit equivalent to $1.43 a share on the 1,228,039 common shares outstanding.

Western Electric Sales Gain 31%

Western Electric sales for the first six months of 1936 are reported at $65,651,000 which compares with $50,057,000 in the corresponding period last year, an increase of 31 per cent.

A. T. and T. Net Rises

Operations of American Telephone and Telegraph Company and 23 associated companies of the Bell System showed substantial improvement for the three months and year ended May 31 over the same period last year, according to a report issued last week.

Report for the Bell System, including all companies, for the year ended May 31 shows net income of $151,689,083 after expenses, taxes, depreciation, interest, subsidiary dividends, minority interest, etc., equivalent to $8.13 a share on the 18,666,274 average number of capital shares of American Telephone and Telegraph outstanding. Report of A. T. & T., parent company only, for the year ended June 30, shows net income of $138,047,778.

Metropolitan Playhouses Profits

Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., showed a profit of approximately $39,000 for the five-month period from September 3, 1935, to January 31, 1936, it was reported to the board of directors last week. The statement is the first since the Fox Metropolitan circuit was organized.

Metropolitan Playhouses operates a large circuit of theatres in and around the metropolitan New York area.

Consolidated Nets $185,024

Consolidated Film Industries showed a loss in earnings for the quarter ending June 30. The net was $185,024 after depreciation and Federal income taxes, equivalent to 46 cents a share on 400,000 no-par shares of preferred stock. This compares with a net of $265,121, or 12 cents a share for the same quarter last year.

The net for the previous quarter was $290,249. For the six months ending June 30 the net was $486,007.

Consolidated Film Industries, headed by Herbert J. Yates, besides operating the largest motion picture laboratory system in the industry, has large interests in Republic Pictures and elsewhere in the business.

MICKEY MOUSE CIRCUS TO TOUR EASTERN CITIES

The Walt Disney - Mickey Mouse Circus, in which Fanchon and Marco are using what they claim to be the largest troupe of Singer's Midgets in the history of the internationally known little people, will be seen in the east this fall, the company has announced. At the present time the circus is playing at the California-Pacific International Exposition in San Diego.

The Mickey Mouse circus will be booked into theatres in all the principal cities in the east and will probably be seen at the Roxy in New York.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum and its subsidiary companies, for the 26 weeks ended June 27, 1936, showed a net profit of $734,492, according to the third report of Irving Trust Company, as trustee, which was filed Monday in federal court in New York.

The profit compares with a net of $141,376 for the equivalent period in 1935, and a net of $684,732 for the entire year of 1935. The 1936 six-months net is after all charges, including interest on the secured indebtedness of RKO and provision for estimated federal taxes, but before providing for dividends in arrears on cumulative preferred stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum, a subsidiary.

RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and its subsidiaries for the 26-week period of 1936 reported a net profit, after all charges, of $360,561, which compares with a net profit of $235,099 for the same period in 1935. For the year 1935 the producing subsidiary's profit was in excess of $700,000.

RKO Pathe Pictures, Inc., which owns the RKO Pathe studio, used for the most part as a leasing plant, showed a net loss for the 1936 period of $103,616, which compares with a net loss for the same period of 1935 of $100,852.

The operations of the theatre and service subsidiaries of RKO for the 26-week period of 1936 resulted in a combined net profit of $384,097, against a combined net loss of $7,522 in the equivalent period of 1935.

For the 1936 period the consolidated statement reports theatre admissions as $10,385,570, film rentals and sales as $12,867,940 and rents and other income as $1,299,812, for a combined total of $24,553,322. Other income, including subsidiaries' profits, dividends from other companies and the like totaled $335,105. Expenses totaled $21,794,403, and other charges $2,090,555. The provision for income and excess profits taxes (less tax on bond discount charged to surplus account) was $268,417.

The statement of cash receipts and disbursements from January 1 to June 30, 1936, listed receipts of $184,845, including balances on hand at Jan. 1 of $60,730, in the regular account and $25,578 in the special account. Disbursements for the period totaled $78,797. The balances as of June 30 equaled $80,468 in the regular account and $25,578 in the special account.

The report pointed out that as yet no plan of reorganization for RKO has been finally completed. Except for claims based on the funded debt of RKO, 10 other claims, aggregating $2,956,555 remain to be accounted for, according to the report.

The date for the hearing on the new report by Federal Judge William Bondy has not yet been set.

Paramount Loses $476,000

Paramount Pictures, Inc. issued the following schedule of tentative estimated consolidated earnings for the second quarter of 1936:

Operating earnings after provision for estimated normal income tax and after applying $800,000 of the inventory reserve set up as of December 28, 1935		$147,000
Add: Dividends from non-consolidated subsidiaries		160,000
		$307,000
Add: Profit on debentures of Paramount Pictures, Inc., purchased for retirement		63,000
		$370,000
Deduct: Interest on debentures of Paramount Pictures, Inc.	$387,000
Foreign exchange adjustments	34,000
Reserve provided for federal undistributed earnings tax, foreign investments and other contingencies	425,000	$846,000
Balance transferred to surplus (loss)		$476,000

"Of the excess costs of certain pictures for which a reserve was provided out of the 1935 earnings, as referred to in the company's annual report for that year, approximately $800,000," Paramount declared, "was charged to operations in the current quarter in accordance with the company's regular film amortization tables. Accordingly, this amount of the reserve has, as above stated, been credited to operations."

The above results do not include results of operations of Olympia Theatres, Inc., and its subsidiaries in receivership throughout the period, and whose operations, therefore, do not affect the current earnings of Paramount Pictures, Inc. Operations of partially owned companies not consolidated are included only to the extent that dividend income has been received therefrom. Paramount's net interest as a stockholder in the combined undistributed earnings of such partially owned companies, available to it if, when, and to the extent that dividends are paid to it therefrom, amounted, for the quarter, to approximately $305,000.

As Paramount was under court supervision until mid-year of 1935, no figures are available for comparison with the second quarter of last year. The company's annual statement at the year end, however, reported a profit of $653,167 for 1935 after the special inventory reserve of $2,500,000 and all charges. A profit of $718,921 was reported for the first quarter of 1936 after applying $800,000 from the special inventory reserve.

located close to the pickup or pre-amplifier, it is best to use a low level line between them, say 20-500 ohms, or most of the high notes will be lost owing to the capacity between the wires and the line."

A. F. Sprafke says, "First, transformer-coupled to the plate circuit of one tube and the grid of the next. Second, resistance-coupled, a method of coupling in which the resistance is connected in common to two circuits. Third, direct-coupled, which is the association of two circuits by having an inductor, condenser or resistor common to both—two circuits joined by a metallic association."

I might add the remark that the answer of Brother Danielson is pronounced correct in all details by sound engineers to whom all answers were submitted, whereas all others were marked "fair."

(D) G. E. Doe replies, "Contact movement between objects of whatever nature generates friction. Water flowing through a pipe of course contacts its walls, hence there is friction, which represents loss proportional to speed of movement and pressure applied. The friction thus generated is not, however, comparable with friction as between two solid bodies, for the reason that the 'particles' of water pass the walls with a rolling movement, it being questionable whether or not the water has any actual friction, in the form of abrasive effect, with the pipe walls, or at least more than a very slight one. The other particles of the stream probably remain on the metal, while other particles pass them, the frictional effect decreasing toward the stream center. Probably I have not expressed this very well, Dad, but you perhaps may be able to understand and put it into a better form of words."

I have made no change. Friend Doe seems to have expressed the matter very well. Of all the hundreds of answers his was the only one that set this idea forth fully, though Danielson expressed the frictional decrease toward the stream center in a drawing. The point you missed is that roughness in a pipe's wall offers direct impedance, though in the main it does not effect the action described by Brother Doe, which I hold to be correct.

To his answer to Question No. 29, D. Pollock appends this enlightening statement: "I have only recently been sending occasional answers, but have studied every one of your questions for more than a year. I have already received at least ten times the actual benefit derived from a correspondence course I paid a substantial sum of money for two years ago. More power to you, Dad! Keep up the good work."

Strong Promoted

Eugene Strong, assistant to Harry Sherman, has been advanced to the position of associate producer of the new Hopalong Cassidy series for Paramount release.

PAGE J. C. JENKINS! APPLETON CALLING

To the Editor of the Herald:

Yes, sir, it is time I was saying something and saying it out loud. Here it is. On the 10th of June, 1910, I opened up the Scenic Theatre in Appleton (Minnesota). Thus it is now over 26 years that I have operated continuously in this one place and I have yet to see this mysterious person in the name of J. C. Jenkins, supposed to be working for your Colyum and not his.

Now this would not be strange were it not for the fact that about every year I notice that his Colyum carries accounts of his visiting all the towns right around mine.

Just read his account of travels in your July 18 issue.

He arrives in the great State of Minnesota and calls at Luverne. Then he travels north (mind you, he is headed north toward the Land of Ten Thousand Lakes) and calls at Pipestone. Then to Montevideo and to Benson. Now, as it happens, both of these towns are 24 miles from Appleton, with mighty good roads both in and out.

From Benson he still keeps right on north and the last he reports is from the shores of Detroit Lakes. He mentions that he expects to go on to see John Piller in North Dakota, but I doubt if he has yet found that state, especially as the weather has been exceeding warm.

Yes, year after year, this mysterious Jenkins vanishes or disappears from my territory without even giving our Main Street a smell of his cheap gasoline. It must be because I am always paid up with The Herald, for I have taken the Herald long before it was The Herald. At the last call of one of your real representatives I told him that I had just two requests to make—(1) Eliminate the senseless and harmful publishing of Theatre Receipts and (2) ask Jenkins not to pass up this community.

I am afraid that I will not live to see that either of these requests is ever carried out.

Yes, sir, Jenkins covers this field "like an April shower" and right now this section is 5½ inches short of a normal rainfall.

Now, as far as a call on me is concerned, I really do not give a ——, but I hate to have him tell your office in New York how hard he is working and the amount of gasoline he is burning for the good of the paper.

I am anxious to see his next Colyum and see if he will report on how good the fishing was in northern Minnesota—or, should I say, is.—R. G. Risch, New Scenic Theatre, Appleton, Minn.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Columbia

AND SO THEY WERE MARRIED: Melvyn Douglas, Mary Astor, Edith Fellowes—A very entertaining picture with good comedy which pleased my patrons.—Leslie F. Smith, Mayer Theatre, Westmoreland, Kan. General patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—Columbia's checker was hot on the job when we played this one and was stung plenty hard. The picture was okay with me but the public stayed away and Mr. Deeds looked upon an empty room. Played June 30-July 1.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—Columbia's only picture this year above program class and it's plenty good entertainment. But it takes more than one good picture to make a season's program of any company worthwhile. Average Sunday business. Played July 5-6.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GALLANT DEFENDER: Charles Starrett, Joan Perry—A very good western. Young Charles Starrett promises to be a real western star. Our patrons say some of the older stars are getting too old and fat. Business terrible on account of intense heat wave still existing. Played July 11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR, THE: Richard Arlen, Cecilia Parker—Harold Bell Wright story with Richard Arlen and Cecilia Parker. A good, wholesome, entertaining picture by an eminent author.—Leslie F. Smith, Mayer Theatre, Westmoreland, Kan. General patronage.

PANIC ON THE AIR: Lew Ayres, Florence Rice—Good program attraction. Ayres plays his role smoothly. Played July 14.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WESTERN COURAGE: Ken Maynard, Geneva Mitchell—This comes under the heading of cheap westerns. No continuity to story; cheap, shoddy stuff with Maynard and Tarzan trying their darndest. Columbia had better wake up even with westerns. Played June 19.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

First National

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—This is one picture that depends mostly on dialogue. But make no mistake; that does not detract from the swell story. Good acting and about as clever a picture as we have run in some time. This Brent is great and so is Miss Davis. But, here is where the rub is, and one reason that it did not get the play that it deserves, and that is the title. So far as I can see, it had no bearing on the picture except that it opens with some arrows being shot into a bathroom. I am very certain that the title was the reason for the low gross that it got.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Cosmopolitan Productions knows full well that Miss Davies is no draw without a strong supporting cast, but in spite of that the picture is poor. The picture should have ended where the producers originally intended but evidently they became panicky and tacked on another reel. I can't believe that Frank Borzage directed this unless he was on vacation. Oh, well, he probably did the best he could with the material. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 5-7.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—You expect so much more from the cast that this picture boasts that you are greatly disappointed. The picture is not dull, but it is so moderately amusing that it gives you a "let-down" feeling. Played July 12-13.—G. E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

SINGING KID, THE: Al Jolson, Beverly Roberts, Edward Everett Horton, Allen Jenkins, Yacht Club Boys, Cab Calloway and His Orchestra. Al Jolson with his "I Love to Singa" spoils the entire picture. There is an excuse for Cab Calloway, but not for Jolson. Horton, Jenkins and the Yacht Club Boys are the bright spots in a production that otherwise is wasted effort. Business aversely affected by preceding word-of-mouth advertising. Patrons expect Jolson as he was in his early hits, so naturally when he co-stars with Cab Calloway, and "I Love to Singa" is woven in as sort of a theme song, well, disappointment runs rampant and why not? Played June 16-17.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

SNOWED UNDER: George Brent, Genevieve Tobin—Critical reviews may not rate this one highly, but it went over in this small town in great shape; a good trailer built up the interest; and many a hearty laugh was had by all. Just another good program picture from Warner that they like out here. Running time, seven reels. Played June 30-July 1.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—A picture that holds the interest from start to finish despite its lack of romance. It should please everyone. Press book has many valuable exploitation suggestions which the small town exhibitor can use to his advantage without stretching his advertising budget too much. Running time, 91 minutes. Played July 12-14.—Ralph Copain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ABSOLUTE QUIET: Irene Hervey, Lionel Atwill—This picture is a good semi-gangster picture. The cast marooned at an estate; there all the action takes place and contrary to pictures of this type that are largely dialogue, it is pat to the story. There is one little lady that was not pegged too high in the cast. Bernadene Hayes, the gangster's moll. She plays the role to a turn; she is tough and added a lot to the picture; she was plenty good.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—Pretty good comedy. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—Laughable Laurel and Hardy antics. Good music. Played July 17-18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—This picture will completely satisfy children and adults of the mentality not far removed from that of childhood. But adult opera lovers would probably vote a jail sentence for anyone who could take a beautiful opera and dilute it with 50 per cent of hokum. But it will satisfy a majority of small town patrons. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 10-11.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

FURY: Sylvia Sidney, Spencer Tracy—It packs a a wallop that seldom is encountered in films. So compelling in interest that those who shop carefully for their entertainment will be pleased with this one. It should increase at the box office on word-of-mouth advertising. Played July 12-14.—G. E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT MURDER: Chester Morris, Madge Evans—So-so murder plot holds back some good players. Considerable portions of opera fill in time while unravelling the mystery. Played July 15-16.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT MURDER: Chester Morris, Madge Evans—Poor. Just made to be used as a double bill picture. Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 10-11.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—Good picture and very well liked. Will do business. Running time, 81 minutes. Played July 5-7.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Well named. Nothing to it but a lot of shouting. Just riffraff. Running time, 94 minutes. Played July 15-16.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

ROBINHOOD OF EL DORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring—Excellent picture. Fair draw for us. Star great. Played July 3-4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THREE WISE GUYS: Robert Young, Betty Furness—Robert Young is coming to the top at a fast clip. This picture is a good bet for mass appeal. Business average despite the hot weather. Played July 9.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE FOR TWO: Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell—A very foolish attempt at entertainment. This was the unanimous opinion of myself and the several cash customers. Business bad. Played July 14-15.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE FOR TWO: Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell—One of those mythical kingdom things and who do you think was Prince Charming? Why, no other than Robert with his little trick mustache. This one is just too much for our low-browed audience and, if I am not mistaken, the high-brows were not hot and bothered over it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Paramount

CASE AGAINST MRS. AMES: Madeleine Carroll, George Brent—A good courtroom melodrama. Should have done better at box office. Played July 7.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DESIRE: Marlene Dietrich, Gary Cooper—Here's a dandy and a surprise to this town. Plenty of comedy, superbly mounted; a regular Capra type of picture that these two good stars made the most of. Most everybody expected to see a bunch of sticky love stuff, and they got fooled plenty. We liked it; so did the customers; perhaps your folks will, too. But don't be afraid of it; it's good entertainment. Running time, 10 reels. Played June 28-29.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

FATAL LADY: Mary Ellis, Walter Pidgeon—A weak one for the box office. It's a hodgepodge of entertainment that starts out as a musical but ends up as a murder mystery. The biggest mystery to the exhibitor is why it was ever made! Played July 14-16.—G. E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

FLORIDA SPECIAL: Jack Oakie, Sally Eilers—Weak story keeps this one down. Stars have hard time holding up interest. Played July 8-9.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HER MASTER'S VOICE: Edward Everett Horton, Peggy Conklin—Fair program picture that did not click at the box office. Running time, 76 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

KLONDIKE ANNIE: Mae West, Victor McLaglen—After all the fuss and censorship, just another rather unpleasant, far from amusing, West picture. She's only made one as far as we are concerned: "Goin' to Town" was a good bit of entertainment. This one was no good for entertainment, and no good for the box office. Running time, nine reels. Played June 16-17.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

MOON'S OUR HOME, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Henry Fonda—Another of the present Hollywood cycle of exaggerated alleged comedy and continual boy vs. girl fighting. Not one of these has gone over for us, and we can't help but wonder why the review raves over this one, "Hands Across the Table" and their many cousins. If silliness is smartness, then the small town like ours is far from smart, yet the box office apparently tells a different story elsewhere, and the box office is king, but ours was just a headache. Running time, eight reels. Played July 12-13.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

PRINCESS COMES ACROSS, THE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—A very good picture and should do some business, but it would not bring them in for me. Gave it a run of four days; should have taken off at end of first day.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

PRINCESS COMES ACROSS, THE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—A distinct pleasure for any audience. A grand combination of several good types of picture plot. Played July 10-11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SKY PARADE: Jimmie Allen, William Gargan, Katherine DeMille—Goes off with a good start and dies hard at the end. Some very weak dialogue, or it at least sounded weak to me, and while this picture should have great possibilities, they did not bring it out.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—A very satisfactory feature from all standpoints. Business fair. Played July 4.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Republic

MELODY TRAIL: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford—Good entertainment. These westerns would suit us 100 per cent if they were one or two reels longer. A feature that is 55 or 60 minutes long needs quite a bit of padding to make a normal show with it. Of course, these short ones are quite the thing for double-feature houses and their production gives an incentive to go double. Running time, 60 minutes. Played July 17-18.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

RKO Radio

DANCING PIRATE: Charles Collins, Steffi Duna—The producers missed fire here, and possibly the biggest mistake they made, they must, first of all, before spending a lot of money on picture, secure some well known names. If I bet my bank roll on a horse at the track, I want to be sure that I select at least a horse that at least won a race. So, in making a great big picture you must have names that sell at the box office. A fairly good picture to poor business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

THREE SHOWMEN JOIN REPORTERS

Adding their comment on "What the Picture Did for Me" this week are three exhibitors as far removed geographically from one another as Kansas, Texas and Indiana.

Reporting for the first time is

Leslie F. Smith, Mayer Theatre, Westmoreland, Kansas.

Returning to the reportorial ranks after a year's absence are

Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Indiana.

Harry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas.

Read the reports of these showmen in the Department this week.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Everyone knows this is one of the best. Unfortunately, we struck the hottest weather on record and lost a-plenty. Played July 8-9.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LADY CONSENTS, THE: Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall—They thought this one the best from Ann Harding in a long time. It is a bright, clever, sophisticated piece of well mounted movie. I've read reports that said it was too "talky," but it didn't register that way here. Thoroughly enjoyed by a good crowd, and that's something new for Harding. Running time, nine reels. Played July 5-6.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

LET'S SING AGAIN: Bobby Breen, Henry Armetta—Bobby Breen's voice is startling, for it is so unnatural in a child so young. It is, naturally enough, the chief asset in a movie that is built on a plot that every patron has seen dozens of times. Satisfactory for the average audience. Played July 15.—G. E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—This one is much better than the last two or three we played. Plenty of laughs and excitement. Give the boys good story and they will put it over for you and us. Running time, nine reels. Release date, July 17-18.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Wheeler and Woolsey—We realize these Wheeler and Woolsey pictures could be a lot better, but they do business and please a small town audience. Personally, we do not care for them, but they get the money and that is why we operate a theatre.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Wheeler and Woolsey—Too silly for our folks and that's saying an awful lot because these boys usually go over pretty well. It has its moments, but the only place it could get by here was just where we ran it: one day for the Saturday bunch. Running time, seven reels. Played July 11.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SPECIAL INVESTIGATOR: Richard Dix—Good Friday and Saturday picture. Running time, 61 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—A good picture, but not the best from this team. RKO better put up better material for these two before they start to fade out in popularity. Business off right after the Fourth. Running time, 11 reels. Played July 5-6.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CHARLIE CHAN IN SHANGHAI: Warner Oland—A good show for any night. We played it to small business in hot weather. Will please all who like Charlie Chan pictures. Running time, seven reels. Played July 10-11.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A (reissue): Will Rogers, Myrna Loy—As usual, there was considerable interest in a Will Rogers picture. With the weather assuming normal proportions, our attendance picked up, but not quite up to the usual run of business. Played July 15-16.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly—Not what one might expect from the pen of James Oliver Curwood, due to production faults. Wonder how the river thawed so suddenly. Played July 17-18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers, Tom Brown—Held up for average business in the face of record heat wave. Jane Withers is a drawing card and justly so. A bright kid. Played July 11-13.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers, Tom Brown—A very good picture of the good old days. Jane and Tom are fine. Will satisfy all but the wise guys. Played July 10-11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HIGH TENSION: Brian Donlevy, Glenda Farrell—Excellent program picture. Having seen Donlevy as a villain in his first few pictures, it's difficult to reconcile myself that he's turned hero. But then typing has always been something that the movies could do without. Make 'em a hero today, a villain tomorrow. Running time, 62 minutes. Played July 17-18.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell, Leo Carrillo. This one went over with a bang. Dandy good entertainment anywhere. It made most of the Fox percentage masterpieces hide their heads, but that's the film business. Leo Carrillo was fine, and how the folks like him. Best bit of work from Raft in a long time, and Miss Russell was just fine. I wonder if she reminds others of the perhaps more famous Miss Loy. Good show, good business. Wish the old days were back; you gave a real boost and got a picture and letter of thanks. These three people did a good job in this one. Running time, nine reels. Played July 14-15.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, John Boles, Barbara Stanwyck—Good show. Should please any kind of audience and satisfy the most critical. Beery, Boles and Stanwyck all good players. Enough said. Business off on account 100 degrees in the shade. Running time, 10 reels. Played July 12-13.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE NUMBER: Loretta Young, Robert Taylor—Very entertaining picture. Good story. Good cast. Good entertainment. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 12-14.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Victor McLaglen, Claudette Colbert, Rosalind Russell—A very lavish production that just falls short of being a great picture. This was a very widely read novel. The picture was changed in that it started in England and it left the audience in the dark until later on in the picture as to the reason that Colman joined the Legion. It is well directed and the cast are all good in their parts. Colbert, as usual, gave an outstanding performance as Cigarette. Also, Miss Russell adds to her laurels in this one; she is a coming star all right.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Claudette Colbert, Victor McLaglen, Rosalind Russell—A first-class production that didn't do as much business as it deserves. Played July 12-13.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Victor McLaglen, Claudette Colbert, Rosalind Russell—The Herald rates this one the Box Office Champ for May. We must be way out of step out here; great cast, lots and lots of money spent, and it is a good picture, well lots of money spent, and it is a good picture, well directed, well produced visually, but it drags plenty and the stars were pretty much wasted, to our way of thinking. Countless extras, a million gun shots and a tremendous expanse of sand beautifully photographed don't all together make up for a trite old story that frankly bores a bit. Didn't go well. Running time, 12 reels. Played July 9-10.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

United Artists

AMATEUR GENTLEMAN, A: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Elissa Landi—The extreme hot weather made it impossible for our patrons to sleep at home. This picture made it possible for them to sleep at the theatre in cool comfort. It just drags and drags. Its two-day engagement seemed like two weeks. Running time, 94 minutes. Played July 15-16.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

AMATEUR GENTLEMAN, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Elissa Landi—As rank as three-year-old butter. A dud. Heave it in the can. Running time, 97 minutes. Played July 6-9.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

KID MILLIONS: Eddie Cantor, Ann Sothern—The name brings them in and satisfaction is general, though it is not in a class to get excited about. The color section "The Ice Cream Factory" is fine photography and good comedy. Played July 10-11.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

SPLENDOR: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Pretty good play. Would be better on stage than screen. Still gets by okay. Small draw. Played July 3-4.—L.

A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor, Ethel Merman—A good picture. The finale had the folks in an uproar. Played July 19-20.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Universal

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Paul Robeson, Helen Morgan—Not the big special Universal tries to make you believe. After we got through playing this and figured up, we had nothing left. Universal Pictures just don't make money for us. Running time, 112 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—An interesting action play. Many expressed disappointment that there were not more shots of the dam works. Played June 30.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DR. SOCRATES: Paul Muni, Barton MacLane, Ann Dvorak—Very good picture. Scene takes place in an average small town environment. It is not as much of a gangster picture as it is played up to be. Many of our patrons had read the story. For some reason it did not show up at the box office as we had expected. Played July 3-4.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—Fair production. Shows up small towners at their worst. Played July 1-2.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST, THE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—Very well liked and did a satisfactory business. Running time, 83 minutes. Played July 8-9.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

SONS O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown, Joan Blondell—Fit in rather nicely for the toughest holiday of the year. Believe it or not, business was slightly above average. The picture was not quite up to the usual Joe E. Brown standard. Played July 4-6.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

TIMES SQUARE PLAYBOY: Warren William, June Travis—This one missed; dialogue too heavy and what little comedy moments there were did not offset the incessant talk, and not too much to the scenario.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

ANTS IN THE PANTRY: 3 Stooges—A funny though insane comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

FITTING

Pictured in the news section of last week's issue, the presentation of the 1935 Quigley Silver Grand Award by Robert W. Bingham, United States Ambassador to Great Britain, to John Armstrong marks yet another signal advance in the international prestige of the Competitions and their influence upon the good works of theatremen everywhere, intent upon forceful, profitable showmanship.

His Excellency, in presenting the Plaque, emphasized that it had been won by an Englishman for the first time in competition with the entries of American theatremen. The Awards, made possible by Mr. Quigley, were, said his Excellency, keenly coveted and Mr. Armstrong's success an illustration of the friendly relations of the British and American film industries.

It is fitting, indeed, and also gratifying that Mr. Bingham should lend the importance of his high post to the Quigley Awards, a project that by actual accomplishment has also contributed more than a little in earning the goodwill and esteem of our brother showmen across the water.

DRIVES, DRIVES, DRIVES

What ho, friends, to horse—the drive is on.

Yes, folks, it's Mountain time, Pacific time and Eastern Standard time—time for the current drives announced by circuits in all parts of the country to bring in those extra bucks to the boxoffice.

For varying periods, managers will strive with might and main, with every ounce of ingenuity, skill and sheer guts, work themselves into an extra-fine lather to gather in the dollars. Grosses will be whipped up, winners awarded with money prizes and everything is then supposed to be fine and dandy until the next drive—in most cases, starting almost immediately.

The stimulation of theatremen to go after extra receipts is not outside the picture, but the weaknesses as are observed from this end of the table, lie, first, in the shot-in-the-arm methods employed in the conventional drive and, second, in the lack of provision in the final awards for the men who work as hard, increase their grosses, but do not finish in the money.

Theatremen, become accustomed to the artificial stimuli of drive procedure, sooner or later begin to lose their perspective necessary to successful week-in-and-week-out operation. Under the strain created by the lash of home office urging, your manager will work at such fury that the end of the drive will find him all-out and hardly fitted to tackle the problems of the weeks immediately following. Thus all that might be gained during the Big Push is in danger of being lost.

As to the second point in question, there is no denying that the boys who give their all, who bring in extra money but do not land among the winners, are not getting the fairest kind of a shake. A man may accomplish everything short of a miracle and still finish among the also-rans. He, too, does his share, and nobly, but his only consolation is that he may do better in the next contest—but you can't cross knives and forks on that.

The percentage system of remuneration in force by some of the most efficiently operated of circuits, a plan that functions 52 weeks a year, is the only possible method of coming anywhere near guaranteeing higher grosses the year 'round.

The manager who is given credit for knowing his business should be given a reasonable slice of every extra dollar his efforts make possible and, once adopted, the plan removes the "drive" evils of depleted manpower and dissatisfied workers.

A PROFITABLE MEDIUM

The increase in theatre programs carrying merchants' advertising backs up our oft expressed opinion that here is a medium to be utilized profitably by theatremen in many spots relying too much on newspaper publicity.

"Screen News", a smart 16-page, pocket-size magazine, is a case in point. Put out under the supervision of ad chief Earl Hudson for distribution at the United Detroit Theatres, the program strikes an intimate "chatter" note in copy that does an additionally effective job of selling coming shows.

Keen-eyed showmen believe in spreading their ammunition over as wide a range as possible.

THEY WIN IN JUNE

Again France shares honors with the U. S. in the Quigley Awards with the winning of the June Silver plaque by Elias Lapinere (right), Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer publicist, for his excellent campaign on "Night at the Opera" at the Olympia, Paris. The June Bronze was voted to Del Padgett (left), Capitol, Clearwater, Fla., for his fine entry on "Show Boat". Both winners are first timers in the competitions.

Ties "Sudden Death" To Safety Campaign

With the inauguration of a statewide Safety Month drive, Manager Harry Botwick, State, Portland, Me., chose that time to date in "And Sudden Death" and through the booking tied in to a raft of publicity on the civic campaign, getting a strong sendoff through the direct cooperation of Governor Brann's office.

Week ahead, Botwick arranged previews for the local city council, police chief, newspaper and radio heads, oil company, insurance and auto association executives, heads of women's organizations. After the showings, discussions were held with these groups to utilize the picture to help the safety drive, M & P theatres in other spots in the state cooperating as follows: Park, Rockland; Opera House, Bangor, and the Haines, in Waterville.

In the four cities oil companies distributed co-op heralds and used one-sheets at filling stations, insurance companies mailed literature containing picture copy to all accounts, transportation company personnel was advised of the picture date. Boy Scouts, auto associations, public libraries, garages, also aided.

Police departments were helpful, squad cars carrying tire covers and special signs placed on all traffic posts, sandwich boards planted throughout the city. Featured was a Safety Parade (see photo) led by police chief and among the units was a number of wrecked cars suitably bannered. Radio stations gave 15-minute programs with leading citizens speaking in favor of the drive and the picture, billboard companies contributed special 24-sheet boards and merchants carried the special News Flash posters in windows.

Newspaper cooperation was vigorous and much publicity was obtained by a special screening arranged by Botwick of the picture at the recent NEA Convention held at nearby Poland Springs. Picture was introduced by Secretary of State Lewis O. Barrow, who also served as the chairman of the State Safety drive.

DeLuxe Pressbook Created On "Mary of Scotland"

Enclosed in a box the cover of which is superimposed with scenes from the picture, the press book on RKO Radio's "Mary of Scotland" put out by S. Barret McCormick and his staff impresses as a very smart job of work. Book is 15 inches by 12 with black and white scene cut occupying most of cover.

Exploitation promotions are various, including such tieins as publicizing of plaid woolen fabrics through Associated Wool Industries, style promotions through Modern Merchandising Bureau with the Velveteen Association and other fashion leaders on the Walter Plunkett gown, hat and accessory designs.

Smart Slants Used On Revival Dates

Now that so many theatres are using successful revivals of former hit pictures, Les Pollock, at Loew's, Rochester, N. Y., has incorporated a radio twist to stimulate interest in these engagements through a request plan.

Pollock selected a list of top-line features such as "Dinner at Eight," "Copperfield," "Men in White," "House of Rothschild," "Dancing Lady," "Big House," etc. Station then broadcast requests for preference of two of the pictures named to be shown on one program for a revival week. To those suggesting the two shown, guest tickets are awarded. Further buildup comes from lobby listing of eligible pictures with radio tiein announcement.

Plugs Five Stars in "Lady"

In the face of tough current opposition, Louie Charninsky worked out a smart campaign to sell a revival date on "Dancing Lady" at the Rialto, Dallas, in which he plugged in all his advertising those players appearing in the picture who had since become stars on their own. These included Fred Astaire, Franchot Tone and Nelson Eddy, Charninsky giving them the same billing as Crawford and Gable.

Artist Bill Elliott used this angle in the ads, copy stating that the picture was famous for having brought these players to star notice. Same slant was carried out in all publicity lobby and marquee copy with added cutout of Nelson Eddy, local favorite, also featured.

Treasure Hunt Put On By Harrison and Moon

Eddie Harrison, city manager, reports a treasure hunt put on by manager Roland Moon at the State in Waterville, Maine, with cooperating merchant paying for trailer, keys, chests, merchandise, full page co-op ad, etc. The keys were distributed at the theatre and each participating merchant had a chest in his store. Eddie reports the stunt as going over very successfully with everyone well satisfied with the results obtained.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

"ADVERSE" ADVANCE. Lobby setpiece in form of open book with names and photos of leads in "Anthony Adverse" was created as above by Sid Dannenberg, Warner's Cleveland zone publicist.

FAVORS COMMERCIALS

FINDS PATRONS INTERESTED IN SPONSORED SHORTS

To Editor Round Table:

Last week I had the Chevrolet Outdoor Free Show in my Town, which drew a lot of people, and I have given it considerable thought since.

There is a simple and direct way of fighting the free admission road show—the latest threat to the established exhibits—and that is by giving the sponsors a lot more real advertising value for their money on our screens—and banking the money to our account.

It can't be denied that an elaborate road show, playing to open doors in the city hall, would lure away a lot of our regular customers during the week. But a large part of the crowd would be relief workers—and they're not the class the advertiser wants to reach.

We're making it interesting for the big advertisers to interest our patrons in an interesting way. Yes, they do it with one-minute (or less) commercials and pay us for the privilege. We get the cash—eliminate the free show prospect and the advertiser gets far better coverage at a fraction of the cost of staging a road show.

I believe it will pay the trade as a whole to cultivate the big national advertisers. Look what they did for radio—lifting it from a passing fad to a chief entertainment for half the population—and something of a competitor to us.

Legislative bodies haven't made a move to tax radio sets. Yet law-makers can't sit down without proposing some new way to milk the box office. Maybe we need more influential friends? Big advertisers are beginning to find the screen a valuable adjunct—just as the radio is to them—and their support will be worth having.

Americans have shown that they are not adverse to good advertising by their very responsiveness to it. To my notion, a well-conceived commercial of 30 to 90 feet in length will get more interested attention than any other kind of ad. You can tell by looking down the aisles that people give it an alert attention. Most of our patrons realize, too, that they are enjoying better pictures because of the revenue our ad program brings us. Even the railroads couldn't give the same kind of passenger service if they lost their mail contracts.

And in the final analysis, exhibitors who continue to cold-shoulder the commercials are giving a lot of encouragement to the free show promoters, I believe, and are missing a good chance to cash in on the big boom in advertising.—Sincerely yours, Tom Edwards, Eldon's Ozark, Eldon, Mo.

Special "Parole" Screening Held for Law Agents

For his "Parole" date at the Washington Theatre, Chester, Pa., Sol Getzow contacted local prominents and held private screening for all county law enforcing agencies. Immediately following screening forum was held at theatre on "what is wrong with our parole system?" with entire audience in open discussion.

Local newspaper interviewed Sol, who was formerly a State Department of Justice Agent and gave the date a swell buildup in paper. Highlight of campaign was construction of three prison cells on top of the marquee which drew plenty of attention. Picture received swell break when prominent judge after screening gave laudatory comments to reporter.

Home Building Display Used by Cardas

In connection with the Better Housing News Flashes, Spyros Cardas, Loew's State, Los Angeles, recognizing the fact that Americans are interested in homes and home building, arranged a unique display (see photo) through the cooperation of Arthur Fox, assistant chief of the motion picture section of the Federal Housing Administration that created unusual attention. Patrons viewing the exhibit displayed interest by carrying off pieces of literature and expressing thanks for the civic-minded stunt.

To sell his cooling plant, Spyros had special letter printed and these were inserted in all packages checked in theatre, thus insuring his cooling message being brought right into the homes.

A number of stunts were put over by the Shea theatres the past week in Buffalo. In connection with the presentation of the first of the season's Major Bowes' units on the stage of the Buffalo there were parades, public receptions, special radio broadcasts through WBEN, the Evening News station; half-page spreads of Candid Camera shots in the newspapers and interviews galore. A fleet of bannered Plymouths, fifty trucks of the Standard Brands Corporation, two drum corps and a delegation of Eagles, honoring their own local harmonica quintette in the amateur show, turned out to welcome the members of the troupe and paraded to the theatre. In connection with "Early to Bed" several tieups were made with local August furniture sales with the gag line "You'll want to go to bed early if you buy one of these bargain bedroom suites." The same idea was used in a tieup with Simmons Mattresses. Votes are pouring in rapidly to Shea's Buffalo each mail for the coming "Buffalo's Own July Hit Parade," which is scheduled as an overture for the week beginning Friday, July 31.

Patrons Vote on Songs In "Hit Parade" Idea

Theatregoers and music lovers have responded enthusiastically to the first announcement requesting votes. The overture, which will be patterned after the highly successful semi-weekly "Hit Parade," will be offered at the end of each month by the Shea's Buffalo Orchestra Ensemble, under the direction of "Arno." Patrons are urged to participate in the formation of the Hit Parade overtures by sending a letter or card to "Arno" with group of two or three numbers they would like to hear. The songs receiving the highest number of votes each month will be selected for the overture. Vocal and instrumental soloists will be featured.

Parking Restrictions Affect Wilmington Matinee Grosses

Bi-Weekly Farmers' Curb Markets Also Said to Discourage Downtown Attendance

by GEORGE L. PATZER from Wilmington, Delaware

Though the city of Wilmington enjoys increased benefits at the box-office through its increasing popularity as the trading center of the Delmarvia Peninsula, these benefits are discounted to some extent by the lack of public parking space in the downtown areas and the restrictions resulting therefrom, according to correspondent George Patzer, who describes the so-called "First City in the First State" in this instalment of the Showmen's Travelogue series now current in the Round Table.

—A-MIKE VOGEL

A manufacturing, commercial and residential city, Wilmington, "First City of the First State," home of the DuPonts, is located at the head of the Delmarvia Peninsula, one of the richest fruit, truck and farming districts in the country and within 24 hours by train of one-half of the population of the United States. It is the commercial metropolis of Delaware with a population at present of 110,000 persons. Half the population of the State lives in Wilmington; its plants make nearly two-thirds by value, of the products manufactured in the state and its banks hold more than two-thirds of the deposits in the state's banking institutions.

Wilmington in the 1930 census had a population of 106,597 within the corporate city limits, and an immediate estimated suburban population of 60,000. The additional population is located within a 10-mile radius of the city. Ninety per cent of this population is native born, and of the foreign born the majority comes from England, Ireland, Poland, Italy, Germany and Russia.

Patrons Called Artistic

Three railroads, the Pennsylvania, Baltimore and Ohio and Reading enter the city. The city is on the direct route of several of the largest passenger bus lines and direct bus service is maintained between Wilmington and practically every city in the United States. All sections of the city and surrounding suburbs for a radius of about seven miles are served adequately by trolleys charging fares of eight cents, free transfers. Advantage has been taken of the fine roads radiating from the city and regular bus service is available to a large part of the trade territory. Buses have replaced trolleys in many instances with fares practically the same.

From a recreational standpoint Wilmington is conveniently situated. Within two or four hours are the seashore resorts of Delaware, Maryland and New Jersey. A like distance away are the mountains of Pennsylvania and New York. Within the city the municipality has afforded many recreational facilities. Its open parks have a total area of 862.26 acres and there is one acre of park to each 126 inhabitants.

The city affords, also, a large number of supervised playgrounds, baseball, football, soccer and hockey fields, tennis courts and basketball floors, five large public swimming pools and an 18-hole municipal golf course. There are six other golf courses, attached to country and golf clubs.

The present crop of theatres more than take care of the film needs of the city and with a discriminating audience Wilmington is considered just a fair show town and in many quarters hardly rated that. Boasting a very artistic type of audience that is not easily fooled into patronizing mediocre films, Wilmington's theatregoers throng the first class shows, not only in the first run houses, but second and even third run as well. Time and again four-star films have forced theatre managers to hold over pictures from two to five weeks and in some instances bring them back after a change in program.

Wilmington's theatre roster includes 12 houses, six of which are chain and the remaining six independents. Warner Brothers and Loew's are the only chains in the city and State. The Warners have the Aldine, Queen, Arcadia, Grand and Savoy and Loew's have the Parkway. The Parkway, Aldine and Queen are the chain first runs downtown with seating capacity of 1,000, 1,819 and 1,675, respectively. The Arcadia and Grand are the second runs, seating 1,401 and 1,372, with the Savoy a third run holding 700.

The Playhouse, an independent house uptown, seating 1,223, is the only legitimate theatre in the state, occasionally presenting road shows. The theatre carried the highest type of plays.

The Rialto, the lone other downtown house, is an independent first run seating 700. The neighborhood houses, all rated as second runs, are the Park, seating 650; Strand, 600; Avenue, 700, and the National, 600.

Unlike its neighbor state, Pennsylvania, Delaware does not recognize "equal rights," and as a result Negroes are prohibited from all white theatres. The National, a neighborhood house in Wilmington, is the only Negro theatre in the State and draws exceptionally well.

Local merchants for the most part are not exploitation minded and local theatres, with the exception of one or two, do not go in for ballyhoo. Roscoe Drissel of Loew's Parkway is far out in front when it comes to exploitation and in addition to putting over the biggest stunt of the year has had displays in the public library, Hotel DuPont and other important spots downtown. Exploitation, however, could hardly be given as the major reason for the lack of support. Class of pictures seems to be the big reason.

The patronage given downtown situations averages only slightly more afforded de luxe neighborhood houses. Regular habitues and those who miss the downtown first runs keep the neighborhood houses well filled. All the neighborhoods have been improved within the last few years and the popular prices along with the fact that pictures are only 21 days behind the first runs downtown, draw fairly good for first class films. All neighborhood houses are under individual control.

The spread out character of the city creates a natural advantage to the neighborhood theatres which are situated far enough apart to prevent competition. The independents have picked up considerably in attendance in the last few years but the increase in attendance at the numerous beer spots has retarded the upward climb in neighborhood houses from what it might be.

Wilmington is becoming more and more the buying center of the Delmarvia Peninsula, a survey of the trading trends in the territory of which the city is the natural metropolis shows, and this had added considerable to the box office, particularly in the downtown houses. Theatres are noting definite increases in the number of customers attracted from nearby communities and rural areas of Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey and Delaware.

Stage Shows Unsuccessful

The Savoy, a Warner Bros. third run down town, is one of the box office surprises of the year, doing a landslide business after having been shut down during the darkest years of the depression. The house, under the management of Earl Finney, former manager of the Playhouse, is drawing exceptionally well on 15 and 20 cent admissions. The Parkway, once a White Elephant until Loew's took it over, is drawing well with M-G-M pictures and excellent exploitation on the part of Manager Drissel. The Rialto, first run downtown independent, has been doing great business with the Shirley Temple and Will Rogers films, but since the death of Rogers has been forced to depend largely on Temple films to draw.

Taking past box office records into consideration, Wilmington has proved itself a one and two-day vaudeville town. Daily stage shows have failed to click after a number of attempts over several years. The Aldine tried the stage but failed to draw and the Queen has since cut down vaudeville from daily to Saturday shows only. It is the only vaude house in the city and during the warm summer months stage programs are dropped until the fall. Philadelphia is only 28 miles from the city and less than an hour ride by motor and a good portion of the trade is taken to first class vaude houses there.

With the exception of the legitimate stage, the Playhouse, Wilmington houses never go over the 40-cents tops. First runs open with matinee prices as low as 25 cents and scale up to 40, averaging around 32 cents, while the second runs open at 15 and scale to 25 cents, averaging around 20 cents. Prices change at two and six o'clock. Neighborhood houses are only in the evenings with the exception of Saturday, when doors open at noon.

Wilmington's parking situation is a headache to the downtown houses, while the neighborhoods are neither handicapped by parking regulations nor downtown shopping throngs. Beer garden trade offers the only parking opposition for the neighborhood.

In the downtown area parking is limited to one hour up to six o'clock in the evening, after which the regulations are lifted. The restricted area makes it impossible for downtown patrons to take in shows in the afternoon and park within three blocks of any of the theatres without violating the parking law.

Parking Spaces Limited

Another problem crops up in the downtown parking situation on Wednesdays and Saturdays when the farmer curb markets, extending the length of the business district, one block off the main thoroughfare, runs parallel to all seven of the downtown theatres. Parking spaces are limited and few and in most instances are rented to downtown department stores who in turn permit their customers to park free. One large downtown parking area has just been cleared and another is under way. Parking spaces bring an average of 25 cents.

Loew's Parkway, out of the downtown area but located on one of the main streets, is faced with a shortage of parking on Monday nights when the Auditorium, two blocks distant, booking wrestling shows, attracts big crowds and numerous automobiles. The Wilmington High School and the New Century Club, also in the neighborhood also offer a big parking problem.

Excellent trolley and bus service to theatres in all parts of the city make transportation very convenient, but this service fails to compete with the auto in spite of the parking situation. Fares are eight cents.

Wilmington theatremen encounter terrific opposition, particularly from the beer gardens, schools and summer resorts. While there is little or no night life in the city after midnight, the beer spots draw exceptionally well Winter and Summer in spite of the fact that the State Liquor Act prohibits the sales of liquor after 12 o'clock.

Plays in the Wilmington Public Schools have cut deep into the box office, according to a number of the theatres. Public schools throughout the city have two and three plays a week in many instances and nearly all are well patronized.

Summer resorts and swimming pools take the biggest toll in warm weather. Wilmington takes on the appearance of ghost town on Sundays with most of population either to a beach or on the highway. Public swimming pools were opened on Sunday for the first time two years ago and since have drawn heavily on the Sabbath.

Sunday motion pictures are prohibited in Delaware, thus Wilmington theatres are not affected by Sunday attractions. The legalization of Sunday sports after two o'clock in the afternoon will provide a big form of opposition for the theatre in event Sunday movies are ever legalized. Several years ago Sunday movies would not have had to contend with sports and public swimming pools but today these two forms of recreation vie with the resort in popularity.

Carnival's Tough Opposition

The Delaware Sports Center speedway, several miles south of the city, operating one of the fastest midget automobile tracks in the east and carding races weekly, also provides opposition.

Carnivals cut deep into the box office and between the last of May and late in September they come and go in one endless line. The Brandywine Hundred carnival, a mile north of the city, billed the "World's Largest Carnival," attracts between 8,000 and 10,000 persons nightly. Free automobiles awarded each night of the 11-night stand draw the patrons. Wilmington is rated an excellent dance town and dances at the Hotel DuPont draw weekly crowds.

Theatremen in Wilmington are divided on Sunday shows. Some are of the opinion that the city is "cold" to Sunday pictures and that there is no big demand, while others feel that the population patronizes Pennsylvania houses and Delaware, Maryland and New Jersey resorts because of the failure to produce Sunday shows.

Daylight saving time is another form of opposition theatremen vigorously oppose. The advanced time allows but one good show a night, the last show, as the extra hour of daylight attracts the population to the out of doors. The new time also encourages the suburban beer spot trade due to the fact that the suburban gardens do not come under the advanced time and are thus permitted to remain open an hour later than beer gardens within the city limits.

Wilmington theatres have not as yet been caught in the mania of bank nights and double feature programs which are sweeping community theatres throughout the State and Delmarvia Peninsula. Only one theatre in the city, the Avenue, an independent neighborhood, has taken to the giveaways and double features. Wilmington theatremen in general, chain and independent, frown on the practices and so far have successfully "steered clear" of them.

Most of the city's theatre advertising is done on Thursday due to the fact that a majority of the programs change the following day. Theatres use the Journal-Every Evening, an evening paper with a circulation of over 40,000 copies; the Wilmington Morning News, and the Sunday Star, the only daily and Sunday papers in the State.

There is very little advertising and ballyhoo compared with cities of the same size. All newspaper tieups are made for theatres as a group and not so much individually. The papers cooperate wholeheartedly during Christmas shows for the children and the collection of toys and food for the needy.

Over a year ago the two daily papers changed their policies as to theatre publicity. The daily "readers" for pictures were abandoned and in place the News-Journal Company (operating the two daily papers) set aside one full page in the Thursday editions of both evening and morning publications for theatre publicity and advertising. Mrs. Margaret Merchant, the motion picture editor for both papers, is doing an exceptionally fine job of placing the pictures before the public but theatremen seem to favor the daily "reader" over the full page weekly.

They contend that each picture should be exploited individually, particularly in the case of the neighborhood house where programs change daily. The present set-up of newspaper publicity does not keep the pictures before the public at all times, they point out.

Women's Clubs Classify Pictures

Daily and Sunday papers use syndicated and also columns of fan chat by the motion picture editors. A motion picture guide compiled by Mrs. George L. Schwartz of the Better Films Council of the City Federation of Women's Clubs, giving a classification of pictures showing in Wilmington as to audience suitability, based on the joint estimate of many preview groups, carries in the Thursday editions. The only criticisms are given to the legitimate stage shows.

Nearly all theatre managers are members of the various clubs throughout the city and take active part in the programs.

Both chain and independent theatremen get the best of cooperation in opposing laws and ordinances affecting the theatre. Their cooperation to date has been very effective, particularly in the State Legislature at Dover, where a number of important measures working hardships against the theatre were killed through the efforts of the independent organization and the chain houses.

The Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of Delaware and the Eastern Shore of Maryland, of which A. Joseph DeFiore, manager of the Park Theatre, is president, has a membership of 32 theatres, of which 18 are in Delaware, and is constantly on the lookout for any legislation which may tend to hurt the theatre. "The organization brings theatre operation to a better plane," Mr. DeFiore stated in pointing to a number of instances where the organization has been of benefit.

Petch Utilizes Old Photos Of Quins for Lobby Display

Accompanying photo shows attractive "Country Doctor" lobby display used by Ernie Petch, Strand, Brandon, Canada, constructed on beaver board from a collection of photos of the Quins which Ernie has been saving over a period of months. In addition, for his street bally he used a little bannered buggy drawn by Shetland ponies and kids were given rides.

Book stores cooperated by featuring window displays of all books, corresponding films on which were to play at the Strand. In exchange for this, Ernie planted glass case in lobby with copies of "The Country Doctor" and sign that copies were available at the cooperating stores.

Allan Jones Sponsors "Show Boat" Contest

Hopping aboard the extra publicity they could garner on the fact that Allan Jones, male star of "Show Boat," was a Syracuse University graduate, City Manager Gus Lampe and Manager Jay Golden at Schine's Keith Theatre in Syracuse contacted the Syracuse Herald, which sponsored a contest seeking typical success stories for which a $10 prize was awarded and tickets to runners-up. Permission was secured from Universal to shoot a wire to the paper signed by Allan Jones making the cash offer.

Tieup was arranged with 25 leading grocery stores, each of which displayed a large jar of coffee, tickets went to those guessing correct amount. Each store carried stills and picture copy. Store also cooperated with lobby display (see photo) and offer of cut of Maxwell House coffee and sandwich at their store. 16 mm. trailer on "Show Boat" was shown in department store window. Later in week same display was moved to five and ten, bookmarks were distributed at libraries and parade of bannered bikes and cars covered streets.

Various Stunts Highlight Caldwell's "Flags" Date

New fleet of autos with mounted 24 sheets paraded the streets of Toledo for Wally Caldwell's "Under Two Flags" date at Loew's Valentine Theatre, imprinted paper napkins were distributed by leading restaurants and sashes worn by entire staff week ahead.

Newspapers carried long and enthusiastic review comparing Colbert's version with that of Priscilla Dean's in the silent picture. Stunt broke in papers with stories.

Through tieup with local dairy imprinted bottle caps were put on milk bottles, dairy distributing heralds offering a free admission to each kid presenting 40 caps. Window tieups were effected in several department stores, permission was granted to place jumbo cards on street trash cans and chain drug store plugged a "Fauntleroy" sundae.

Cocks' Dempsey Display

A week ahead of the opening of his Jack Dempsey short, "The Idols of Millions," Harvey Cocks, Strand Theatre, Akron, Ohio, rigged up a display board as per accompanying photo. K. O. Christner, ex-pug and local resident, was promoted for old gloves from his collection and these properly captioned were included in the eye-attracting display.

Morning Premiere Tops "Things" Date

Theatremen are accustomed to putting on premieres of important dates either at night or at special midnight showings but Manager Bill Hendricks did it differently by arranging an elaborate opening for "Things to Come" at the Warner, Memphis, Tenn., at eleven o'clock in the morning. Three stations broadcast the unusual event, prominent citizens broadcast their opinions, and a bathing girl revue (entrants wearing "things to come" in swim styles) was held with gals doing their stuff on platform in front of theatre. Bands were on hand to add color and bathing beauties also were taken around town on special float with men costumed in period of the picture.

Newspapers of course came in on the stunt and cooperated further with three contests. First was a six-day spread on how Memphis would look in 100 years, guessing the population of the city in that time and other similar questions. Second was a tiein with paper's juvenile air club, members building what they thought would be the kind of model planes used in 2036. Third contest was a jig-saw puzzle, the scene taken from one of the stills with entrants asked to put it together to see what the city of the future would look like. Advertising included a co-op page and a series of large co-op ads.

Television Gag Clicks

Lobby stunts featured a "search for an adjective" idea with patrons submitting a word to fit their opinion of the picture. Sight stuff was taken care of with an exhibit labeled: "Look In the Crystal Ball" wherein scene stills were placed behind a condenser lens used for a crystal. Another lobby flash was a television gag (see photo) with stills attached to revolving panel behind opening in center of panel of display.

Radio buildups were worked with three stations—a "man on the sidewalk" inquiring reporter stunt out front; a contest to select "Miss 2036" in conjunction with leading night club. Third radio hookin was a half-hour sketch on the picture produced by Hendricks himself.

Costumed men on the streets, girls at swimming pools with lettered swim balls, cooperation of Paul Whiteman in town for the Cotton Carnival Ball, tieins for windows at grocers and filling stations, co-op heralds at markets and the Ingo bike tieup were some of the other smart things put over by this Round Tabler to earn the only First Mention given in the Quigley June Awards.

Identification Contest Held by Pierce for " 'Frisco"

Through the cooperation of the Wisconsin News, Roy Pierce, Wisconsin Theatre, Milwaukee, put on an old time movie star identification contest to sell "San Francisco," contest running six days with two-column cut each day of some old star. The prizes were two round trip tickets to the coast and $25 each to the two winners, plus a tour of the studios.

Special screening was held for newspaper critics, leading department store devoted special window to over-sized photo of MacDonald displaying hose and Max Factor cosmetics were planted in drug stores.

TELEVISION GAG. Fashioned by Bill Hendricks for "Things to Come," was a television idea for lobby display explained in column to left.

GHOST STUNT. To sell his "Ghost Goes West" campaign at the Istrione Theatre, Jackson, Miss., Marion E. Ferrera, used an "animated" ghost properly bannered to tour business sections.

UNIQUE BALLY. Out in Singapore at the Roxy Low Kee Choe, owner, and Manager I. I. Salim rigged up these boys with shields and spears to cover streets selling "Last Days of Pompeii".

CADET PARADE. Joe Lefave (center), Tivoli, Walkerville, Ont., Can., promoted the Windsor Sea Cadets for two-mile parade to theatre carrying "Fleet" banners. Boys later entertained on stage.

Manager Cooperates With Summer Show

by CARL BEALS

Manager, Strand, Skowhegan, Me.

In my town here there is Lakewood, probably one of the best known summer theatres in the country, giving plays every evening throughout the summer months and starring many actors and celebrities of the stage, screen and radio. Frankly, in my situation I do not try to compete with Lakewood, nor they with us here, rather we try to work more with each other and exchange publicity. In their lobby and at the golf club they display my posters and cards. Programs are circulated among the people there. Last year and the year before we were given a half-page ad in their regular program.

Perhaps it may seem odd to you that we do not worry more about this summer theatre and rack our brains and tear our hair trying to find some method of competing with them. But as I have said, we both get along very nicely together exchanging advertising, etc., and doing little favors for one another. They are really no competition whatsoever in this particular situation. In the first place, they charge $1.10 admission to the shows, whereas our prices are 10-25-35 for pictures. This town is a mill and shoe-shop town and those people as a whole do not patronize Lakewood as the price is too much for them to afford. They had rather go to movies.

Lakewood does not draw very many people from this town, but draws mostly from the larger cities such as Bangor, Lewiston, Auburn, Augusta and Portland, some coming many miles to spend week-ends and take in the shows. Prices, of course, have a lot to do with it and also there are many people who would rather see a good movie than a stage drama anyway.

Stars Make "Personals"

Another item which I often have an opportunity to cash in on is the matter of personal appearances at my theatre of many of the stars that appear at Lakewood. Of course, they do not charge me for these appearances as they are always glad to oblige. I usually have them here the week before they are to appear at Lakewood and during the course of their appearance permit them to get in a plug for their appearance at Lakewood the following week. Often their publicity director is permitted to get in a plug from my stage as he introduces the actor or actress to my people.

The performers only work evenings, so attend the matinees here regularly and we get quite a little business from them. In my case it is better to play with them rather than to try to buck them. Their shows are entirely different, they cater to a different clientele, their prices are considerably higher and they run the same show a full week, whereas we change program here five times a week, so there is plenty opportunity to see both their offerings and ours. A good picture will pack them in regardless of a summer theatre or anything else, and investments the size of Lakewood, with its theatre, inn, stores, club house, dancing pavilion, bungalows, golfing, etc., cannot be carried off on your back—it will always be here, a fact we well recognize.

CHICAGO ALLIED FIGHTS CHANGES IN CLEARANCE

Members Decide Not to Buy More Product Until Present Issue Is Settled; Define Stand

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

Chicago members of Allied Theatres of Illinois decided on Tuesday not to buy any more new product until the raging contention over clearance is settled. This action precipitates a taut situation, as major distributors had planned to start city selling intensively next week.

Allied expressed itself as definitely opposed to distributors' granting Balaban and Katz an extra week of clearance between the C week and first week of release, asserting that such a grant would be in violation of an agreement made years ago to the effect that no one circuit and distributors could change the clearance plan without obtaining the agreement of independent exhibitors and other circuits. Conferences have been set for next week in hope of ironing out the differences.

Aaron Saperstein, head of Allied, has been authorized to start court action against Balaban and Katz over the clearance matter unless a satisfactory agreement is reached, but has said he hopes matters can be settled so that this will not be necessary.

Outstanding among the numerous changes announced in the local Paramount distribution organization is the promotion of Barney Barnard, sales manager of the Chicago office, to branch manager of the Indianapolis exchange. Eddie Fontaine is district manager.

Other changes in the personnel are as follows: Otto Bolle has resigned as branch manager of the Detroit exchange to join Twentieth Century-Fox's foreign department. His place is being filled by John Howard, Indianapolis branch manager. Barnard takes Howard's Indianapolis post after 12 years in the local exchange. The Chicago sales manager's job goes to Harry Hamburg, city salesman for many years, and Harry Wirthwein, country salesman, comes into the city office while Ben Elrod, circuit booker, goes downstate in a sales capacity.

A testimonial dinner was given for Bolle in Detroit last Monday night. That noon a luncheon was given in Barnard's honor at the Knickerbocker hotel here. On Friday night the Variety Club in Indianapolis paid tribute to Howard.

Excitement no end greeted the announcement that a contest to select the "Queen of the CAPA Midnite Cruise" was being launched by the members of the Chicago Amusement Publicists Association as a part of the many festivities in their voyage on the SS Roosevelt Tuesday night, August 18th.

Tickets for the cruise, which will be highlighted by all sorts of entertainment, fun and frolic, are on sale at the CAPA Cruise headquarters, 908 South Wabash avenue. Each ticket allows the purchaser 1,000 votes. A $50 cash award will go to the winner of the title. Accommodations for 1,800 are available on the Great Lakes luxury liner.

Members of Allied Theatres of Illinois are definitely opposed to the appearance of first rank film stars in radio programs, according to Aaron Saperstein, president. The independent group is so much opposed that decision may be taken within the next few weeks to do all possible towards stopping the big Hollywood radio shows, which, according to exhibitors, keep theatre patrons at home nights. Several Illinois showmen have declared that on the nights of such programs as the Lux Radio Theatre and Hollywood Hotel there is a definite falling off in theatre attendance. This drive against the "free" radio shows "is expected to get under way early this fall.

HOLLYWOOD PREVIEW

"Down to the Sea"
(Republic)

HOLLYWOOD, June 30.—Against the fresh and interesting background of sponge fishing, this picture tells a dramatic, romantic love story, cleared to a thrilling action plot in which the quality of suspense has been deftly and ... both educational and entertaining. The yarn is ba... of conflict in business and love. Much of the ... surface of the ocean off the Florida keys ... sponges. This is an exploitation asset ... sponge gathering, makes possible ...

... story is acceptable, real entertainment and ... worth of picture are confined to the drama of sponge fishing ... Hardie. HELL BENT for CULTURE

MOTION PICTURE promotion is these days running hot on the trail of box office attention through cultural status. "Photoplay studies" are issuing at a great rate and the educational institutions of the land are being invited to discover and appreciate the large injections of ready-made erudition that can be had by the young on observing the projection of this and that imposing drama.

So far the results have been considerable and important for the box office, although not exactly colossal. What the results have been or are going to be educationally we shall perhaps have to wait a generation to discover.

Meanwhile this is not to be taken as any lack of appreciation of the potentialities of the motion picture as a medium in education, at such time as the motion picture may be utilized by educators. That is another activity, apparently still remote and as far from the theatrical business as Miss Sally Rand is from Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler.

IT is safe to assume that the musty, dusty halls of education have not suffered any loss of institutional values through the breezes of the cinema, and not a few educators have felt and evidenced a certain enlivenment by their contact with this most vividly active business of the great world outside their cloistered walls—the motion picture of the millions.

Meanwhile it would appear that a certain caution about this merry new publicity chase might well be exercised. After all, this is the show business, purveying entertainment above all else and mostly regardless of all else. History, fact and research are used where they help to produce the end result of the customer satisfied with his emotional pabulum.

But the most faithful of novels, plays and pictures have about as much bearing on fact and human forces as the operatic version of "Wilhelm Tell" has upon the history of Austria. Repeated and continued emphasis on the great educational values of the screen's amusement offerings are in peril of becoming in time invitations to unhappy, unhelpful check-ups on the fact. When the educators get over the fun and thrill of their new contact there may be a period of analytical consideration, an audit of the screen alongside the dry texts, the records. That is not a day to invite.

The situation is not one of special concern to the producer, but it is likely to mean a deal to the sellers and purveyors. And the condition presented is not peculiar to motion picture selling, either. Just for instance there is one cigarette campaign which promises second wind, better digestion and relief from everything but falling hair to the smoker. That will not justify the motion picture in heading toward a box office promise of a degree of M.A. cum laude with every loge seat.

THE motion picture got itself into a considerable mess of moral issues not so long ago by following the patterns and colors of box office pabulum made for the sophisticated metropolitan minority audiences of the stage. It was basically an error of being misled in the name of kudos and precedent. The educational alley has as many perils.

The motion picture's job is to be first class entertainment—not more, not less.

When the motion picture does that job its position is perfect.

When the artists get to playing with history it is ever twisted and warped by what may well be called the propaganda of heart's desire. The story always gets better than the facts. We get Parson Weems' silly fiction of Washington and the cherry tree. We get General Pershing telling "Lafayette, we come." We get Christopher Columbus doing parlour tricks with a soft boiled egg. Also we have such a traditional ridiculousness as making Niccolo Machiavelli, who was in truth a mere yes man and clerk to a Duke of Florence, into a symbol of world intrigue. Niccolo wrote much, but did nothing. The same technique gives us as a great figure of history one Samuel Pepys, who in truth rated in the reign of Charles II in about the ratio of a script holder on a DeMille set.

History is a science. The motion picture is the amusement business.

This Week

Newsreel Muzzle

Chancellor Hitler has decreed that American newsreels covering the Olympic games must advertise Germany. American newsreel coverage of the international event is barred except under stringent regulations supervised by Miss Leni Riefenstahl, appointed by Der Führer to complete control. American companies must employ German cameramen, wearing the official Nazi Olympic uniform, and use of German equipment is specified. All footage not used in newsreel issues is the property of Germany for propaganda films, a long feature and a score of short subjects being planned.

Details and the text of the contract start on page 13.

ASCAP-Warner

End to the seven months estrangement which witnessed Warner-controlled music publishing units, withdrawn from the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, entrenched in opposition to the society was written by the organization's board of directors on August 3rd when, by unanimous vote, the six companies were restored to membership. Suits brought for infringement of copyright were to be dropped and 36,000 musical works, restricted during the period of strife, made available at once to society licensees.

Details, past and present, are published on page 22.

"Dodsworth"

Sinclair Lewis, lately in the headlines lamenting that his novel, "It Can't Happen Here," couldn't happen here, is again in the foreground of Hollywood conversation as the Samuel Goldwyn production of his "Dodsworth" goes forward with Walter Huston portraying on the screen the name character he created on the Broadway stage. William Wyler is director of a cast including well knowns and unknowns.

Gus McCarthy's pictorial preview of the picture is presented on pages 16 and 17.

Movie Festival

Novel promotional ideas will be put to work in St. Louis by Fanchon and Marco, Loew's and Ansull Brothers Circuit, working together, to make 3,000,000 persons in that vicinity "motion picture conscious" in an elaborate "movie festival" to be staged in September, as "the greatest exploitation stunt in history."

Earning Prospects

Wall Street this week rated the motion picture's earning prospects for the fall as the best in years, because of a series of good pictures and the fact that the public is again spending money on amusements. Financial attention was directed at the same time to a study of the Fox Film financial condition. Also, a minority stockholders' suit against Fox for an appraisal of the stock was dismissed; Miles Detroit Theatre Company, Detroit, listed its stock holdings with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington; Arthur Loew's stock acquisitions were reported by the commission, the while Metropolitan Playhouses in New York reported a net loss of $45,283.

Otterson Settlement

The expected court battle over the contract held by John E. Otterson with Paramount Pictures, Inc., failed to materialize when it was announced this week that a settlement between the former president and the company had been made. The announcement came in the form of an official statement from the board of directors of the corporation following a meeting held late last week.

Other matters taken up at the meeting, such as the election of Henry Herzbrun to a vice-presidency of the parent corporation and the merger of that organization with Paramount Productions, Inc., are included in the story found on page 67.

Return to Glory

Return to the glory that was the Hollywood premiere in pre-depression years was hailed by pleased professionals and plain people on the evening of July 29th when "Anthony Adverse" opened at the Carthay Circle theatre, Los Angeles, under circumstances glitteringly indicative that the "good old days" are here again. Attendance records were broken at a paid price of $5.50 per seat.

An account of the premiere and a report of the significance read into it by observers is published on page 55.

Jack Cohn vs Aylesworth

There is no possibility of a general working agreement between the radio and the motion picture whereby stars, built up and supported by the film industry, can be lent to broadcasting companies for entertainment via the air waves, Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, declared this week, in answer to M. H. Aylesworth, of RKO and NBC. In an article in the Herald of July 18th Mr. Aylesworth had proposed such an understanding between the two industries as a benefit to both.

Mr. Cohn's strong feeling on the matter is expressed on page 61.

Cuba Reconsiders

Following trade protest to the State Department of the United States which brought about action by the American Embassy in Cuba, the Cuban cabinet has reconsidered its plan to estalish in New York a censorship headquarters for the inspection, at $10 a reel, of American made films exported to that country. Major distributors had withheld product since July 1st.

Details are on page 24.

16mm. Expansion

Rapid expansion of the 16mm. non-theatrical field is foreshadowed by the report that Warner Brothers will follow several other companies in the narrow width production and will make its film library available to manufacturers of 16mm. sound equipment. The report brought a formal protest from Harry Vinnicoff, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California, who declared that the ITO and other exhibitor organizations throughout the country are preparing to combat possible competition from the narrow width product. Progress in the field has been stimulated by partial success in the efforts being made by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to obtain uniform international standards for the 16 mm. film.

Recent developments in the field are related on page 68.

Filming Spain's War

Disregarding strict photographic censorship restrictions imposed by both sides, American newsreel cameraman are in Spain filming the battle between the rebels and the loyalists. They are working, of course, under cover, but, nevertheless, their experiences are as thrilling as if they were openly riding the armored tanks of either side.

Cables from the revolt-torn country describe the coverage by American cameramen of Spain's tragedy. See page 57.

Schenck-GB

Principals on both sides of the Atlantic emphatically denied reports gaining currency this week to the effect that the tri-party transaction aligning Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Twentieth Century-Fox and Gaumont-British production and distribution interests had been delayed or abandoned as a result of Parliamentary and financial attitude toward details. Recurrently mentioned, both in denials and persisting reports, was the matter of British control of the company.

Aspects of the situation are reviewed on page 26.

British Protection

Out of the myriad discussions and suggestions precipitated in England by the Gaumont British-MGM-Twentieth Century-Fox deal one heard frequently is the prediction that a more stringent Films Act will result, for protection of nationals' employment, in the interest of home control of film companies, and to guide quota operation.

Developments in these and other directions in the British market appear on page 76.

Double Bill Prescription

Hollywood producers are taking the first step toward gradual elimination of the double feature evil of which the public has grown "sick and tired," according to Ralph Cokain, advertising manager of three independent theatres in Marion, Ind. In the increased length of better grade features he sees hope for the exhibitor who wants to drop the plan but can not find a way out. If pictures are made longer and at the same time so filled with entertainment value that they will not tire the patrons, he predicts a natural death for the depression-born practice.

Mr. Cokain's views on the matter are quoted on page 44.

Uruguay Looks Up

Business in Montevideo is the best in years, and the conditions in the premier city of Uruguay are reflected throughout the Republic, writes Paul Bono to MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Sellouts are no longer rare at the first-run theatres and the subsequent-runs are proportionately happier. The improvement is attributed to the increased importation of high-class American productions.

These and other developments in the South American country are traced in the article on page 98.

Federal Tax to Stay

Continuation of present federal amusement levies is indicated in reports from Washington that Treasury officials will ask Congress to reenact present sales and nuisance taxes which produce about $425,000,000 annually. Ohio exhibitors have been warned that exemption of food from the state retail sales tax levy may mean a resumption of a 10 per cent admission tax which was repealed last year. Theatre owners in New Orleans and in Nova Scotia received boons in the form of amusement tax reductions.

Details of the tax situation developments are given on page 20.

Production Upturn

Production gained volume and velocity last week as Hollywood completed work on 12 pictures and started 13. Three of the 13 were placed in work by RKO-Radio, striking a pace expected to be maintained for several months. They are "The Big Game," "Winterset" and "We Are About to Die." Seven studios accounted for the dozen completed films.

Gus McCarthy's report of the production situation, naming titles, casts and directors of pictures finished and started, appears on page 31.

"Seeing" Sound

A young woman evidencing an articulate knowledge of art and mathematics and a young man with apparently promising ability in motion picture photography are producing what they claim is a new form of art, using the facilities of the screen for expression. Described in simple words, the experiment results in "seeing sound." The latest of their reels, called "Synchromy No. 2" and based on the music of Wagner's "Evening Star," was on the program with "Mary of Scotland" last weekend at the Radio City Music Hall in New York.

The ideas of the young experimenters and how they appear in the finished product are detailed on page 62.

Anti-Trust Suit

The trial of independents against majors in Kansas City, in the matter of Rolsky vs. Fox Midwest and large distributors, ended this week when both sides rested and prepared for summations in midweek.

Testimony in the trial, and other important developments involving trade practices, appear on pages 71 and 74.

Admission Prices

Motion picture theatre owners are beginning to discuss the advisability of increasing their admission prices and to seek means of solving the problem offered them by federal taxation, which is aided by local imposts in many situations. In Cleveland, this week, the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association called a special meeting to discuss the matter. In New York, prominent theatre executives also presented their views on the subject.

For details, see the story on page 70.

Italy Invites Films

While no change is expected immediately in restriction on importation of films into Italy, indications are that the ban is to be lifted with respect to pictures from this country, Germany, Austria and Hungary when plans of companies representing them to produce in Italy materialize.

A thorough survey of the Italian trade scene is presented on page 45.

Consolidation

Stuart Doyle, head of Greater Union Theatres of Australia, in New York this week revealed that while in London he had completed a deal with British financiers for $2,500,000 which he will use in a consolidation of all his Australian theatrical interests.

Details of the interview with Mr. Doyle are given on page 20.

HITLER MAKES U. S. OLYMPIC FILMS ADVERTISE GERMANY

Bars Coverage Except Under Stringent Regulations Supervised by Actress; Must Use German Camera Staffs

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Adolph Hitler decrees that American newsreels must advertise Germany at the Olympic Games, and on his terms. All else is streng verboten.

Der Fuehrer has laid down an absolute dictatorship over U. S. reels at the Olympics, forbidding them to photograph the world-owned sports property except under the most stringent regulations, and then only with the consent and under the close supervision of his friend, Miss Leni Riefenstahl, pretty German motion picture actress, to whom he has given complete control over all filming at the great Reich stadium, and who designates the subjects to be filmed.

Chancellor Hitler took steps to make certain that there would be full compliance by the American companies when he compelled them to sign a contract of strong contents governing their coverage of the event. It prescribes the when and where and how American newsreels may make a pictorial record of the games and the Americans participating therein. Miss Riefenstahl is the contractor.

Mr. Hitler's action was pre-determined before the opening of the games last Saturday, and had no bearing whatsoever on the refusal of the United States Olympic entrants to salute him as he stood in his state box reviewing the long athletic procession winding around the red and green paths of the stadium.

The American newsreels even were forbidden to film the dazzling scene of color and splendor at last Saturday's opening of this eleventh and greatest of the Olympics, the while 110,000 spectators heard a choir of 1,000, all in white, and an orchestra of a half-dozen German military bands render Wagner's "Hymn of Praise."

The American newsreels as such are barred from filming any of the games directly, but may do so only through Actress Riefenstahl. Then they must place all of the exposed positive and negative film which they arrange for at the disposal of Miss Riefenstahl, for Mr. Hitler, without any cost to the Nazis. In addition, the newsreels are obliged to furnish to Hitler, at minimum cost, one "lavender" print, which is substantially a negative, as well as one black-and-white print of each Olympic newsreel subject which they release in American theatres, or elsewhere in the world. All such material, according to the contract, must be delivered to Hitler's agents "directly and in first class condition" by August 25th, at the latest.

Mr. Hitler took from the International Olympic Committeemen—representing the Text of Hitler's Film Contract Controlling All Actions of U.S. Newsreels at Olympics

A translation from the German, done in Berlin, of the contract which Adolph Hitler prescribed for the control of American newsreels at the Olympic Games in Germany, shows the extent to which Der Fuehrer has imposed a dictatorship that virtually bans the reels from directly filming this international event, except through the pretty, blonde German film actress, Miss Leni Riefenstahl. In addition to the contract, which the American newsreels must sign with Miss Riefenstahl, and the text of which appears below, there is a set of "working rules" which are even more stringent:

AGREEMENT

Between

the Olympiade-Film G.m.b.H. represented by Miss Leni Riefenstahl, hereafter called "G.m.b.H." of Berlin Neukoelln, Harzerstrasse 39 and

"Firma"

the following contract referring to the coverage of events of the Olympic Summer Games is made.

I.

This agreement includes all events as mentioned in the official time-schedule of the Organization Committee for the 11th Olympic Games, as well as all shots which may be taken in connection with these games from 8 a.m. of August 1st, 1936. This refers especially to shots taken (e.g.) of the official festival in the Berlin "Lustgarten" at 12 o'c; the run of the torch-bearer on this date; the drive of the Leader (Mr. Hitler) and the Olympic Committee through the triumphal-road, etc. Further this agreement includes all shots taken in the Olympic Village before and during the games and all shots taken of the training work of Olympic contestants.

This agreement does not include, however, the torch run from Athens up to the gates of Berlin; furthermore it does not include any governmental or other official receptions on occasion of the games, e.g. art events, sail-flying contests, the meeting of the international youth associations in their tent camp, etc.

II.

The Minister for Popular Enlightenment and Propaganda has put Miss Leni Riefenstahl, manager of the Olympiade-Film G.m.b.H., in charge of the management of the German news reel companies in the same manner as this was done before on occasion of the turning of the Party-Day-Film "Triumph des Willens."

At the same time the reel companies are held to put the total of their positive and negative material—with the exception of the cut original negative of the censored newsreels—at the disposal of the "G.m.b.H." without pay. In addition hereto the reel companies are obliged to furnish at cost price one lavender print as well as one black and white print of each newsreel released in the theatres.

Furthermore the reel companies have to deliver to the "G.m.b.H." at cost price a first-class lavender print of all footage delivered to foreign countries.

The reel companies are obliged to treat the negative as carefully as possible to draw a black and white print from the complete negative (i.e. from all shots taken by them) and to do the cutting on the positive print. The cost for this positive print as well as any additional expenses arising from the cutting job on the positive print are being borne by the "G.m.b.H.". This does not include Emelka News Reel Company, because it is their habit to do the cutting on the positive print.

The total of the material as mentioned herein has to be delivered directly and in first class condition to the "G.m.b.H." until August 25, 1936 at the latest.

III.

The "G.m.b.H." has been appointed by the Olympic Committee as the Central Organization for all filming made during the Olympic Games. Therefore "G.m.b.H." grants to all film companies cooperating at the Olympic Summer Games the necessary letters of authority; assign the requested operation space (as far as possible) and hold the reel companies to keep strictly to the orders issued by them (G.m.b.H.)

"G.m.b.H." will furnish the reel companies with the fixed program schedules as soon as they themselves get hold of such information from the Olympic Committee and will, instead and on behalf of the Olympic Committee, give all information necessary for the taking of pictures to the reel companies.

In order to guarantee a concordant cooperation between the reel companies and "G.m.b.H." the following details must be submitted:

a) The names and number of cameramen and their help, number and details of the motor cars and sound cars used;

b) Their requests regarding the individual sporting events. "G.m.b.H." will try their utmost to fulfill all requests, provided that the consent of the Olympic Committee can be obtained. In case that the alloted space does not suffice for the activities of all reel companies, and, provided that these companies do not come to an agreement between themselves, the Manager of the "G.m.b.H.", Miss Leni Riefenstahl will act as arbiter.

c) The reel companies are also held to assign a representative who has to attend the direction conferences. These conferences will be held as necessity arises, but surely once a day, and the reel companies are bound to act strictly in accordance with any decisions taken at these conferences, as to avoid differences with the Olympic Committee, The "G.m.b.H." asks that express attention be paid to the fact that the Olympic Committee is entitled to expell any cameraman or operator regardless whether he be a member sports countries of the world—all authority on American and other newsreel coverage, and, through his newsreel "contract," forbade any agency other than that which he placed in the hands of Miss Riefenstahl from giving any information for the taking of pictures to the newsreel companies.

Must Use German Cameramen

The American newsreels cannot use their own cameramen, but must employ German nationals from Miss Riefenstahl, or cameramen approved by her. But the American companies cannot designate how these cameramen are to work for them. Miss Riefenstahl has full control of assigning "space."

"In order to guarantee a concordant cooperation" between the newsreels and Miss Riefenstahl, the newsreels are compelled to submit to the actress the names and number of all members of the newsreel staffs working on the event, and even the number and details of motor cars used.

The newsreels must submit to Miss Riefenstahl "their requests regarding the individual sporting events" which they desire to have photographed. The contract says that Miss Riefenstahl will try to the "utmost to fulfill all requests." In case the alloted space does not suffice for the activities of all newsreel companies, "and, provided that these companies do not come to an agreement between themselves," then Miss Riefenstahl will act as "arbiter."

Bound by "Conferences"

Each newsreel is compelled by the contract to assign a representative to attend daily conferences with Miss Riefenstahl, "and the reel companies are bound to act strictly in accordance with any decisions taken at these conferences." The contract reminds the signers that "the Olympic Committee is entitled to expel any cameraman or operator . . . from further activity if he does not comply strictly with the orders."

The American newsreel managements cannot even be certain that their staffs will not be conscripted by the Hitlerites, for a clause buried midway in the contract provides that "the newsreel companies, if so requested, have to put at the disposal of 'G.m.b.H.' (the Riefenstahl agency) any of their cameramen who are not busy."

One of the clauses in the document which especially irks some of the American newsreel companies is that which forbids them from using, "themselves or through the medium of third parties," any of the Olympic film which they acquire in any medium other than their regular newsreel issues. The newsreels, for example, cannot themselves, nor may their parent companies or affiliates, make an Olympic Games short subject or feature or other film. The contract says: "The newsreel firm is under no condition allowed to use or have used any of their shots in such a manner that by compilation of several newsreels or sequences thereof another film is obtained; the only permitted use of their coverage is to compile the usual newsreels which are screened together with program pictures.

If any American newsreel later violates any of these clauses, the Nazi Government may in some forceful manner express its disapproval to the German branches of the American newsreel found guilty of the violation, according to conclusions drawn in New York by American newsreel representatives, who do not, therefore, expect that there will be any violations of Mr. Hitler's decree.

In order further to assure his obtaining full rights to all of the Olympic films for use in a propaganda feature, Mr. Hitler's contract provides that the Reifenstahl agency shall "reserve to themselves all copyrights" for all of the film taken by all of the American newsreels.

He further stipulates that no more than 2,624 feet (800 metres) may be taken out of Germany per week, covering the dozens of events staged every day.

The newsreels are bound to "force any foreign parties handling these reels to comply strictly with all conditions" of the contract, and Mr. Hitler will hold the newsreels accountable for any violations by such "foreign parties."

Any film acquired by the American newsreels which is not sent out of Berlin by them automatically becomes the property of the Nazis on and after September 15th.

Mr. Hitler's contractual regulations apply to all events as mentioned in the official time-schedule of the International Olympics Committee, as well as all shots which may be taken in connection with these games, effective from eight o'clock on the morning of August 1st, the opening day. "This refers especially," the contract explains, to shots taken of the official festival in the Berlin stadium at noon of the opening day, the run of the torch-bearer on that date, the triumphal ride of Fuehrer Hitler and the International Olympic Committee through the stadium and the flag-draped arches. Further, "this agreement includes all shots taken in the Olympic Village before and during the games and all shots taken of the training work of Olympic contestants." Obviously, then, the American newsreels are prohibited even from making motion pictures of the American teams in training, in their bungalows or elsewhere as they stroll through the Olympic Village, unless they adhere strictly to Mr. Hitler's dictates.

The agreement admits that Mr. Hitler could not control the filming of the historic Olympic torch run from Athens up to the gates of Berlin, last Saturday, but his contract does "reserve the right" to request delivery to him of any films taken of this event by the American reels, even though of "G.m.b.H." or another company—from further activity if he does not comply strictly with the orders issued by the Olympic Committee.

d) Furthermore the reel companies have, if so requested, to put at the disposal of "G.m.b.H." any of their cameramen who are not busy on work for the Olympic Reels.

IV

"G.m.b.H." is not allowed to use any of the newsreel shots for purposes other than that in the Olympiade-Film.

On the other hand the reel companies are bound to use any of their prints—be it by themselves or through the medium of third parties—only and exclusively for projection of the usual newsreels. The "Firma" is under no condition allowed to use or have used any of their shots in such a manner that by compilation of several newsreels or sequences thereof another film is obtained; the only permitted use of their coverage is to compile the usual newsreels which are screened together with program pictures. It is not allowed to use any Olympic newsreel shots for the compilation of program pictures, educationals, etc. "G.m.b.H." reserve to themselves all copyrights for the total Olympic coverage of the reel companies and grant solely permission that this coverage is used for the usual projection (screening) within the usual newsreel.

The length of these newsreel films to be screened in Germany, is not to exceed 250 metres and "Firma" is only allowed to compile newsreels within a four-day period, respectively twice a week. "Firma" is, however, at liberty to subdivide the allowed weekly total quantity of 500 metres into smaller portions than 250 metres. The length of newsreels exported to foreign countries is not to exceed 400 metres or 800 metres per week.

These quantities refer only to films covering events as stipulated in No. I of this contract.

"Firma" is expressly bound to force any foreign parties handling these reels—especially those parties handling the lavender prints abroad—to comply strictly with all conditions as specified under No. IV.

V

Concerning all events connected with the Olympic Games and not included in this contract (such as the torch race run from Athens up to the gates of Berlin, international youth meetings, etc.) the following is ordered:

a) "G.m.b.H." reserve to themselves the right to request delivery of certain films of these events. In the case of such a request, the conditions for its use are equal to those specified under No. II of this agreement.

b) To such shots No. III of this contract cannot be applied. If necessary the reel companies have to obtain themselves all required identification papers, letters of authority, etc., etc.

c) No. IV of this agreement refers to such shots only, if "G.m.b.H." should request delivery of same.

VI

The original negative of the cut (finished) newsreels which the company does not need any more (provided same has not been delivered to foreign countries) has to be submitted to "G.m.b.H." until September 15, 1936, at the latest. "G.m.b.H." will pay for it to "Firma" the cost price of the dupe negative which has to be kept in the records of "Firma."

CAMERAMEN USE GERMAN UNIFORMS

held and photographed outside the borders of Germany.

Herr Hitler, in addition, has had Miss Riefenstahl devise a set of "working rules" which apparently are not available to the public, but which, nevertheless, are being enforced as strenuously as the contract itself.

These provide that every cameraman filming the Olympic Games must wear the official Hitler-prescribed Nazi Olympic uniform. With German cameramen doing the shooting, the American newsreels find themselves in the position of being represented by Hitler-controlled subjects, wearing the Hitler uniform. If there are any concessions made, and an American representative is permitted to handle the camera for an American reel, the "working rules" provide that, "regardless of nationality," the cameraman must wear the Nazi uniform.

Each cameraman must be accompanied by a German agent who will act as an individual censor on the spot, whether the subjects are photographed in action or are staged.

A second censorship of the American newsreels' subjects follows when the reel turns over a print to the government.

Too, the American companies must use German sound equipment. If they insist on bringing in American equipment they are compelled by Mr. Hitler's decree to leave the equipment in Germany for a whole year at the disposal of the Nazi Government.

Motor cars and other transportation media required by any American newsreel staff must be engaged through or from Miss Riefenstahl.

Admittedly for Propaganda Reels

One of the admitted reasons for Hitler's self-acquired control of the coverage of the Olympic Games by American and other foreign newsreels at Berlin is to use the film thus photographed not only in a huge propaganda motion picture, but, subsequently in a series of short subjects, to use in developing sports and athletic prowess in Germany. Repeatedly, Miss Riefenstahl warns that the Americans cannot make such use of any of the film which their newsreels might acquire, but that the Nazis alone have that right.

Miss Riefenstahl, in an interview with a Berlin reporter for Universal Service, disclosed that her plans call for the taking of 1,500,000 feet of film during the fortnight's Olympics.

Feature and 20 Shorts

Aside from the main Olympic film, which will be a full length feature and take 18 months to cut and assemble, Miss Riefenstahl said that she expected to make some 20 special shorter films, each of which will constitute a complete record of the more important Olympic sporting events.

The sport films in short form "are being made in answer to a demand from sport bodies the world over, especially in Germany and Japan and some of the other countries where certain forms of sports need development," Universal Service reported in the New York American of William Randolph Hearst, Jr.

The Hitler cinematographic expedition at the Olympics is taking full advantage of the latest advancements in motion picture science. In the Olympic Stadium three special towers at advantageous points as well as a dozen special "trenches" have been built for the use of camera operators. One photographer is shooting all of the games from a balloon overhead. All the latest gadgets of the industry are being employed, including a special track at the finish of the rowing races at Grunau, which will enable the cameramen to keep abreast of the rowers for the last 100 yards.

Strangely, Mr. Hitler's own camera division slighted the native photographic manufacturers, with their worldwide reputation, by placing an order for cameras with Bell and Howell Company in Chicago for equipment for use in the Olympic Games.

To complete a last-minute rush order from the official German government photographers, Bell and Howell on July 24th shipped from New York two portable 35 mm. "Eyemo" motion picture cameras on the fast steamer Europa. The shipment reached Berlin just in time for the Olympics' opening.

Bell and Howell had shipped two "Eyemos" on July 8th by steamship, and on July 14th a shipment of "Eyemo" lenses was sent by air on the Zeppelin Hindenburg.

Some of the newsreel managements in New York denied the existence of any Hitler control over their Olympic Game coverage, while others refused absolutely to discuss the situation in any form. This silence might be understandable in view of the observation of one newsreel executive that "any violation of the agreement, or any public protest against Hitler's tactics at the Olympics might be felt later by our distribution department at its Berlin branch."

The strong hand of the Nazis in American motion picture matters was seen quite perceptibly last month when Germany's blunt edict pertaining to films "detrimental to German prestige" and players appearing in them was applied directly to American product at the source in Hollywood, by German Consul Georg Gyssling, in Los Angeles.

Consul Gyssling and the Nazi Government were charged with interference in the production and distribution of American films by Alfred T. Mannon, independent producer for Malvina Pictures Corporation of "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany," featuring the author, Isobel Lillian Steele, whose experiences in Germany in 1934 the picture purports to depict.

According to Mr. Mannon, Dr. Gyssling addressed to Miss Steele and other members of the cast in Hollywood, during the production of the picture, a letter on the stationery of the German Consulate directing attention to the text of the Nazi edict, which was quoted on a sheet accompanying the letter and in which the players were warned of reprisals in Germany for those participating in pictures "the tendency or effect of which is detrimental to German prestige."

Decree Aimed at U. S. Films

One of Germany's latest decrees aimed at American films comes from Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, Reich Minister of Propaganda and Public Enlightenment, and is regarded in American distribution quarters as a possible weapon with which the German censorship restrictions, already more than onerous, may force American films out of Germany entirely. The decree permits the barring of any picture, otherwise unobjectionable, if the company which produced it or the actors concerned in it have at some previous time, in some previous film, acted in such a way as to "injure the prestige of Germany." The first example of what Mr. Hitler has in mind was presented when his consul, Mr. Gyssling, wrote to Miss Steele and the others in Hollywood warning them on the Mannon picture.

American distributors in Germany have since June been feeling the full force of the Nazi attitude, the majority of films submitted by them to the Minister of Propaganda in past weeks having been prohibited from showing in Germany.

Irving Berlin Songs Barred

Newspaper dispatches from Berlin indicate that pretexts for banning Hollywood films are many. For example, a motion picture may be prohibited because a Jewish writer or a Jewish director participated in its making. As an illustration, no motion picture with Irving Berlin's songs ever appears in the Reich, it is understood.

One large American distributing branch in Berlin is said to be in further difficulties because it refuses to dismiss the non-Aryans in its employ in that country.

Mr. Hitler the other day condescended to allow the showing of motion pictures found unobjectionable by his agents, under severe restrictions. He granted permission to the Jewish Culture Union at Berlin to open a "ghetto" motion picture theatre where films barred to the "Aryan" public may be exhibited.

Distributors of American origin now operating on large scales in Germany are Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox.

"WIDER LATITUDE," BUT NOT MUCH

Motion Picture Daily reported on Wednesday from Berlin that American newsreels shooting the Olympic Games were benefiting from "a new decision changing the restrictive regulations" imposed by Adolph Hitler on the American reels. It appears, however, that the revision in the stringent regulations extend no further than the permission granted American companies to export from Berlin a few feet more of the film than originally allowed.

First Olympic Games newsreel material was scheduled to arrive at newsreel headquarters in New York Friday.

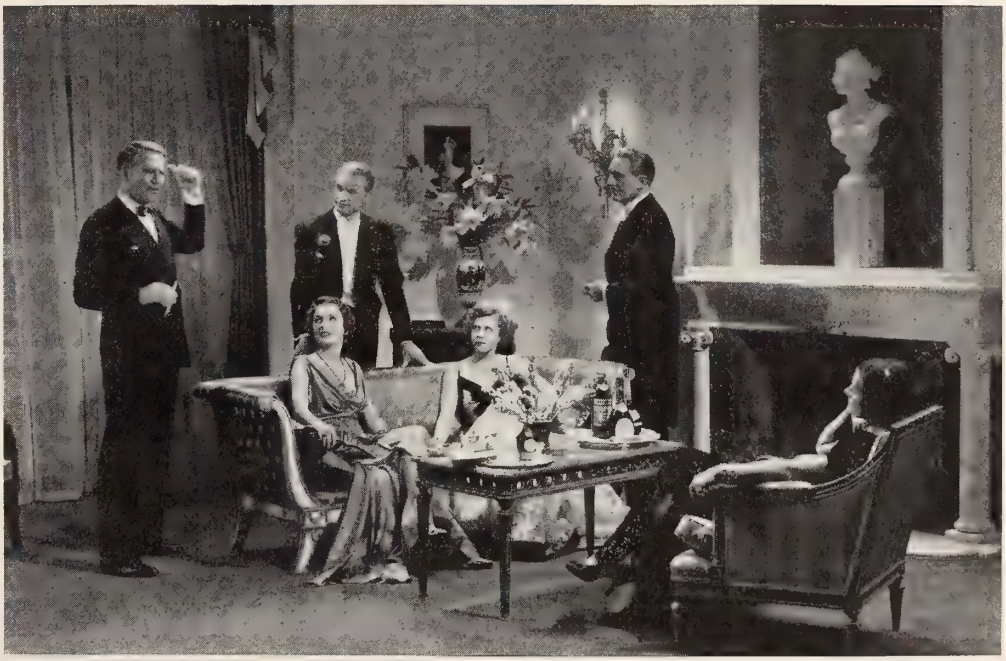
"DODSWORTH" TYPICAL OF

HUSTON

A HERALD PICTORIAL PREVIEW IN ADVANCE STILLS

by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

THE gleefully grinning gentleman on the opposite page is Sinclair Lewis, the author whose "It Couldn't Happen Here" couldn't happen here and whose "Dodsworth" is now in the process of happening here—that is to say in Hollywood—under the experienced auspices of Samuel Goldwyn, who will distribute his picturization of Mr. Lewis' generously circulated novel through United Artists with Walter Huston bringing to screen the character portrait he created on the Broadway stage.



What the wider world of the cinema will make of the Lewis-Huston composition cannot be known, of course, until much later, but it is axiomatic that Mr. Goldwyn's influence will be discernible in the finished product. Mr. Goldwyn's production creed has one inflexible tenet: Experiment judiciously and cautiously, use judgment and common sense, take no flyers and make no leaps in the dark, but always experiment. And examination of his record, highlighted by "Stella Dallas," "Arrowsmith" and "These Three," reveals that past experiments have not been without profit.

In the case of "Dodsworth" the producer is not departing from policy, although he is refraining from whatever temptation may be his to alter a story that gave excellent account of itself as book and play. Instructions to Sidney Howard, who prepared it for the screen, were to let well enough alone but to bear in mind the requirements peculiar to the filmic form. Consequently, no such radical change as that which marked the production of "These Three" is to be wrought.

Major experimental operations have pertained to cast selection. Choice of Walter Huston for the name role was a natural, but employment of Mme. Maria Ouspenskaya from the stage cast was venturesome in view of her lack of screen experience. There were those who said he was experimenting, too, in assigning the feminine lead to Ruth Chatterton, not recently seen in notably successful roles, but her performance in the lately previewed "Girl's Dormitory" upsets that idea. Contrariwise, he gave the important part of "the other man" to Gregory Gaye, a young Russian actor of whom next to nothing is known, completing his cast, the while, with Paul Lukas and other dependables of corresponding stature.

Advance stills reproduced herewith are indicative of the manner in which, under direction of William Wyler, these players are putting Mr. Lewis' printer's ink people, places and plot on film.

ST. LOUIS DRIVE IN SEPTEMBER TO MAKE 3,000,000 "FILM CONSCIOUS"

Harry Arthur, Loew's and Ansull Brothers Enlist All Civic Units in Week's Celebration Starting September 7th

Independent and affiliated theatre interests in St. Louis this week effected a plan tor the common good of their box offices by which "the biggest exploitation stunt in the history of this country" will be staged in the Mound City in September to draw the lasting attention of 3,000,000 persons in that area to the motion picture.

Harry C. Arthur, Jr., of Fanchon and Marco, whose exhibition strength in St. Louis recently was increased considerably by acquisition of theatres from Warner Brothers in settlement of its anti-trust suit, is sponsoring the celebration with Loew's and the Ansull Brothers of St. Louis.

They have combined "to make this affair definitely draw the attention of every individual in the section to the fact that our business is entertainment," explained Mr. Arthur. "Through the various media that we have in mind it will be almost impossible for even one person in this section not to become theatre conscious. Cooperation is promised by the merchants all over the city. The Chamber of Commerce and all transportation lines are working with us 100 per cent. Newspapers and all the surrounding country weeklies are putting out special sections for this event."

The festival will commence on September 7th and continue through September 12th. Some of the projects already lined up include dancing on the streets of both sections of St. Louis: The Grand Avenue section and downtown. All department stores are giving the celebration space in their regular advertisements as well as participating in the special festival sections of 20 pages in each of the three meetropolitan papers. There will be goodwill cartoons and stories placed in advance and during the celebration.

Broadcasters Cooperate

Spot announcements have been obtained on all radio stations guaranteed to reach a listener total of 3,000,000 persons. Street car lines have donated the use of their cars for two hours each night of the celebration at no cost to the festival. All taxicabs will carry appropriate advertising. It is expected that this phase of the campaign will draw to the theatre districts at least 300,000 persons each night.

All streets will be bannered with festival signs and the sidewalks will be sprayed for dancing. Every department store in town will keep its windows illuminated nightly to add to the spectacle. Special tieups have have been made with the Hollywood studios for special displays in each store. Stars from each Hollywood major company will be brought to St. Louis to participate. All hotels are cooperating in the project and are giving special attention to the theatre during the period. The Mayor and every city official are cooperating. All highways leading into St. Louis will be bannered and arrows pointing to the section where the celebration will be held will direct out-of-town visitors.

General Outdoor Company, through the cooperation of Loew's, is donating billboards to help publicize the festival. Most of the theatres are being renovated. New marquees, new fronts, new lighting equipment and other additions are being made to help convince St. Louis that "here is a new movie era," continued Mr. Arthur.

Civic Units Participate

All empty store windows are to be decorated with appropriate festival copy heralding the event. The Mayor and the Chamber of Commerce are issuing special bulletins calling attention to the festival. All schools and colleges in the vicinity are cooperating

The civic committee, headed by Tom Dysart, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and the showman's committee, headed by "Chick" Evans, of Loew's Theatres, are holding daily meetings to make further plans for the affair.

"Conservative estimates allow us to believe that more than 300,000 people will attend the affair in both of the entertainment centers and past performances lead us to believe that many thousands of these people will definitely become 'movie conscious' and new friends for the picture industry will be made," declared Mr. Arthur, who added:

"It is very seldom that all movies in one city feel happy enough in a project to unreservedly lend their utmost assistance in putting a goodwill project over. In St. Louis we are fortunate to have the cooperation of every social organization, civic society, the municipal government, all of whom are working hand in hand. We are optimistic about the whole thing and we believe that this campaign to make St. Louis entertainment conscious will revolutionize the entire amusement business in this section."

Not mentioned by any of the principals, but seen as a possibility, is the aim to regain the goodwill lost by the St. Louis exhibition industry as a result of the widely-publicized inside-the-trade testimony in the Fanchon and Marco anti-trust suit earlier this year against Warner Brothers, Paramount and RKO.

Arthur Extending Circuit

The idea of a "movie festival" of the kind advocated by the St. Louis circuits is not new. Some dozen years back, the entire industry, through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, staged "Greater Movie Seasons" simultaneously in all of the principal centers of the country.

And while Fanchon and Marco's staff was working this week with Loew's and the Ansulls to complete arrangements for the festival, Mr. Arthur was busily engaged in extending the scope of his circuit in St. Louis. Arrangements whereby F. and M. will operate the 22 neighborhood theatres in the St. Louis Amusement Company under a 10-year management deal with Central Properties Corporation are expected to be announced shortly, according to Broadway reports. Mr. Arthur returned over the weekend from the Mound City after conferring with the bondholders committee of Central Properties.

By virtue of the recent deal with Warners, F. and M. owns 42 per cent of the stock in St. Louis Amusement Company. Several weeks ago Mr. Arthur, his Washington attorney, Ernest L. Wilkinson, and Lambert Walther, St. Louis counsel for F. and M., conferred with Clarence M. Turley and Joseph Grand, representing the bondholders' committee for Central Properties, in New York on the deal which was tentatively set at the time.

Management Plan Dropped

F. and M., which intended to bid for the neighborhood circuit at a public auction in St. Louis, has withdrawn the plan for the management contract. Leto Hill, supervisor for the 22 theatres, will continue in that post under the new arrangement. Two houses are closed.

Two St. Louis neighborhood houses will be built by F. and M. and local real estate operators will construct five others. In most situations, the new structures will replace obsolete buildings. The Ambassador is now being remodeled without interruption of shows. New quarters are being added to the Fox, where Mr. Arthur will make his offices. William Raynor is now managing the Fox.

The Missouri, Fox, Ambassador, St. Louis and Orpheum will be first run F. and M. houses while the Shubert-Rialto and Hi-Pointe will be second runs. The Guild Cinema will play foreign pictures and revivals. The Orpheum, Fox and Ambassador are the only first run F. and M. theatres now open.

POPE LAUDS QUALITY OF AMERICAN FILMS

American films have improved in moral quality as a result of action taken by American bishops, Pope Pius told Bishop Joseph Schrembs of Cleveland in a private audience in the summer residence at Castel Gandolfo, Italy, this week. The Holy Father congratulated his visitor and colleagues in the United States. "American bishops paved the way for this improvement. They have been pioneers in this cause," he said.

Street Dancing Will Launch Citywide Party; Arthur Extending Scope of Circuit; Operators Plan Set

Stars Invited to Festival

Wallace Beery, Clark Gable, Joan Crawford, William Powell, Ginger Rogers, Jean Harlow, Evelyn Knapp and other stars who formerly lived in Kansas City will be invited to attend the ceremonies marking the opening of the new municipal auditorium in that city during the Fall Festival, September 26th to October 3rd.

HOYTS-GREATER UNION GROUPS TO REORGANIZE

Stuart Doyle Arranges English Financing to Form New Circuit to Include Various Interests

Upon his arrival in New York from London late last week, it was revealed that Stuart Doyle, head of Greater Union Theatres of Australia, had completed a deal with British financiers for $2,500,000 with which he will consolidate all his Australian theatrical interests into a separate corporation of his own. This does not mean a breakup of General Theatres Corporation of Australia, of which Mr. Doyle is the co-director with Sydney Munro of Hoyt's, the former explained. "It is an independent financial condition which means my own holdings will be more firmly consolidated," Mr. Doyle said.

The British financing obtained by Mr. Doyle is said to be a straight stock flotation proposition, with the bankers subscribing on the condition that Mr. Doyle consolidate all his various Australian holdings and companies into one unit. There will be a 25-year debenture arrangement at a low rate of interest, with the Doyle company getting $500,000 for developments.

The breakup of Hoyt's and Greater Union has been rumored for some time, but Mr. Doyle revealed that no action will be taken in this direction, if any at all, until after conferences which are scheduled to take place upon his arrival next month in Australia. The present operating set-up of General Theatres still has another year to run, Mr. Doyle said.

Mr. Doyle is president of Greater Union Theatres, operating about 185 houses, Cinesound Productions, Cinesound Newsreel, Associated Distributors and British Empire Films. All of these companies would be combined under the new set-up. He also heads National Theatre Supply and Consolidated Broadcasting Corporation, but it is believed these would be outside the merger.

Fox Agreement Continues

Upon his arrival in New York, Mr. Doyle revealed that the five-year operating agreement by which General Theatres operates a combination of 200 Hoyts-Twentieth Century-Fox and Union Theatres houses in Australia is expected to be extended for another five years.

Negotiations looking toward the renewal of the arrangement will not be discussed during Mr. Doyle's stay in Manhattan, he said, but will be taken up with Walter J. Hutchinson, foreign head for Twentieth-Century-Fox, aboard the Monterey, which sails for Australia from Los Angeles August 19 and on which both will be aboard.

The Australian executive has taken a 99-year lease on a site in Piccadilly in London's West End, where he proposes to erect a theatre to serve as an outlet for his Australia produced pictures, he reported.

The primary reason for his visit to New York, Mr. Doyle said, is to "shake hands" with friends and to set the American distribution of "Thoroughbreds," which Cinesound Studios made in Australia with Helen Twelvetrees as the star. Wardour Films have signed for the English rights and the rights to India and the Continent have still to be disposed of.

Mrs. Doyle, who has been accompanying her husband, has been under a doctor's care since they left London, but is reported now to be in better health. They are scheduled to leave for Hollywood next week.

Australian Business Fair

"Conditions have vastly improved in Australia and the country is fairly out of the depression," Mr. Doyle commented. Theatre business is very fair, he said, and while the scale of admissions has not reached pre-depression days, the volume of patronage has come back to normal. Prices at the theatres are gradually being increased, but have some way still to go to reach the pre-depression scale. "It's easy to knock them down, but it's mighty difficult to raise admissions," Mr. Doyle said.

"We are not planning to expand or develop the theatre situation," the managing director of General Theatres asserted. "Theatre development has reached its saturation point," he said, adding that many of the structures in Australia are comparable to the finest theatres in America.

Amusement Levy Renewal Indicated

Reports from Washington this week indicated that Administration fiscal authorities plan to seek Congressional approval for a continuance of the sales and nuisance taxes which are now producing about $425,000,000 annually. Amusement levies fall into the classification of nuisance taxes. Originally imposed in 1932 and renewed twice, the taxes are scheduled to expire next June. Treasury officials are said to have decided that the reenactment of the entire list of taxes is essential.

Admission tax developments were reported from two states during the week. J. P. Wood, secretary of the Ohio Independent Theatre Owners, warned members of that group of the possibility of the reinstatement of the former 10 per cent straight admission tax in Ohio to make up part of the $12,000,000 loss in state revenue which will result from proposed exemption of food from the retail sales tax. The 10 per cent levy was repealed about a year ago and exhibitors since have been paying three per cent on grosses to conform to the retail sales tax.

In New Orleans, La., the former tax of two per cent on admissions starting at 10 cents has been cut to 10 per cent on admissions over 15 cents.

Premier J. Macdonald of the Province of Nova Scotia has declared a reduction of approximately 50 per cent in amusement levies, effective at once. The reduction was decided upon as a result of continued complaints from exhibitors and theatre patrons.

FINE NEWSREEL FOR KING ATTACK CAPTION

The iron hand of overseas government control of newsreel affairs was seen last week in London, where King's Bench division court fined Gaumont British newsreel $250 and costs on a charge of contempt of court for supplying newsreel pictures of the recent alleged attempt on the life of King Edward which contained the caption—"Attempt on King's Life"—and a commentary stating that the revolver had been aimed.

The charge also included the supplying of a poster stating that assassination had been attempted.

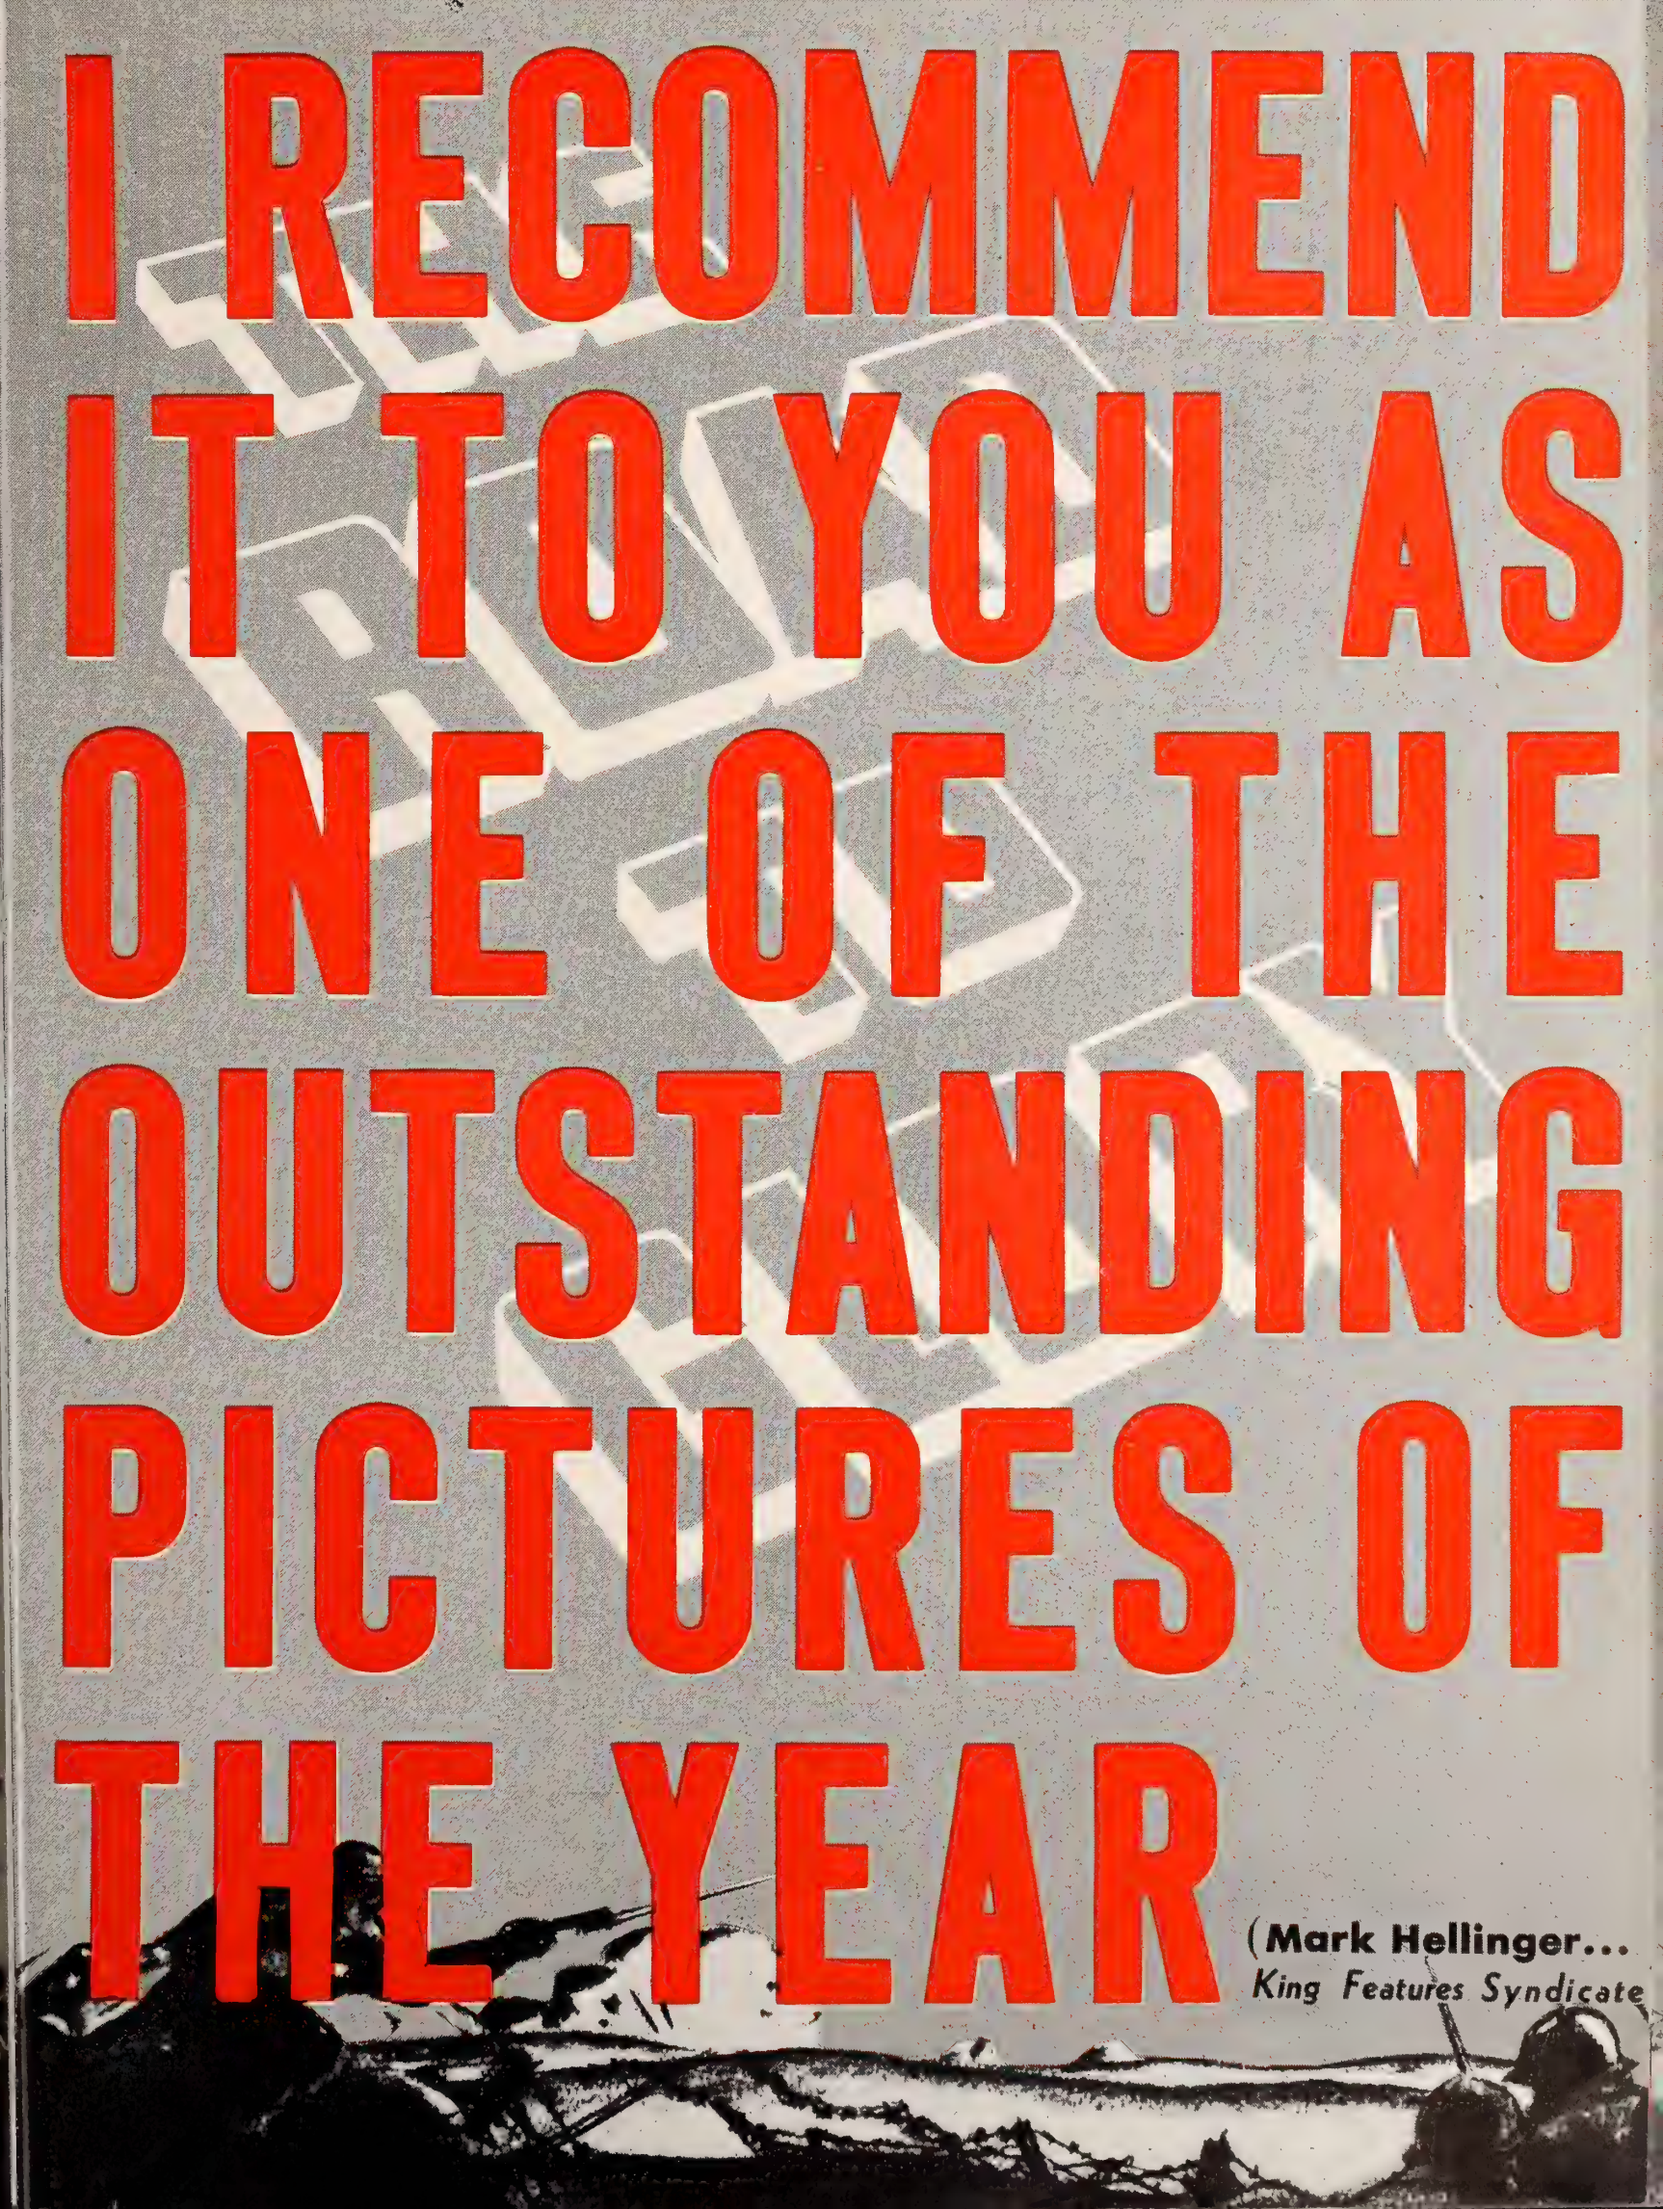
J. H. Hutchinson and Hendon Central Cinemas, held for showing the film and poster, were not fined after an apology, but were ordered to pay costs.

In the Gaumont case letters of apology were read from Mark Ostrer and David Ostrer and evidence was submitted showing that the caption and poster had been withdrawn from 26 theatres after a protest from solicitors for the accused man, but a letter to Hendon Cinema miscarried.

In similar cases against the London Evening News and the Daily Express the editors and proprietors of each paper were ordered to pay $2,500 and costs.

Johnston Contract At Republic Ends

W. Ray Johnston's contract as president of Republic Pictures, an outgrowth of Monogram, has been terminated according to a story appearing Thursday in Motion Picture Daily. The move leaves Mr. Johnston free to pursue other plans which by persistent report, provide for a re-entry into the industry of his former company under its former name.



His contract, which had until December 23, 1936, to run, has been settled following discussions with Herbert J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., and chief financial factor in Republic. For several months Mr. Johnston's sphere of active duty as head of Republic has been curtailed. For that length of time it has been more or less taken for granted in the New York trade that severance of his relations with the company was merely a matter of time plus discussions leading to an amicable settlement now reached.

Theatre Permit Denied

Supreme Court Justice Louis A. Valente in New York this week denied the application by Robert W. Goelet to compel License Commissioner Moss to approve the location of a motion picture theatre in a building to be erected by Mr. Goelet at 61 East 53 St., Manhattan.

WARNER-ASCAP MUSIC BATTLE CLOSES WITH REAFFILIATION

Seven Months Estrangement Comes to Close with Six Warner - Controlled Music Companies Back in Fold

Infringement Suits Started by Warners Dropped; Vote to Reinstate Unanimous; "In the Public Interest"

You can play "The Star Spangled Banner" again.

And again a Warner Brothers executive can get a Warner song played for him by request in a Broadway night club or elsewhere.

Because:

Directors of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers voted on Monday of this week to readmit to full membership the six Warner-controlled music publishing houses absent from the rolls since January 1, 1936.

Warner executives announced the dropping of some 200 suits for copyright infringements aggregating an imponderable sum of money.

Something like 150 licenses granted independent radio stations by the Warner affiliates were found to contain wording facilitating their ready translation to ASCAP licenses.

With the realignment of Warner and ASCAP interests is brought to becoming close a struggle as weirdly amusing, despite the box car figures and far flung, not to say boomeranging, consequences involved, as any that ever enlivened a Keystone comedy or the motion picture industry. Time after time, as the complexities of the controversy revealed themselves throughout the seven months of assiduously publicized policing of the air waves, the whole serious business threatened to vanish in a gust of diaphragmatic laughter. It was a serious business, nevertheless. What happened was this:

Warners Withdraw January 1

On November 26, 1935, the Warner-owned Music Publishers Holding company announced withdrawal of its six subsidiaries from membership in the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, effective January 1, which would be the day into the early hours of which all the jazz bands in the country would toot, at first hand and by radio, the glad tidings of a New Year. The companies represented were and are M. Whitmark & Sons, Remick Music company, T. B. Harms company, New World Music company, Victoria Publishing company and Harms, Inc.

Together, between and among them, and all under Warner dominion, these companies owned or controlled copyrights of some 36,000 musical works, popular, not so popular, classic, standard and, as the musicians say, incidental. Prior to their withdrawal from membership in ASCAP a license granted by that organization entitled the licensee to play, perform or otherwise make audible use of any and/or all of these compositions, arrangements, in short, tunes. Subsequent to the date specified, that day when all the world was presumably waiting for the sunrise and perhaps a pick-me-up, none of these works might be played, etc., and/or, etc., without permission (i.e. license) of the Music Publishers Holding company (i.e. Warner Brothers) and a lot of orchestra leaders, with their theme songs shot from under them, rolled over in bed and declined to get up all day. New Years morning was never a favorite among band leaders anyway.

Warners Announce Policy

Warner Brothers started the New Year with a bang, in fact a series of bangs, by notifying the musicianly world that licenses could be obtained entitling obtainers to the use of their music, professedly the best, and that non-obtainers would be proceeded against, legally, in the manner long previously established as practicable by ASCAP in many a strife torn court room.

ASCAP's announcements of even date were a little curt and not especially revelatory. Reserve was the treble and dignity the bass of remarks authorized by brusque, baritone E. C. Mills, general manager and dominant keynoter of the organization's policy.

Subdued, too, but firm, was the duet voiced by National Broadcasting company and Columbia Broadcasting system, enunciating in unison, harmony and with precisely emphasized beat. If music controlled by the Warner holding company could not be broadcast without a license separately come by, it would not be broadcast over Columbia and National radio stations and that would be that. That was, in fact, to be that for seven months.

Confusion Is Multiplied

Staccato was the tempo of successive announcements from the Warner sector. Not only would radio broadcasting be affected, but theatres, night clubs, even hotels, dance halls, and by inference showboats plying the good old Mississip' dear to every musician's heart, would be listened into, scouted, checked up on and, if caught in the act of purveying contraband melodies, sued, prosecuted and in all other lawful ways made to sign up or pay up or both.

Newspaper columnists, sidewalk wits and plain people thought it all suitable subject matter for jibe, joke and jest, but none of the humor in the situation was intentional. Among those who did not enjoy it in the least were a very great many persons with theoretically trained ears assigned by the big broadcasting companies to see (or hear) to it that none of the restricted music crept into broadcasts on their networks and a very great many others, similarly equipped, assigned by the Warners to the dreary business of listening for violations. Probably the total gross of radio listening in these United States reached its apex right about then.

Company Policy Explained

To quote the New York Herald-Tribune, which performs no musical compositions in its business and yet spent quite a bit of time in compressing the subject into a paragraph, "Net receipts of the society are divided equally between composer and publisher. Composers are classified on the commercial value of their works to ASCAP. Fifty per cent of what the publishers receive is determined by a mathematical analysis of songs used on 100,000 radio programs during the year, 20 per cent on their seniority in the society and 30 per cent on the availability of their catalogues. The melon is cut quarterly." It's as simple as that.

To the Warners, as of last year's-end is imputed the belief that the availability of its catalogue, and other things, caused it to be responsible for some 40 per cent of the income derived by ASCAP from licensees, whereas its portion of the melon had not been sliced to proportionate dimensions. Quite a lot of talking about this had been done and the Warners decided to go it alone.

During the seven months of their independent operation the Warners started suits against some 200 alleged infringers. At one time Jack Warner, caught between trains in Kansas City by an inspired reporter, was quoted as admitting that establishment of a major broadcasting system was contemplated. He was not quoted in connection with the widely circulated report that his request for a certain Warner number, made of Abe Lyman in a Broadway night club, was turned down because it was a Warner work and therefore restricted. And, to clear up the slightly dazzling introduction to this record, there was nothing very serious about the banning of "The Star Spangled Banner," although it is a fact that a Warner-controlled arrangement of the anthem was among the restricted numbers.

Reinstatement Follows Conferences

Readmittance of Warner-controlled publishers to membership in ASCAP was upon petition for reinstatement which followed conferences between ASCAP's general manager and his counsel, Charles Schwartz, and Max Dreyfus, of the ASCAP board, and Warners' attorneys, Joseph Hazen and A. M. Wallenberg. Seniority, theoretically forfeited by the Warner companies on withdrawal, was restored by common consent of interested parties.

Official announcement released by ASCAP on August 4th, in which the directors are mentioned as unanimous in their vote to reinstate the Warner-controlled companies, includes the assertion that "Both the Society and the Warner Brothers felt that there was a great public interest involved, as during the period of the withdrawal the works of such famous American composers as Jerome Kern, Sigmund Romberg, Otto Harbach, George Gershwin, Victor Herbert, Oscar Hammerstein, Vincent Youmans and many others were not heard on the air. Upon the reinstatement of these memberships the thousands of compositions of these and other allied composers will now be available for the use of the broadcasting stations holding the license of ASCAP."

CUBAN CABINET CANCELS NEW YORK CENSORSHIP

Action Follows Dual Protests of American and Cuban Trade Interests; Fee Was Asked

Late last week the Cuban cabinet met in Havana and voted discontinuance of the New York office established for the purpose of censoring at the source, and at $10 a reel, American made motion pictures exported to Cuba.

Action by the Cuban cabinet followed official protest from the U. S. Embassy, which followed, in turn, protests to the State Department of the United States from American distributors, who had withheld film shipments to Cuba since July 1st.

Establishment of the New York censorship headquarters at 1775 Broadway under direction of Roberto Hernandez had marked a double departure from practice. Prior thereto American made pictures were shipped to Cuba and submitted to the Havana censor board, which levied no fee for its operations. Under the new scheme, American producers were required to submit their product to the New York headquarters, where they would have come under the inspection of Senor Hernandez at a flat rate of $10 per reel.

Propaganda Film Planned

Inquiry evoked from Senor Hernandez the information that monies paid into his office by the film companies for this service would be used to pay the expenses of operating the office and that any surplusage accruing would be used to produce propaganda films for the Cuban government.

Senor Hernandez explained that the primary purpose of establishing the New York headquarters was to supply the Cuban censorship to American companies more conveniently. The companies did not consider this convenience, if any, as worth the price asked for it, and did consider the whole affair as constituting a precedent capable of sprouting many, various and altogether unnecessary ultimate results.

Protests Are Filed

Formal protest to the State Department followed immediately.

Concurrently, the Cuban Film Board of Trade filed a protest to the government in Havana, asserting that the continuing lack of American product would affect the livelihood of 6,000 Cuban families.

Meanwhile, major distributors did not submit product to the New York censorship office nor directly to the Havana board, which Senor Hernandez had said would be abolished or reconstituted under his direction.

Fees Sustained Office

While official action on the protest hung fire, Senor Hernandez returned to Cuba after hearing that abolition of the fee for censoring films in New York was under contemplation. It was pointed out at that time that, since the office had been so constituted as to require the payment of fees to finance its operation, abolition of this feature would be tantamount to abandonment of the project.

Action of the Cuban cabinet restoring former practice was announced in dispatches early this week. Resumption of exports to Cuba is expected to follow immediately upon receipt of the decree in this country.

Standard Changed For Print Leaders

Studios and commercial release printing laboratories this week received sample prints from the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences of the new Academy standard print leader which has been revised to meet the requirements of the 2000-foot reels.

The specifications have been changed to include the written out figures "six" and "nine" in the appropriate footage frames to avoid the confusion which sometimes occurs when the projectionist views these figures inverted through the projector. In addition, the wrap-around protective leader, blank film attached to the beginning and end of each reel to protect the film, has been increased from six to eight feet in place of the former four to six feet, to provide sufficient protection for the increased diameter reels.

Exhibitors Demand Stars Quit Radio

The Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California and Arizona has sent to producers, studio personnel, exhibitor organizations and newspapers throughout the country copies of a resolution demanding an end to the practice of permitting stars and directors to appear on radio programs. The resolution was passed at a meeting of the group at Los Angeles.

The Connecticut Motion Picture Theatre Owners, with headquarters at New Haven, recently passed and sent to producing companies' home offices similar. resolutions The communication from the coast I.T.O. points out that the star name power has been built through the box-office and each radio appearance decreases the star's popularity, thus proving a detriment to exhibitors and producers alike.

Congo Film Record

The Denis-Roosevelt African expedition returned to New York this week from Africa, bringing some 100,000 feet of film shot in the Belgian Congo. Members of the party included Armand Denis, and his wife, Leila Roosevelt; Leroy G. Phelps, chief cameraman; John W. Romspert and Bernard van Dael.

RKO to Drop All Theatres In Dominion

RKO is about to withdraw from theatre operations in Canada under terms of a deal, pending but nearing consummation, which will turn over its properties in five major Dominion cities to Famous Players Canadian Corporation. The arrangement ends a pool between the two theatre companies, but, as part of the consideration, involves a long-term franchise on Radio Pictures' product over in the Famous Players chain. Various members of the old Orpheum, Keith and Albee circuits, the theatres which are about to change hands, are located in St. John, Montreal, Ottawa, Vancouver and Winnipeg.

Meanwhile, contracts for the pooling of the RKO Orpheum and A. H. Blank's Paramount, Des Moines and Strand in Des Moines have been signed by Nate J. Blumberg for RKO and Mr. Blank for his circuit. Under the arrangement, Mr. Blank will operate with RKO assisting in the buying and booking.

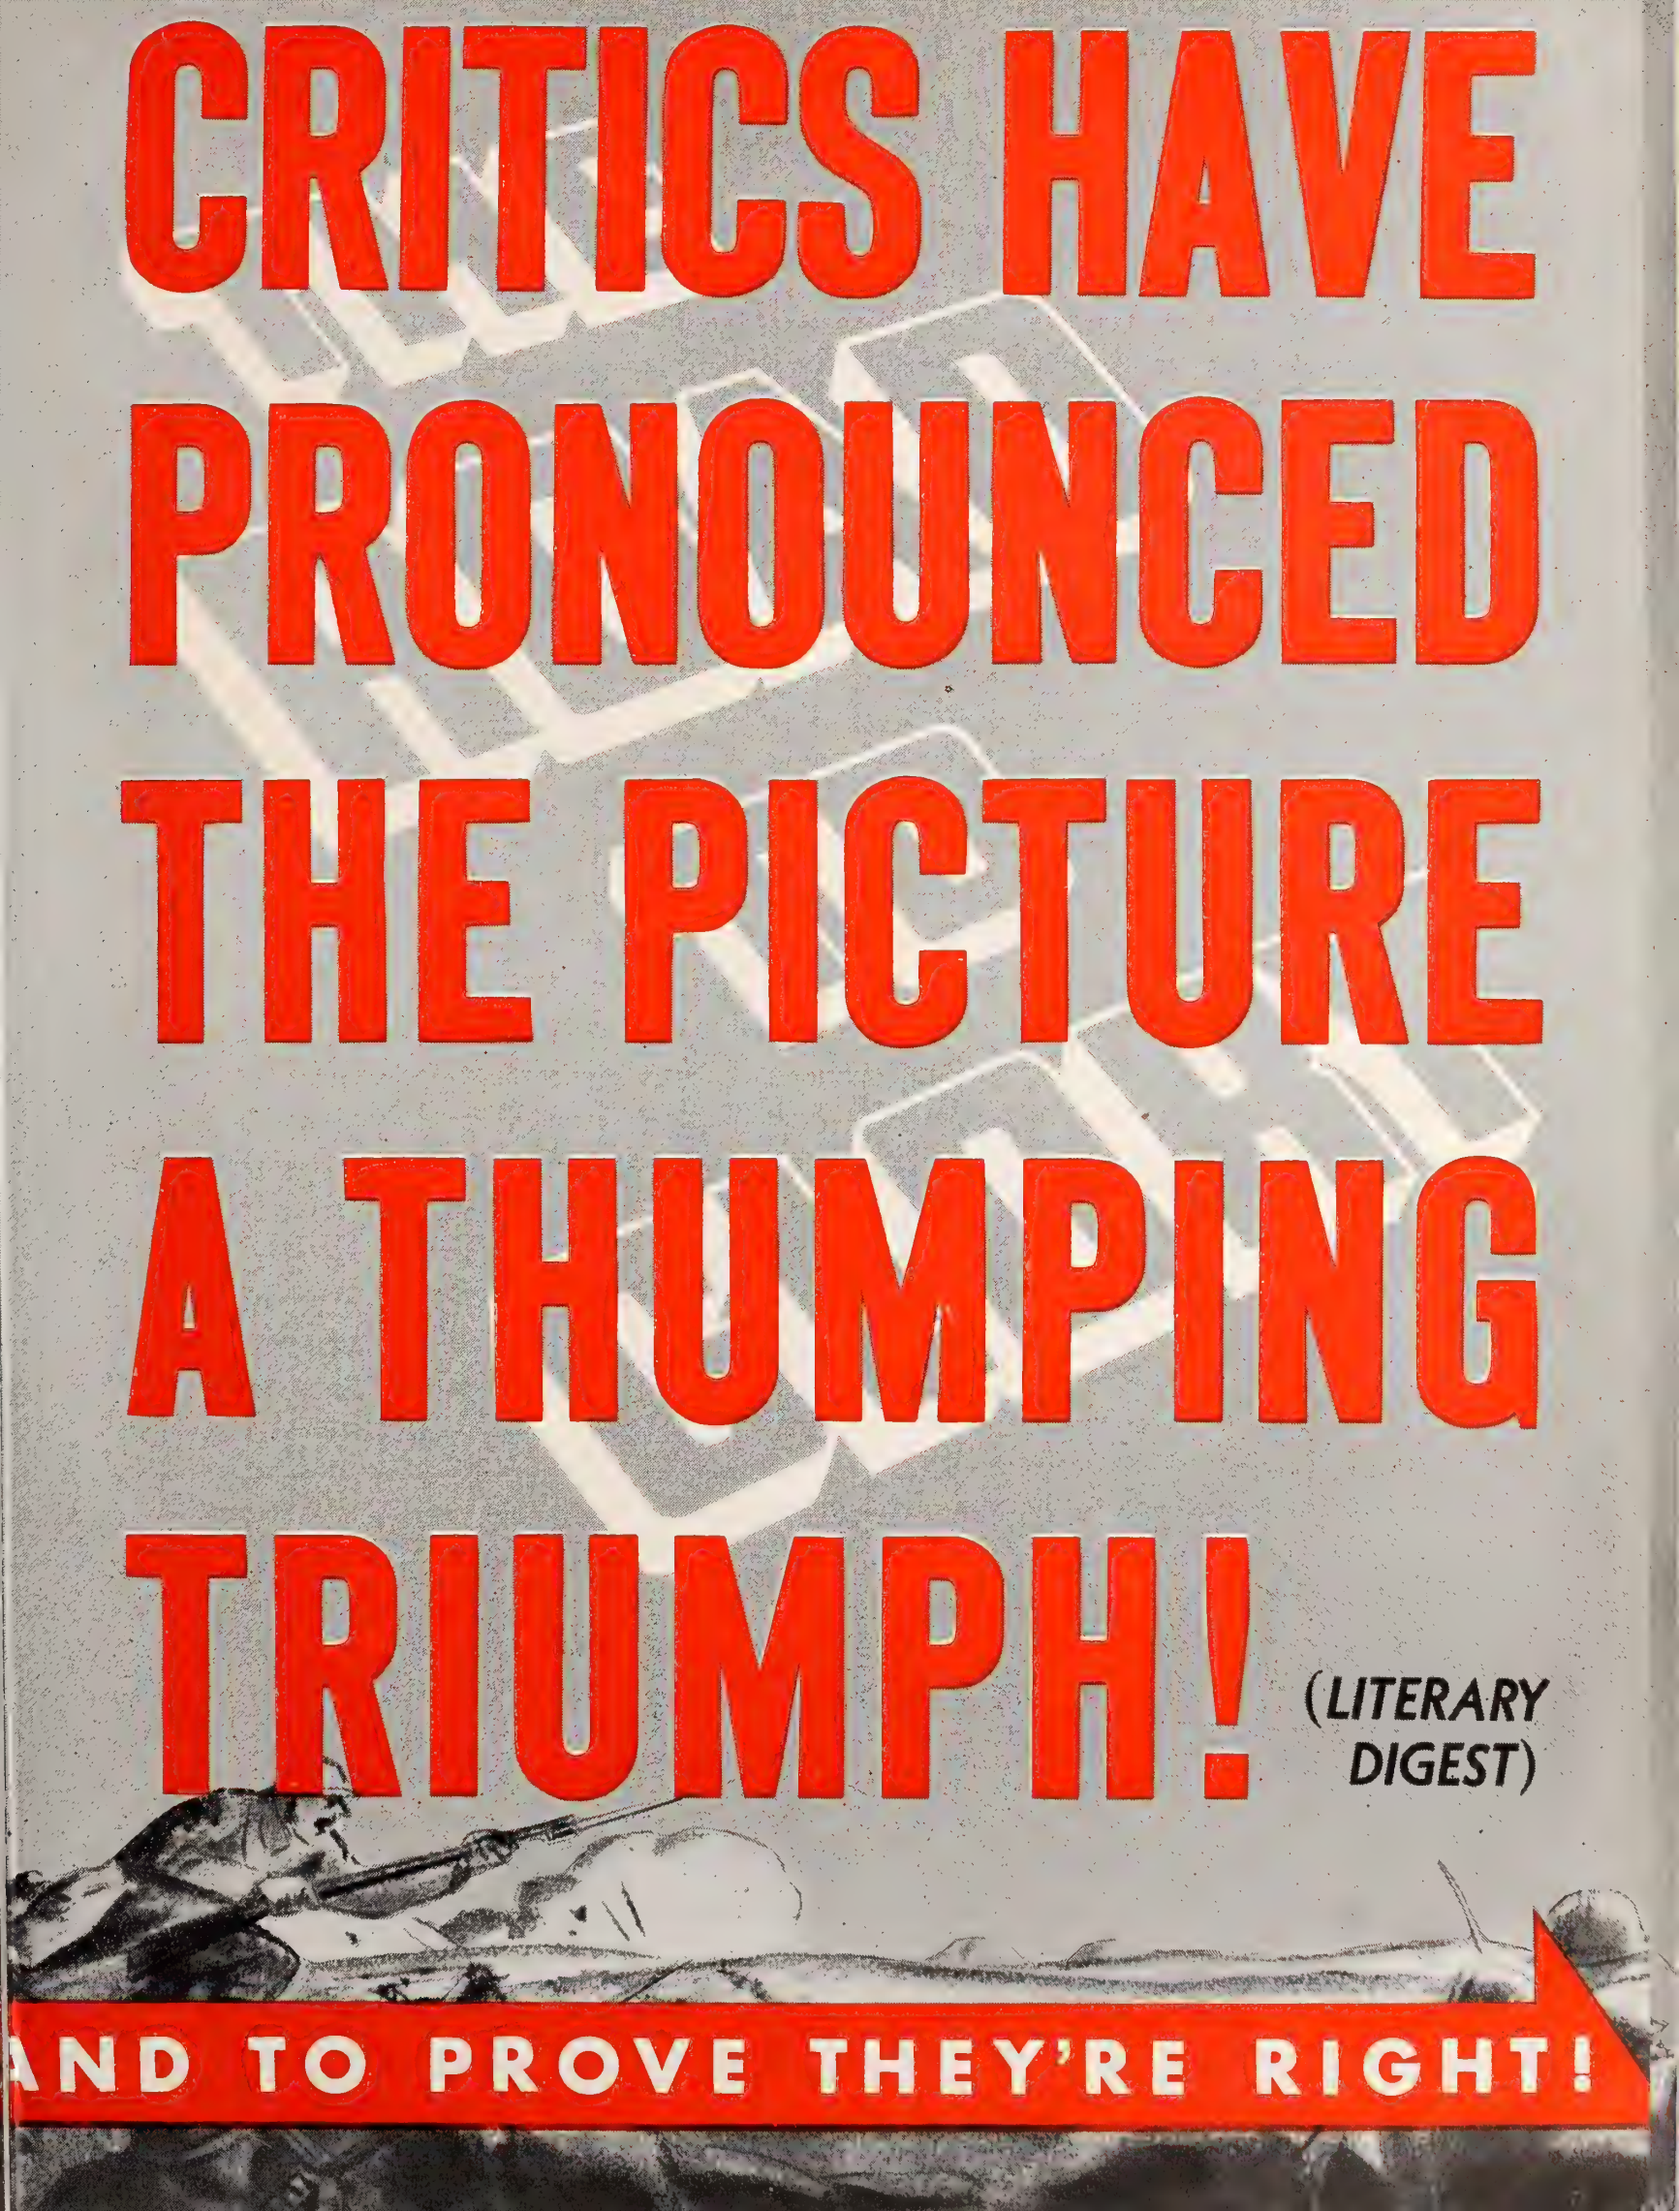
Federal Judge Bondy in New York this week signed an order permitting Radio Corporation of America to be represented in all of the reorganization proceedings of RKO in view of the $9,000,000 claim of Rockefeller Center. This claim is being disputed by other creditors of RKO.

William J. Donovan, as attorney for Irving Trust Company, trustee for RKO, has filed a claim for $85,000 for services and $2,300 for expenses in his report submitted to the United States district court. August 11 has been set as the date for a decision by the court.

Sheldon and Barnes Win "Lynton" Profits

In a statement Tuesday awarding legal victory to Edward Sheldon and Margaret Ayer Barnes, playwrights, in their suit against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer charging plagiarism, Federal Judge Knox in New York ordered the defendants to deliver to the writers all profits of the motion picture "Letty Lynton," the plot of which, the plaintiffs claimed, was taken from their "Dishonored Lady."

The plaintiffs were also awarded all costs of the suit.



Goldwyn Cancels Cantor Contract

Samuel Goldwyn revealed in Hollywood Tuesday that he had given Eddie Cantor a release from his contract. Asserting that Mr. Goldwyn had delayed starting a picture starring him and thereby costing him money for writers, etc., who were not working but nevertheless had to be paid by the comedian, Mr. Cantor recently announced he intended to ask for his release in court.

The termination of the seven-year Cantor-Goldwyn agreement is expected to be followed quickly by a deal between the comedian and Twentieth Century-Fox, Mr. Cantor is scheduled to confer with William Goetz this week.

PRINCIPALS DENY SCHENCK-GB TRANSACTION HAS STRUCK SNAG

London Hears Governmental and Financial Opinion of Deal Has Brought Merger Machinery to Full Stop Principals on both sides of the Atlantic this week denied persistent reports that the tri-party transaction linking Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Twentieth Century-Fox and Gaumont-British has been abandoned on account of governmental disapproval, foreboding financial attitude or other causes suggested by pressmen in England and the United States. Nevertheless, certain scheduled events didn't transpire and others, unscheduled, did.

Events:

Isidore Ostrer, in London, disappointed press representatives who had been promised a statement on July 30th, intimating it would be forthcoming later.

David Ostrer contradicted an announcement made in New York by Isidore Ostrer and Joseph M. Schenck to the effect that amalgamation of the three companies' distribution machinery in England would be begun immediately, declaring such a step had been neither planned nor discussed.

Walter Runciman, president of the Film Board of Trade, declined in response to further interrogation in the British House of Commons to add to previous utterances.

Joseph M. Schenck returned to New York from Hollywood by plane in keeping with his announced intention of sailing for England on Wednesday to participate in final details of the transaction.

While New York executives gave scant ear to reports indicating that progress toward consummation of the negotiations had come to a full stop, and while Joseph Schenck was pointing out to inquirers on this side that legal counsel is in England and much paper work must be done preparatory to the actual signing of documents, financial services in New York were ticking out a London dispatch reading as follows:

"Isidore Ostrer, chairman of Gaumont-British, stated that the American deal which the company is negotiating has not yet been closed, but he was hopeful it would be concluded next week. Ostrer definitely emphasized that, in any case, Gaumont-British will remain an entirely British-controlled company."

Control Dominant Question

It was the "control" aspect of the transaction that animated inquiry in the House of Commons by Member E. Sorenson as to the government's intentions with respect to "the danger to the British film industry in the Schenck-Ostrer combination." Film Board of Trade President Runciman's refusal to reply to the inquiry was interpreted in London film circles as indicative of governmental action, past or pending. Member Sorenson's question was the tenth thus far addressed to President Runciman, whose only direct reply has been to the effect that reply could not be made until complete details of the transaction had been made available to the Board of Trade.

President Runciman's sustained silence was recalled by London pressmen assembled by appointment to receive from Isidore Ostrer a statement clarifying the status of the transaction. Set for 3:15 o'clock, the press session had been cancelled by Mr. Ostrer at lunch time, but telegraphed notices of the cancellation had been received by only a few and, when the gentlemen of the press plied Publicity Director A. E. Newbould with questions, in Mr. Ostrer's absence, he conveyed to them Mr. Ostrer's assurances that Gaumont-British would continue to be British-controlled.

Ostrer Reiterates Assurances

On the following day, while rumors of the two-plus-two variety spread, Mr. Ostrer uttered the single succinct sentence, "The rumor that the deal is off is completely untrue." He did not embellish the negation with positive information.

Most persistent among the interpretations given currency in British trade and financial quarters was the assumption that the transaction had grounded on the probable difficulty entailed in reconciling with the stoutly reiterated assertion relative to perpetuation of British control the widely shared conviction that this assertion is being made as "window dressing" and that actual control will change hands, ultimately if not at once.

Parallel to this trend of popular opinion runs the theory that agitation in the House of Commons, unsatisfied as yet by public statement of governmental attitude, may be counted upon to have its direct reflection in the City (London's Wall Street) and that adverse sentiment in that sector might seriously affect the stock flotation contemplated in connection with the new holding company designed to replace Metropolitan and Bradford Trust in the final corporate structure.

Abutting on these considerations is the well remembered clause in the Gaumont-British articles of association stipulating that the company shall continue under perpetual British control. Questions as to whether this clause has been or can be negated by subsequent action have not been answered.

The stipulation was made prior and preparatory to the purchase of the 49 per cent interest in the Metropolis and Bradford Trust by William Fox on behalf of the then Fox Film Corporation. The Bradford Trust, as reported previously, controls 57 per cent of Gaumont-British. Rumors have long persisted that the two per cent set aside and held by Lord Lee as the balance of power between the Fox and Ostrer interests were later purchased by the Ostrers.

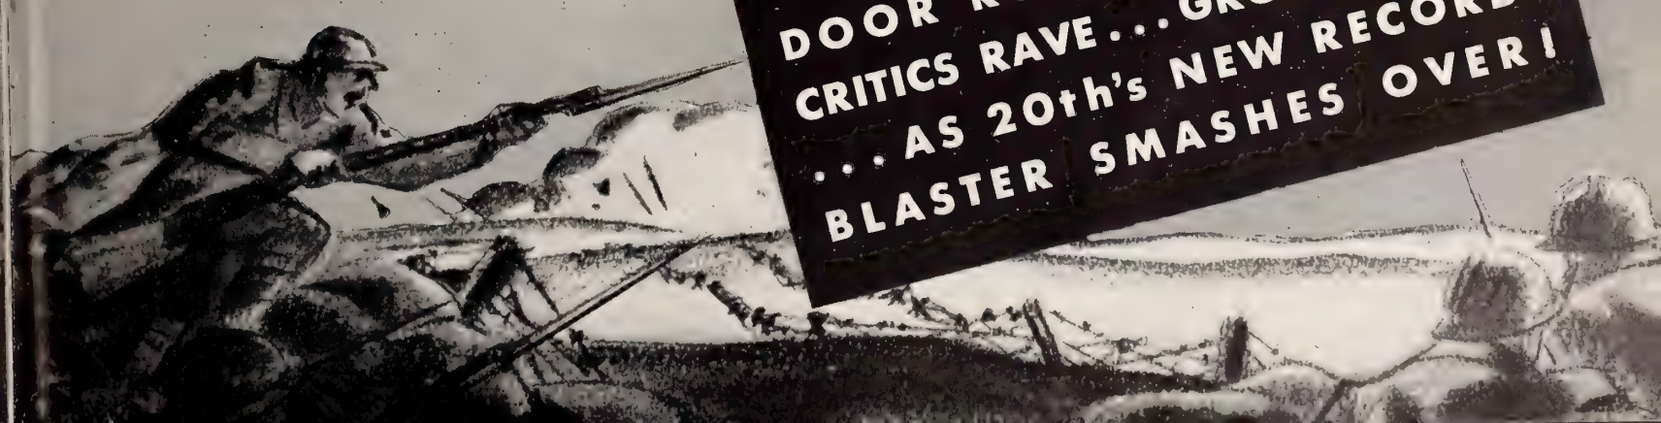
Whether or not such a shift is or would be possible without calling a general meeting of stockholders also appears to be a moot point, but many in the British trade believe such steps could be and may have been taken. These argue that any word of such action, seeping through the secrecy that enshrouds the whole situation, would be a potentially troublesome factor as advertising actual or possible intention of rearranging the Gaumont-British status for a sale at some time of the dominant interest in Metropolis and Bradford and, therefore, in Gaumont-British.

Other Angles Scrutinized

Onlookers also speculated on the possible significance of news that Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, will arrive in England shortly on what is described as a combination business and health trip. Simultaneously it became known that Jeffrey Bernerd, English representative for Gaumont-British in the United States, had cancelled his announced intention of returning to England this week and will stay on in New York indefinitely. It was recalled that Mr. Kent, in his last trip to England, was reported seeking to interest Lord Portal in a purchase of the Twentieth Century-Fox interest in Gaumont-British.

Terms of the tri-party transaction as originally announced specify that MGM shall acquire by purchase from Twentieth Century-Fox one-half of that company's 49 per cent interest in the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, the holding company now owning 57 per cent of Gaumont-British. By a subsequent operation, a new holding company is to be formed, supplanting the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, with the two American companies and the Ostrer interests equally represented in ownership of the 49 per cent interest in Gaumont-British held by the new company, and with the remaining 51 per cent held by the public. Reports gained currency, following the official statement, that the Ostrer interests ultimately will withdraw, leaving the American companies owning about 35 per cent and the public holding 65 per cent.

FILM SEEN BENEFIT FOR REPUBLICANS



Harlan J. Bushfield, Republican State Chairman for South Dakota, has criticized the Resettlement Administration for circulating a motion picture depicting the effects of drought and dust storms in the Plains states and predicted that it would place South Dakota in the Republican column next November.

"The picture in one savage blow ruthlessly destroyed all that South Dakotans have built up in a generation by picturing the state as a wasteland. If there was any doubt about it before, 'The Plow That Broke the Plains' has made South Dakota definitely Republican," he said.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

As to Juveniles

What with the upsurge of juvenile talent and the long dormant condition of the children's story market, competition for stories is keen among the producers piloting the fortunes of the young stars in what promises to be their biggest season. The feeling is general that, powerful as may be the appeal of the child player, a lot of box office virtue resides in a story that has proved itself in published form.

Warners, for instance, are giving Billy Mauch Booth Tarkington's well established "Penrod and Sam" for his introduction as a full-fledged star. Mark Twain's "The Prince and the Pauper" will be his second picture. Sol Lesser's next production starring Bobby Breen will be the standard "Toinette's Phillip."

Against the current, David O. Selznick is proceeding with the production of "Tom Sawyer" without, thus far, having named a stellar player to portray the role.

The case of Shirley Temple is cited by her admirers as the exception required to prove the rule. A number of her vehicles have been fabricated out of whole cloth, while others, such as "Captain January" and "The Littlest Rebel," have had a rich background of success as plain reading material. Practical showmen feel a little surer of themselves, though, when the posting of the title means a certain very definite thing to the public.

Production Gains

Production turnover mounted to unusual figures during the last week in July as thirteen pictures were started and twelve finished.

Swinging into the pace that will mark its activities for the next several months, Radio started three films. In the work is "The Big Game," a football picture, which will feature June Travis, Philip Houston, Bruce Cabot, Andy Devine, James Gleson, John Arledge, Guinn Williams, Tyler Brooke, Murray Kinnell, Eddie Nugent and a large group of gridiron notables. George Nichols, Jr., is directing.

"Winterset" started with Burgess Meredith, Margo and Eduardo Gianelli in the featured roles. Al Santall is directing. The third Radio picture, "We Who Are About To Die," will present Ann Dvorak, John Beal, Preston Foster, Lyle Talbot, Ray Mayer and Florence Rice. Christy Cabanne is directing.

As executives completed plans for more expensive production, Republic also started three pictures. In "Bulldog Edition" Regis Toomey, Ray Walker, Evalyn Knapp, Betty Compson, William Newell, Ruth Gillette, Cy Kendall, Matty Fain and Oscar Apfel will be seen. Charles Lamont is directing.

The cast for "Three Mesquiteers" includes Robert Livingston, Ray Corrigan, Syd Taylor, Kay Hughes, Al Bridges, Nina Quartero, Duke Yorke and J. P. McGowan, with Ray Taylor directing.

"Dangerous Trails" features John Mack Brown, Suzan Kaaren, Ted Adams, Frank Darien, Lloyd Ingraham, Dick Moorehead, Ed Cassidy and Margaret Mann, Albert Ray directing.

Two pictures started at Twentieth Century-Fox. Jane Withers is starred in "Can This Be Dixie." Her support includes Slim Summerville, Claude Gillingwater, Sarah Haden, Arnold Cook, James Burke, Robert Warwich, Ferdinand Munier, William Benedict and Otis Harlan. George Mrashall is directing.

"15 Maiden Lane, which Allan Dwan is directing, will present Claire Trevor with Cesar Romero, Douglas Fowley, Aileen Lane, Lester Matthews, Robert McWade, Richard Tucker and Russell Hicks.

Bringing Greta Garbo back to the screen, MGM started "Camille," the supporting cast listing Robert Taylor, Lionel Barrymore, Lenore Ulric, John Bryan, Russell Hardie and Barry Norton. George Cukor is directing the production.

Hal Roach started "General Spanky" on location in Sacramento. Spanky MacFarland is starred with Phillips Holmes, Rosina Lawrence, Ralph Morgan, James Burtis, Irving Pichel, Hobart Bosworth, Buckwheat, Louise Beavers and Robert Middlemass. Fred Newmeyer is directing the picture.

With Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart and Reginald Owen as principals, Universal started "Rich and Reckless." Harry Beaumont is directing.

Warners began work on "The Making of O'Malley." The cast includes Pat O'Brien, Humphrey Bogart, Sybil Jason, Ann Sheridan, Donald Crisp and Freider Inescort.

At Paramount work started on "The Turning Point." Paul Kelly, Marsha Hunt, Kent Taylor, Robert Cummings and Bernardine Hayes are currently included in the cast, with James Hogan directing.

Seven studios accounted for the twelve finished pictures. Five had groups of two and Warners and Pickford-Lasky each contributed one.

Universal wound up "Casey Of The Coast Guard." It will present Joan Wayne, Nan Grey, Fuzzy Knight, William Bakewell, Ethan Laidlaw, Russell Hicks and Harry Worth. Frank Strayer directed.

"Ace Drummond" also finished. Co-directed by Cliff Smith and Forde Beebe, the cast includes John King, Jean Rogers, Guy Bates Post, William Hall, Diana Gibson, Russell Wilson, Noah Beery, Jr., Lon Chaney, Jr., House Peters, Jr., and Frederic Vogeding.

Columbia finished "A Man Without Fear" and "The Man Who Lived Twice." In the first picture, Jack Holt, Louise Henry, Douglas Dumbrille, Gene Morgan, George McKay, John McGuire, Guinn Williams, Tom London and Pat Flaherty will be seen. Erle Kenton directed it. The second picture will present Ralph Bellamy, Marian Marsh, Isabel Jewell, Ward Bond, Willard Robertson, Kathryn Ward, Betty Farrington, Ann Doran, Mary Lou Dix, Bruce Mitchell and Nana Bryant. Harry Lachman directed.

MGM finished "Old Hutch." The cast lists Wallace Beery, Elizabeth Patterson, Cecelia Parker, Eric Linden, Robert McWade, Donald Meek, Catherine and Julie Parkins, the Watson Brothers and James Burke. J. Walter Ruben directed. The second completed MGM film, "Piccadilly Jim," will present Robert Montgomery, Billie Burke, Frank Morgan, Madge Evans,

At Paramount "Three Married Men" was completed. It will present Lynne Overman, Roscoe Karns, William Frawley, Mary Brian, Gail Sheridan, Benny Bartlett, Mabel Colcord, Marjorie Gateson, and others.

"Wives Never Know," directed by Elliott Nugent, also finished at Paramount. The cast: Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, Adolphe Menjou, Claude Gillingwater, Vivienne Osborne, Fay Holder, Louise Beavers, Don Rowan, Nancy Lee and Porter Hall.

"Thank You Jeeves" was finished at Twentieth Century-Fox. Arthur Treacher is featured, supported by David Nevin, Virginia Fields and Lester Matthews.

"King Of The Royal Mounted" is a Sol Lesser production for this company's distribution. The cast features Robert Kent, Rosalind Keith, Alan Dinehart, Frank McGlynn, Sr., Juch Luden, Grady Sutton and Arthur Loft. Howard Bretherton directed.

Warners completed "The Case Of The Caretaker's Cat" in which Ricardo Cortez, June Travis, Jane Bryan, Craig Reynolds, Gordon Elliott, Carlyle Moore, Jr., Nedda Harrigan, Lottie Williams and Warren Hull will be seen, directed by William McGan.

The last of the completed pictures is "The Gay Desperado," Pickford-Lasky. It will present Nino Martini, Ida Lupino, Leo Carrillo, Harold Huber and many more.

Paragraphically

Everybody did everything they could think of to make the British exhibitor party happy during its stay in Hollywood and the guests expressed themselves as charmed with all they saw and did, setting a neat example for a people not commonly overzealous as to amenities.

Report that Dr. A. H. Giannini will administer the affairs of United Artists in an office well removed from studio din has set executive ears tingling and the precedent may sprout a trend.

John Leroy Johnston has resigned as Universal publicity chief after nine years of service and has been succeeded by Hubert Voight.

British Exhibitors Visiting Hollywood

Members of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, British organization, who are visiting America, arrived in Hollywood this week after a train trip from New York which included stops in Chicago and at the Grand Canyon. An elaborate program of entertainment has been arranged for the group by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Inspection of various studios by the group occupied Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. A motor coach tour of the California coast, scheduled to start on Friday, will take the visitors to Santa Barbara, Del Monte and San Francisco. They will start the return trip from that city August 12th, going directly to Chicago and then to Niagara Falls and Toronto. They expect to be back in New York on August 17th and they will sail on the Normandie.

Lazarus to Resume Post at Paramount

Jeff Larazus will return to Paramount as head of the story department, it was reported this week. He left the company as head of the story department some time ago in a personnel shakeup and has just returned to Hollywood from a European vacation.

The status of Glendon Allvines with the company is still undetermined.

ASKS WHAT HAPPENED TO MPTOA'S POINTS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

What has become of the Moses, Mr. Kuykendall, that was going to show us the promised land? Substantial cancellation and the ten point program.

Evidently this is all washed up, as most of us knew it would be.

Well, the producers are asking for it, and at the next session of Congress, they will very likely get it, in a bill, that will be hard to take. From their viewpoint.

The Neely bill is gaining momentum, that I know, for I had a visit with our own representative and he advised me that it had a good chance of passing in the next session.

I don't hold with all the provisions in this bill at all.

But if the producers will not listen to reason, what they get will be on their own heads.

And frankly I think that this bill will go through flying, and nothing will stop it, not this time.—A. E. HANCOCK, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

ON PIES, TWO-REELERS AND LONGER FEATURES

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

It is quite noticeable in the announcements of new short subjects product that most all of the producers are eliminating two-reel comedies from their lineups and seem to be centering their attention on one-reelers.

This week I inquired of an executive of one of the large producers as to the reason of this, and you can readily imagine my surprise when he informed me that it was hard to make good two-reel subjects of a comedy nature. He further told me that there was a demand for two-reel comedies, and I believe that he is right in that statement.

But this week I am playing here at the Capitol a Warner Brothers two-reeler entitled "Keystone Hotel." It features a cast of the old Keystone cops. Young movie patrons don't remember the good old pie throwing days with these cops. However, the comedy in question was made along the same lines, trick photography, pie throwing and all the elements that were placed into the making of the oldtime comedies.

The reaction of each and every audience that has seen this subject on our screen this week has been amazing. Young and old have laughed heartily, laughed at this comedy more than any two-reel subject we have ever presented here. And it was quite noticeable that on many of the shows, the audience applauded at the end of the comedy.

It seems to me if the producers are going to eliminate two-reelers some thought is going to have to be given as regards to putting more footage in feature pictures.

All of which leads down to my own personal thoughts, that good comedies can be made if enough thought is given to them, that the present day audiences still like pie throwing in their comedy bill of fare, and, lastly, that two-reel comedies still have a place on any theatre's program.—EARLE M. HOLDEN, Capitol Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

WPA'S Shows Scored by Writer

An attack on the WPA theatre project which is termed "doomdoggling," is made in an article in a current magazine by Harrison Grey Fiske, the playwright. This week ended the first six months of existence for the project and an official resume of its progress has been issued.

The release, after listing as successes its production of "Murder in the Cathedral," "Triple A Plowed Under," and the Negro "Macbeth," stresses the fact that a new audience has been brought to the theatre, the patrons of the Portable Theatre Unit. This summer the unit is expected to attract over 2,000,000 people to the plays which are given in parks free of charge.

Mr. Fiske, in his article, accuses the project of being Red-colored and of being far below the standard of a commercial theatre which produced, during the last season, such plays as "Saint Joan," "Winterest," "Victoria Regina," "Pride and Prejudice," "Idiot's Delight" and "Boy Meets Girl."

Mrs. Hallie Flanagan has obtained an extension of her leave of absence as director of the Experimental Theatre at Vassar College to continue for another year as national director of the Works Progress Administration's Federal Theatre Project, it was learned this week.

Mrs. Flanagan's decision to continue as head of the WPA theatre became known following reports from Washington that President Roosevelt will soon approve a $7,000,000 allotment for the project during the coming year. The director has announced several new appointments to the staff of the project. Howard Miller, regional director in California, has been named as Mrs. Flanagan's special representative in the west; John McGee, regional director in the southeast, has been appointed special representative in the south, and William Stahl, until recently connected with the project's experimental theatre unit, has been made special representative in the east.

Exhibitors Meet Again

The second meeting of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the Independent Theatre Owners Association committees in New York, named recently to work out details for the merging of both exhibitor organizations, was to be held Thursday at the Hotel Astor. Edward Rugoff, chairman of the T. O. C. C. group, and Bernard Barr, head of the I. T. O. A. committee, were to have the cooperating members of their organizations on hand in an effort to work out basic plans for the amalgamation.

New Lombard Contract

An amicable adjustment of the situation between Paramount and Carol Lombard and a new contract following the current pact which expires January 1 are anticipated by studio officials in Hollywood. The actress is understood to have demanded a release from her current contract or a new one at a higher figure than specified in the option clause of the present agreement. She claims she can earn more freelancing and asks $100,000 per picture.

Comedy

There's plenty of the stuff necessary to entertain and amuse audiences of average character in this. Likewise, other than personalities, there's a lot of exploitation possibility with which to sell the entertainment provided. It's not a big picture. It probably won't set any new box office records anywhere, yet if patrons are made sufficiently aware of its quality, it should prove pleasing.

With comedy as its keynote, the film is a cleverly contrived combination of fun, light drama, intrigue, mystery, suspense, romance and surprise. Making no pretenses other than to be acceptable average entertainment, the show moves speedily, and though it mainly depends upon dialogue for explanation, there is sufficient action in the various situations to provide an engaging appeal.

Mainly the premise follows the idea that when one person gets into trouble, it means trouble for many and consequent amusement for the witnesses. Mannequin Mary Trent gets into trouble when somebody steals a pearl necklace. When, fleeing the crime scene, garbed as a bride, she leaps into taxi driver Jimmy Donlon's cab, she gets him into a peck of trouble. It's worse than ever when, after being convinced the girl is on the level, Jimmy falls in love with her and decides to help her out of the mess. Summoning his pickpocket pal, Fingers, and newspaper reporter buddy Clifton to his aid, they all manage to get into more trouble, all of which is highly comic in character until Mary gets to thinking society pauper Stewart is the villain. For a while the film turns serio-dramatic as Jimmy and Mary take Stewart for a ride and Fingers and Clifton ransack his apartment for evidence. But after Jimmy wallops Stewart into unconsciousness for getting fresh with Mary, the whole menage, with a detective added for good measure, gather in Stewart's lodgings where, in a laugh-packed anticlimax to the romantic fadeout, the loot is recovered dropping from the lining of Stewart's hat.

Wisely the producer invested the story with a lot of hokum. A desirable element in any show of this character, it's the angle that gives it a fresh appeal. In that atmosphere, the picture is played with spirited enthusiasm. The work of Chester Morris and Fay Wray is consistently good. They together provide lots of laughs, but the character most likely to have audiences up on chair edges is Lionel Stander, whose dialogue and actions are amusing. Similarly Raymond Walburn and other cast members are effective in making the show's amusement really amusing. The teaser significance of the title takes on a further meaning when what happens after the first meeting is understood. That used as the initial showmanship lead, with patrons requested to exercise their own imaginations as to what occurs thereafter, should provoke considerable pre-presentation interest and it can be expected that word-of-mouth advertising will benefit follow-up exploitation.

Previewed in the Ritz Theatre, Los Angeles. Following the seriously toned "The White Angel," the audience succumbed to the gay, airy preview, several times interrupting its showing with applause, and gave the picture an ovation at the end that seemed to surprise its sponsors.

Grand Jury

(Radio)

Melodrama

Municipal corruption, murder and the timidity of grand juries in bringing indictments against known racketeers keynote the theme of this picture, subjects common to many a newspaper's front page.

Through this theme is woven a story of the help a newspaper gives in aiding honest citizens to crusade against crime and crooked political machines, but, unfortunately, here the journal is represented by a cub reporter who is more successful as a comedian than a newshound, despite the fact he does get stories, and the plausibility of the situation is shaken quite a bit.

However, there is drama enough for those that demand it—in the murder of two innocent persons and the near murder of the two heroes, which one expects as soon as the story begins to unfold.

The comedy has been placed in the capable hands of Fred Stone and Owen Davis, Jr.

Other cast names include Lois Latimer, Moroni Olsen, who is prominent in the currently released "Mary of Scotland"; Frank M. Thomas, Guinn Williams, Harry Beresford, Russell Hicks, Harry Jans and Billy Gilbert.

As the story opens, Stone appears to be active in the city's civic affairs because he umpires the baseball games between the teams of the various municipal departments. His granddaughter, Miss Latimer, is also shown to be in love with an aspiring reporter, Davis.

Miss Latimer's father delivers a tirade against the necessity of serving on juries when he is called by the foreman of the city's grand jury, and her grandfather upbraids him for his lack of civic pride.

The grand jury is to try Williams, racketeer, for the murder of the son of one of Stone's cronies. The jury acquits the mobster and the dead boy's father takes a shot at Williams in the jury room. Davis, keeping an eye out for the regular reporter covering the court, scores a beat on the story and gets his first recognition from the city editor.

By another twist of circumstances, Davis is assigned to get a statement from the prisoner and here Stone helps him by getting to see his former pal where a newspaperman could not. Stone further plans to help the youngster, and his granddaughter at the same time, by slipping the prisoner out the rear door of the penitentiary.

The gangsters, thinking the murdered boy's father may know too much, kill him as he is walking with Stone and Davis. This sets the two after the murdering ring and throws them into situations the audience seems to expect.

In the meantime, to cover up their real activities, the gansters ally themselves with Stone by posing as a committee of righteous citizens bent on seeing justice done. Stone, with the aid of Davis, continues to blunder about seeking clues until he finally stumbles on the crooks' hideout. Coming to meet him, Davis is captured, and in trying to rescue him, Stone also is taken.

The gangsters all show themselves to the two prisoners and are about to kill them, when the police break in. Stone becomes the public hero and Davis, the reporter who made good, wins his raise so he can marry the girl of his dreams.

All through the action are interspersed bits of comedy by Stone and Davis, with Davis doing his share to amuse the audience by continual brushes with his editor, Charles Wilson.

Reviewed at the Palace theatre on Broadway, where an audience apparently seeking relief from the heat seemed to be pleased with the moderate fare offered.

Comedy Romance

Showmen who like to sell their merchandise will find plenty in this to occupy their attention. A lively, fast moving comedy romance, it possesses the qualities that please average audiences. Well mounted, capably acted, it concentrates on comedy in action, situations and dialogue. Names presented are fairly good for selling purposes, but the story itself seems to be the thing on which to concentrate.

George Raft, characteristically, is a suave but hardboiled gambling house operator. Doing business with the ordinary run of folk, he has ambitions to crack the big money folk. Taking a trip to Florida in the winter season, he runs across an impoverished socialite, Dolores Costollo Barrymore, and makes a deal with her whereby they will use her mansion for headquarters and she will serve as a lure to attract the moneyed crowd. At the same time, he gets

PREVIEWED . . . REVIEWED . .

TRADEVIEWS by W.R. WILKERSON

•UNTIL yesterday preview cards have never meant anything to this reporter and, we feel certain, have never given the producer a true index to the value of a picture. If the cards were great, the producer flourished them before every news hawk, heralding that picture as a production achievement. If the cards were bad and a news hawk happened to know they were bad, the producer invariably replied, "They don't mean a thing," replied, "They don't mean a thing."

But we saw a set of preview cards yesterday that meant a lot to us, not on the quality of the picture or the value of the opinions of that preview mob which always grab the cards as it leaves the theater, but an audience reaction to a new star and the interest of an audience to a new personality. The star and the personality was Simone Simon.

After seeing a good part of "Girls' Dormitory" the other day we sat down at this desk to report the creation of a new box office bet. We had to yell into the next office for the proper spelling of Simone Simon and we should know how to spell the name. Accordingly our first interest in looking over about 120 preview cards was the fact that on NOT ONE of those cards was the name Simone Simon misspelled, indicating that preview audiences are up on their spelling in their knowledge of this little French girl.

Our next interest was to find a reaction to the Simon accent. Most of the fans reporting their reactions suggested "Don't permit her to lose her accent"—"Don't let her go Garbo and try to talk English"—"Her accent is her greatest charm," etc., etc., etc.

We then became interested in the general raves for this girl, raves above the picture, above the rest of the cast that spotted such names as Ruth Chatterton and Herbert Marshall.

All indicating the rapidity with which an audience can spot something new, something good, something out of the ordinary. That's a tip how quickly the fans build a star, how easy it is for a company to jump a player into a money attraction, IF it has the right player. Also indicating how hungry ticket buyers are for new faces, new personalities.

TRADEVIEWS by W.R. WILKERSON

•ALONG the thoughts of new personalities and boxoffice draws, we believe Zanuck will have the top new bet for this year in Simone Simon. This little French girl,is getting a development with Zanuck that will zoom her to the absolute top in two, maybe three pictures. We have seen a lot of her footage in "Girls' Dormitory" and the girl is great; she will definitely become an important boxoffice attraction.

Simon has everything required of a star. She is good to look at in both face and figure, and has a distinctive personality unlike any other person on the screen; she can act and has just enough temperament to make her intriguing. She has a decided accent, but that reacts to her favor.

So watch Simone Simon and watch her handling by Zanuck, who has always been rated as top developer of male talent, but has been given the finger in discussions on the discovery and advancement of feminine players, a reputation born of Zanuck's story mind rather than lack of ability in handling women. His yarns, for the most part, have been virile vehicles for men, with the girls just playing feminine leads. He knows he has a great possibility in Simone; he knows he has to develop several feminine names for his Century-Fox banner. And he will.

"Simone Simon . . . Everything desirable in a young screen star. With an impish naivete that is refreshing and ability way above the average and looks that are compelling, she should reach the top in a few strides . . . Though surrounded with the toughest opposition, she comes through with all honors."

THE KEYSTONE OF YOUR FUTURE

romantically wrapped up in the girl and goes highbrow.

To his henchmen pals of other days, James Gleason, Edgar Kennedy and Lynne Overman, this is something not to be desired. A resourceful trio, they decide to give Raft a dose of medicine that will bring him to his senses. They hire Reginald Owen and Ida Lupino to appear as English nobility and take Raft for a sleighride. Also they hope that when he awakens to the trimming they give him, he will consider Dolores of the same ilk, and all can return to the happiness of the pre-high hat days. Owen and Lupino go to work on Raft, but just when the hook is well baited, Costello contrives to reveal them as a couple of confidence workers. Raft escapes their trap to save his money, and, much to the consternation of his trio of would be saviors, marries Miss Costello.

Always light and lively amusement, telling an improbable but none the less possible story, the picture stacks up as one that exhibitors can have a lot of fun with in exploiting.

I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany

(Malvina)

Political Preachment

It would appear that one Isobel Lillian Steele, Canada-born American girl, music student and one-time foreign correspondent of a magazine entitled "Germany and You," was arrested by the German government in September, 1934, on suspicion of espionage, was detained successively in two jails and deported in December of the same year following long-range intervention by Senator William E. Borah of Idaho.

It further appears that the said Isobel Lillian Steele wrote up her experiences and decided they constituted material for a motion picture, which was produced in due season by Malvina Pictures corporation under direction of Alfred T. Mannon.

Wherefore, actually, "I Was a Captive of Nazi Germany" opened at the Globe theatre, 46th street and Broadway, New York, on August 1st, for what was advertised as its world premiere, with the marquee shouting "amazing" and "astounded" to passersby accustomed to strong adjectives and, on occasion, strong entertainment. The adjectives turned out to be the stronger in this instance.

The picture which Mr. Mannon managed to construct is a queer admixture of personally conducted interview with Miss Steele, stock shots of post-war Germany, newspaper headlines and, finally, staged reenactment of incidents underwritten as factual by Miss Steele or Mr. Mannon or both. For a long while before the acting begins an unnamed narrator visible in silhouette recites history, introduces Miss Steele, then asks her questions which she answers by way of leaving no one in the dark as to how she feels about Herr Hitler. Frequently during the staged portion of the picture the narrator intrudes, making everything clear to the just possibly puzzled audience, and he's talking again when the picture closes with a shot of the Statue of Liberty. The flag is omitted.

Import of his many words, which are interspersed with scenes in which Miss Steele acts the part of Miss Steele in company with unnamed and unknown players, is that Herr Hitler's treatment of everybody is pretty bad but his treatment of the Jews is much worse. It is possible to get the impression that the narrator likes to have a bit of help from his audience and on Monday afternoon he got it. As German script scribbled on a cell wall was interpreted by the narrator as a warning to Der Fuehrer that for every individual he imprisoned a hundred others were at liberty and opposed to him, abrupt applause, not necessarily planted, broke out, followed by a gutteral "Heil Hitler" en solo. Then the picture slouched along in silence to its star-spangled finish.

As to the showman's problem in exploiting the picture, there isn't any. The situation is quite the reverse. The problem is not to find the exploitation angles but to find the picture. Factual or not, and intentionally or otherwise, the film is a gaudy, underdone and ineffective attack on the Hitler government, as which it compares unfavorably with most temperate utterances of the daily press and nightly radio on the same subject.

Adventure Romance

A Zane Grey story of the old West, this picture concentrates in theme on the struggle of the Indian to preserve the last remnants of the lands of his ancestors from the invading white man. Buster Crabbe as Moya, the young and educated chief of an ancient and dying tribe, injects a new note into the familiar plot of love pitted against greed in a fight for a fabulous gold mine. The colorful figure of the young Indian chief as portrayed by Crabbe is the keynote for the campaign.

A well-screened gun battle, in which the defenders of the mine use dynamite when their ammunition gives out, and a charge on horseback by the Indians, who in this case are the rescuers, are the high spots of the picture which provide groundwork for build-up. Monte Blue, veteran Western villain, as Kasedon, deserves a strong play.

The film opens with a ceremonial in which the tribe is initiating Moya as chieftain. The sages of the tribe warn him to guard the hidden gold mine which is their last treasure. Back in the settlement Chet Kasedon makes overtures to Moya, but the Indian refuses to disclose the site. The promoter sets his outlaws on the Indian chief, who is captured and taken to the mountains for torture. Meanwhile the stage coach is bringing to the settlement Dick Gale, a young mining engineer imported by Kasedon, and his greenhorn friend, Fordyce Mortimer, out to "see the West." Other passengers are Jane Belding and her father, Doc Belding. Dick incurs the wrath of Jane by his remarks about her father's professional ability. Arrived in the town, Dick is surprised to learn that Jane is engaged to Kasedon.

Chet orders Dick to find the mine. Out on a prospecting trip the engineer stumbles on the camp where Kasedon's outlaws are trying to extract the secret of the mine from Moya. That night Dick slips back and rescues the Indian, who, in return, makes him a partner in the gold venture since the tribe now needs technical help in mining the ore. Dick and Fordyce take samples of the quartz to the assayer, who betrays the pair to Kasedon. Kasedon's wedding to Jane is set for that night. Just as the ceremony is beginning Dick eludes the guards Chet has set over him, kidnaps Jane in a Lochinvar gesture and carries her off to the mine. Chet and his outlaws ride out to seize the mine from the Indians and their new found friends. They surprise the group and a desperate battle begins.

Lifted above the more ordinary western by the Zane Grey name and by the unusual treatment of the Indian angle, the picture is interesting and exciting. As a study in history it may be improbable but as adventure, it rates.

Seen at Loew's Ziegfeld, subsequent run, where the action picture was favorably received by the neighborhood audience.

Trapped by Television

Comedy-Drama

Television, currently a topic of newspapers, table talk and official utterance on both sides of the Atlantic, is the principal subject of this comedy drama, which has to do with the successful invention of a receiving and sending apparatus on the basis of what the dialogue describes as a "new theory." The apparatus represented as constituting the device is equipped with enough gadgets to make what transpires appear plausible and the story permits the invention to work out its own and the inventor's salvation.

Probably the general interest in television suggests exploitation in that vein as the basic promotional factor. With this technique the title and the action of the story are in accord. In pattern the picture is of the comedy-to-drama type, ending in a melodramatic sequence of considerable vigor.

The plot presents the case of Fred Dennis, impoverished inventor of a television machine, befriended by one Rocky, bill collector, and ultimately by Bobby Blake, girl promoter, who sets out to exploit the invention and falls in love with the inventor. A broadcasting company on the verge of bankruptcy is the sought customer. Three of its employees who have engineered a coup to sell the company's own television formulae to the company by criminal methods seek to frustrate Dennis' plans. Successful demonstration of the Dennis apparatus combines with a fist fight in which the crooks demolish the sending machine, but are televisioned (if that's the word) in the act of doing so. They are apprehended, the apparatus is purchased, and Dennis marries the girl.

Gypsy Melody

(British Artistic - Wardour)

Romantic Musical Comedy

The Tzigani Band of Alfred Rode is deservedly featured in this romantic comedy and Lupe Velez supplies the feminine charm. The picture is plentifully supplied with comedy, and though Jerry Verno as Madame Beatrice, modiste, seems to force the laughs at first, the comedy works up into real laugh-making. The continuity is good, the story entertaining and the music excellent, especially the 2nd Hungarian Rhapsody played by Rode's Tziganis. This is the high spot of the film. Fred Duprez as the American impresario gives an outstanding performance.

Lupe Velez sings and dances well and is excellently cast as the Gypsy girl in love with Rode, who, as Captain of the Guard in Ruritania, is imprisoned after wounding the referee in a duel. Escaping, he is then driven away from a Gypsy camp, which he had joined, on his wanderings, by the chief, who is in love with Lupe. He takes charge of a Biergarten Orchestra and is engaged by an American impresario. The scenes which follow in a London hotel where the orchestra is engaged provide the comedy high spots of the film and a chance for Lupe's temperamental outburst.

Unexpectedly returning to Ruritania when the airplane in which they are traveling to the Continent makes a forced landing, the Captain of the Guard is welcomed back to his country because of his success abroad, and marries his Gypsy sweetheart with impressive Gypsy ceremonials.

The recording in the earlier portion of the film was noticeably bad and the earlier dialogue fell flat. The music is delightful and unusual throughout.

Night trade show at Piccadilly Theatre, London. The house loudly applauded the Tzigani Band numbers, especially the 2nd Hungarian Rhapsody, which was the high spot of the picture. Comedy got over very well.

Calling the Tune

(Phoenix-ABFD, London)

Musical Melodrama

This subject at least has an original story background. Its action covers twenty years' progress in gramophone technique and quite a lot of the incident is placed in the recording studios, which are illustrated as they were in the days when a German Band from the street was good enough for a popular number, down through the days of the first Melba recording to the perfection of electrical recording and the promise of television.

Incidental to this survey is the introduction of such famous entertainers as Sir Cedric Hardwicke, George Robey, the Philharmonic String Quartet, the English Singers, and Sir Henry Wood conducting the Queen's Hall Orchestra.

In this aspect of the subject lies the best chance of putting it over. The story is not too convincing. Its opening shows Stephen Harbord, inventor of a new record-pressing process, tricked out of his formula by a crooked employee, Finlay, in collusion with Bob Gordon, principal of a gramophone company; at the same time Gordon squeezes out his more scrupulous partner, John Mallory.

Twenty years later his son, Peter Mallory, is in a relatively unimportant position in the company, in which Gordon and Finlay are supreme. Harbord has invented an electrical recording system, superior to one on which Peter has been working. Peter, in love with Gordon's daughter, Margaret, antagonizes her by his attentions to Julia, Harbord's daughter, but they are reconciled after Finlay, attempting to wreck the Harbord factory, is killed in an explosion and his dying confession is recorded by television.

The acting is very uneven, the work of the juveniles contrasting badly with that of Sam Livesey and Eliot Makeham as Gordon and Harbord.

Trade shown at the Cambridge Theatre, afternoon. Due to the artificialities of the story and the somewhat stilted acting there was a deal of laughter in unscheduled places. The Robey and Hardwicke items and the orchestral and other musical contributions got, and deserved, applause.

Accused

(Criterion - United Artists)

Backstage Melodrama

Combined in the plot of this British production are two elements sometimes supposed to guarantee popular appeal. It is a backstage story and it climaxes in one of the "big" court scenes in which the heroine is saved at the last minute from a conviction for murder.

Additionally for exploitation are the facts that French court procedure is, nominally, pictured and that the acquittal is obtained by "reconstruction of the crime." This procedure has a recognized place in French law.

With an American director in Thornton Freeland and two American leads in Dolores Del Rio and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., the subject has further values for the use of showmen who do not think the subject's crudities of detail and the weakness of its dialogue disqualify it for use.

In Paris, Tony Seymour and his Spanish wife Gaby obtain a dancing engagement in a new musical show to be put on by Yvette Delange, stage star with a temperament and a liking for young men. She pursues Tony and arouses the angry jealousy of Gaby. On the night of the dress rehearsal she insults Gaby during her dance and after an angry scene Tony and Gaby walk off the stage.

Persuaded by the manager, Tony agrees to go to Yvette's flat to patch up matters. She fails to appear. When Tony reaches her apartment he finds that Gaby, believing him with Yvette, has been tramping the streets for hours. At the theatre, meantime, Yvette has been found dead—stabbed with a dagger used by Gaby in her stage dance. There are witnesses to the fact that Gaby visited the star and was heard quarreling with her, and she cannot account for the hours spent in the street.

At her trial for murder a conviction seems certain, when Tony appears with a new witness, the ex-convict husband of Yvette, who admits to visiting her just before the crime. In clearing himself he proves that the night watchman who found the body has told lies; the defending counsel seizes the clue and in a verbal re-enactment of the crime accuses the watchman, who admits his guilt by hurling a knife at the lawyer, exactly as he did at the murdered woman.

Night trade show at the Palace Theatre. The extraordinary laxity of the French court proceedings caused ironical laughter and interest seemed to slacken rather often, due to this and other story crudities and to poor dialogue.

PUBLIC TIRED OF DOUBLE BILLS, SAYS SHOWMAN; LONGER FEATURES URGED

Ralph Cokain, Writing in Liberty Magazine, Blames Producers as Well as Exhibitors; Warns Against Giveaways

If Hollywood will keep on increasing the length of features, double billing will die a natural death, in the belief of Ralph Cokain, advertising manager for the three Neall and Conners independent theatres, at Marion, Ind., with his offices in the Indiana Theatre. The independents are the principal users of the double featuring policy.

Mr. Cokain, writing in Bernarr Macfadden's Liberty Magazine under the caption "Double-Trouble at the Movies . . . A Sympathetic Theatre Man Speaks His Uncensored Mind," takes the stand that the public is tired of double billing, that producers have taken note, and that the practice soon will disappear. He calls the practice "the greatest menace" he has ever seen to the motion picture industry and to the public.

Quoting "innumerable complaints" he has heard from patrons, he declares that he cannot blame them. "What irks me," he continues, "is that theatres continue week after week to shove such an entertainment policy down the public's throat while the poor moviegoer yells, 'Stop!'" The writer points out that there is a small minority who think they are getting more for their money simply because they sit twice as long. "However," he says, "very few can recall the time when both features on the same program were equally outstanding. One was bad."

In extenuation of this he points out that the exhibitor over a period cannot arrange double features, cannot afford to operate under such a policy, unless one of the features is cheap and mine-run.

Of the theatre manager's side of the problem Mr. Cokain explains that during the depression the exhibitor had to evolve some strategem to hold up his receipts. "At the same time," he says, "he contracted for so many pictures that in order to play them on time in accordance with his agreement with the producers he had to double on his program.

"It was a novelty at first, but the public is tiring of it. No greater proof of this is needed than the fact that not only double features are necessary to attract patronage, but bank nights, china-gift nights, sweepstakes, and other forms of giveaway inducements as well. If double features were satisfactory from the patrons' standpoint, these other schemes to get more business would never have been necessary. As it is, the poor exhibitor, along with his two features, has so many special giveaway nights that entertainment is losing out in his theatre." And patronage is decreasing as a direct result, he believes, when the public would rather have one good feature, balanced with the proper amount of short subjects.

Mr. Cokain blames the producers just as much as the theatre manager. "They know well enough that the pairing of features cuts down on their revenue," he says. "They know, too, that the added giveaway inducements are eating into their profits. Yet they add more features each season to their lineup, with the exhibitor buying so many he can't fulfill the terms of his contract unless he pairs them."

The writer draws hope from the fact that producers, in a study of their grosses, are discovering that in almost every case they have made more money from playing single features that were too good to pair with others of lesser value.

"The producers' first step is to make longer features," he continues. "It was longer pictures, pictures that in spite of their length packed an entertainment wallop in every foot, that won Academy awards, movie-magazine medals, blue ribbon awards of merit from trade papers, and box-office medals for their unusually high grosses. It is longer features that Hollywood is now turning out in the first stage of its war on 'doubles'."

Citing as an example the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film "The Great Ziegfeld," Mr. Cokain answers the possible contention that such a picture, running a little over three hours, is just as likely to tire the patron as two features of ordinary length. "Three things must be taken into consideration," he declares. "First, Hollywood does not intend to increase the length of pictures unless they are 'meaty' enough with entertainment to sustain the interest. Second, the public has sat through two features for so long that the producers believe one good long picture would be much more preferable than two mediocre short ones. Third, the temptation to add another feature is practically abandoned if the running time of the first feature is too long."

Mr. Cokain concludes that the double feature plan is on the way out, but cautions that "it will be a lingering death."

"I wish all the theatre managers from the Atlantic to the Pacific would join forces to stop the practice, and all do it at the same time," writes the showman. "But that won't be done. It will take time. But once it is out of the way, producers, exhibitors and the movie-going public will be happier. And I, for one, will sigh with relief when I see one of last night's patrons coming toward me. At least he won't be complaining about that gosh-awful double feature program he endured last night."

Butterfield Theatres Announce Expansion

An extensive rebuilding and expansion plan is announced for the fall and winter season by E. C. Beatty, president of the W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., and the Butterfield Michigan circuit. New houses include ones in Alpena, Traverse City, Bay City and Grand Rapids and the leasing of the Whitney in Ann Arbor. New seats and equipment will be installed in most of the other theatres.

Grand National Certificates Are All Sold

Edward L. Alperson, president of Grand National Pictures, this week stated that of 400,000 shares of new stock offered to the stockholders of Grand National 384,296 shares, or 96.07 per cent have been subscribed.

Mr. Alperson also announced that Robinson, Miller and Company, on behalf of the underwriting group, state that the unsubscribed stock, amounting to 15,704 shares, will be withdrawn for private investment. No stock will be offered to the public. The company has approximately 9,000 stockholders.

Meanwhile, in Hollywood, work on lining up a production staff continues. This week it was announced that Grand National had signed Ed Finney, former advertising and publicity director of Republic Pictures, to produce eight westerns, to star Tex Ritter, radio singer, under the direction of John McCarthy. Mr. Finney is also advertising and publicity director of Grand National and will continue in these duties besides producing.

Others signed by the new organization include Russell Bell as art director. He was formerly connected with Warner Brothers and United Artists. Harry Blair will handle special publicity and Sam Kestenbaum, who recently resigned from Republic as promotion manager, has been signed in the same capacity by Mr. Finney.

Friedlander Settles With Grand National

Al Friedlander this week settled his contract as vice-president in charge of advertising, sales and distribution of First Division Exchanges, Inc., which was recently absorbed by Grand National Pictures.

Mr. Friedlander for years bought, cut, edited, retitled, publicized, exploited and sold much of the film which went through Harry Thomas's First Division states right exchanges. "Goona-Goona" was one of his specials, and besides he introduced to this market a number of British pictures through independents, then concentrating on the sale and exploitation of the original March of Time issues when Time Magazine was releasing its films through First Division.

"Rhythm" Holdovers Cited Despite Adverse Weather

In its first 14 key city engagements, "Rhythm on the Range," Paramount's latest Bing Crosby vehicle, is running way above average business despite terrific heat, the company reports. In many instances it is being held for additional playing time. Reports indicate the theatres are enjoying the best business since the first of the year.

EARLY LIFTING OF RESTRICTIONS ON FILM IMPORTS SEEN IN ITALY

Tentative Production Schedules Ready for Next Season Show Large Increases at All Studios with 60 Features Intended

by VITTORIO MALPASSUTI
in Rome

While no change is expected at present in the restrictions on the importation of films into Italy, in the near future it may be possible that such restriction on films coming from the United States, Germany, Austria and Hungary will be cancelled, that the exportation of money of American and German companies working here be allowed up to a certain amount, and that foreign producers will be invited to use profits for the making of Italian films in Italy.

English and French productions are not yet allowed to be imported and the German, Austrian and Hungarian, which are admitted, scarcely amount to a total of from 25 to 30 features.

In this regard the Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Columbia and United Artists are making plans to produce films in Italy with Italian actors and technicians, etc. The American films and stars are leading the market. The best-sellers in America are also the best here.

A good picture is a good picture everywhere, generally speaking. American stars are the most appreciated here for superb acting and "sex appeal," but Shirley Temple is the greatest attraction all over Italy.

The greatest artistic success of the season was "A Midsummer Night's Dream" of Warner Bros.

Improving Sound

In order to increase the rental of the Italian production, the Ministry of Press and Propaganda is taking definitive steps to improve the projection installations in all wired houses and to enlarge its number all over the country. In Italy, there are 5,235 cinemas, but only 2,175 are really equipped for commercial purposes at the present; 4,395 communities of some importance are without any cinema at all, while Milan has 106, Rome 104, Turin 69, Florence 50, Naples 49, Genoa 39.

The Italian Film production for 1935-36 season has been 36 features. Considering that the Italian producers are about 40, the average production quota is very low. It may be possible that for next season the Italian films will range to about 60 features. For the moment 30 are in preparation as follows:

PER LE STRADO DEL MONDO ("Along the Streets of the World"); producer, Forzano Film; manager, Jean Epstein; Italian and French versions. BERTOLDO BERTOLDINO E. CACASENNO; producer, Consorzio Autori; manager, Baldassare Negroni. LA DONNA FRA DUE MONDI ("The Woman Between Two Worlds"); producer, Astra Film; manager, Goffredo Alessandrini; Italian and German versions. A stereoscopic edition has also been made of this picture, the first instance of a complete feature treated with this system. These three pictures and BALLERINE ("Dancers") are of outstanding importance both from the financial and artistic points of view.

The shooting of another group of pictures has been completed and the synchronization will start shortly. They are: LA DANZA DELLE LANCETTE ("The Dance of the Watch Hands"); producer, B. M.; director, Mario Baffico; ANONIMA ROYLOTT ("Anonymous Roylott"); producer, Fiorda; director, Raffaelle Matarazzo; and AMAZZONI BIANCHE ("White Riders"); producer, Abror Film; director, Gennaro Righelli. This group will be released during the coming season.

A third group is at present under way which comprises, among others, a work of considerable importance, SQUADRONE BIANCO ("The White Squadron"); producer, Roma Film; director, Augusto Genina. Besides this there is now in production: SETTE GIORNI ALL'ALTRO MONDO ("Seven Days in the Other World"); producer, Etrusca Film; director, Mario Mattoli; RE DI DANARI ("Money King"); producer, Capitani Film Consorzio I. C. A. R.; director, Enrico Guazzoni.

The first group, which was started on June 15, comprises many works. They are: CAVALLERIA ("Cavalry"); producer, I. C. I.; director, Goffredo Alessandrini; a

Powers National Theatres Buyer

William T. Powers has been named successor to E. L. Alperson as head of film buying for National Theatres, Spyros Skouras, operating head, stated last weekend. The appointment in no way affects the standing of J. J. Sullivan, F. W. C. buyer.

Mr. Powers already has assumed his new post. George Balsdon, who up to now has been exclusively handling short subject purchases, has been appointed first assistant. Milton Hossfeld, recently on the F. W. C. staff, will be permanently located in New York. During the past few months Mr. Hossfeld has been spending most of his time in the field. Miriam Detlefs also will assist in the buying. Miss Detlefs for years was New York exchange booker for First National and Warners. She has been with National for about three years.

Edward Zabel, assistant to Mr. Skouras, will act as "adviser" to Mr. Powers and his staff. He recently returned from the coast where he spent a year. His post in Los Angeles has been taken over by Larry Kent, brother of the president of Twentieth Century-Fox. Prior to his being transferred to the coast, Mr. Kent was assistant to Edward Peskay, who resigned July 1 as buyer for Skouras Theatres.

National Theatres and its subsidiaries operate more than 400 houses throughout the country. Among National subsidiaries are F. W. C., Evergreen States, Intermountain, Fox Midwest and Fox Wisconsin circuits.

Mr. Sullivan, who was compelled to return to the coast about two months ago due to illness, is back to resume negotiations on pending deals. Harry Cohen, RKO western division sales head, has been in the east since the company's convention working on final details of a deal with the circuit. The talks are expected to wind up in a few weeks, following which the National buyers will start discussing U. A. product terms.

Irving Barry, secretary to Mr. Skouras, has gone to Milwaukee on a three weeks' assignment.

O'Rourke Rejoins Exhibitor Group

Ray O'Rourke, operating the Doris theatre, Philadelphia, has been reinstated a member of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania.

Dave Rubinoff—without his fiddle—was lunching on Broadway with an actor friend, who between fish scales was telling Rubinoff of his "sumptuous" suite at a nearby Times Square hotel. "Would you believe it," the ham exploded, "the sun hits through my window at the crack of dawn just like a spotlight."

"Yes," squelched Rubinoff, "and I suppose you get up and take a bow."

One of the several scenes in "The Green Pastures" which stirred our special speculative interest in stagecraft shows Moses, acting magic-wise, turning a wand into a slimy, slithering snake. It was all done so smartly that we applauded even though it appeared to us that the scene of Moses holding the wooden wand had been cut out the while the writhing snake scene was cut in. But now we are told that there was no cut-out or cut-in. The effect was accomplished without any interruption by freezing a real snake in a high-powered refrigerator, handing him over while frozen stiff to Moses for use as a wand and then thawing him out under blazing arc-lights.

The gradual development of London as a motion picture producing center has already had its effect in bringing forth at least some amusing tidbits in the vein of our own Hollywood.

One concerns the extremely dignified Shakespearean actor—and there's nothing more dignified than a Shakespearean actor in London—who, having never before appeared in motion pictures, humbled himself to ask for $60 a week to play the part of a full-blooded Indian "extra." The studio casting agent offered him $30, which the thespian declined. Walking haughtily to the exit, however, the actor evidently reconsidered the opportunity to eat, and, turning to the agent, declared, "Very well, I'll take the part for $30, but I'll act only as a halfbreed."

Bitingly cynical ol' George Bernard Shaw refused, on his 80th birthday, the other afternoon, in England, to accept a present from his colleagues in the Malvern Players of the stage, on the grounds that it "would only be the presentation of some silver atrocity of no use to me or anybody else." Then, turning to Hollywood, he asserted he would direct one of his plays for the movies if they gave him $100,000. It's not the silver, but the amount that counts.

The show business will soon be bidding for the "Camp Transparent Woman." It was brought to this country last week direct from the famous Hygiene Museum in Dresden to be exhibited first at Rockefeller Center, at the foot of our office window, and later to tour the country. It presents the intricate structure and functioning mechanism—transparently—of the female body, lacking only one gadget—namely, something that would stop women from talking too much.

FRUSTRATION

EDITOR, DAILY NEWS,
NEW YORK:

The rat who invented movie censorship ought to be shot. Here I am, just come of age to see some swell spicy pictures, and now there aren't any. Damn it.

SEXY-WEXY SID.

BURIED inconspicuously in newspaper obituaries the other morning was a notice of the death at Clementsport, Nova Scotia, of one Bernard Goodman, at 80 years. He gave to the motion picture the subject of the most preposterous publicity fiction ever perpetrated on the screen:—Miss Theodosia Goodman, his daughter, who was first introduced to theatricals as Theodosia DeCoppett, finally evolving in the films as Theda Bara—Theda being a rearrangement of the letters of "death," while Bara was just a mere cypher, of Arab spelled backwards.

Theda Bara became a box office hit overnight for William Fox, in January, 1915, in "A Fool There Was." Thus began the building of the great Bara screen vampiring myth.

Plotters and compounders of the Bara publicity fiction appeared mostly in the person of Al Selig, press agent, who now is with Abraham Patrick Waxman at GB Pictures. Mr. Selig in the Bara days had been a confrere of Winfield Sheehan.

Conscienceless press agents' typewriters soon began to ply the newspapers with Miss Goodman's "most amazing past," announcing that Theda Bara was the daughter of a French artist and an Arabian mistress, born on the sands of the Sahara. Thus this "deadly" Arab daughter of poor Tailor Goodman was pictured as a crystal gazing seeress of profoundly occult powers, wicked as fresh red paint and poisonous as dried spiders. Little girls read the newspaper copy and swallowed their gum with excitement, as they studied the Underwood and Underwood poses of Theda with skulls and crossbones, glass balls and all the trade marks of Oriental desert mysticism. Theda Bara of the screen, working her willowy way with men in a manner that would make Mae West appear to be the best behaved pupil at the proverbial Sunday School picnic, became the vicarious and shadowy realization of several million variously suppressed desires.

She received awed newspaper reporters in darkened parlors draped with black and red, in the tone of her sweeping gown. She was white, languid and painfully polite. The air was always heavy with turberoses and incense. But when the door closed on the last interviewer the windows went up with loud laughter.

"Give me air!" commanded Theodosia.

Walter Wanger's blonde English-born star, Madeleine Carroll, for years had dreamed of owning a dream castle on the Mediterranean. Fulfillment came only a few months ago when she and her British husband, Captain Philip Astley, made an investment in the acquisition of an ancient estate overlooking the blue sea, proceeding therefrom to modernize the structure completely, even to the construction of a swimming pool—the addition of a modern pool to a colorful old castle dating back centuries being an exertion of the Hollywood influence. It was to be their "dream castle," a place to which they could slip away for quiet vacations. Time for the first vacation came the other day, but there will be no visit to the dream castle. It's in Spain, in the heart of the revolution.

It cost Lawd Ingram most of his studio salary.

Mr. Ingram returned to his native Harlem the other afternoon from Warners' "heaven" on the coast, and reported that he actually felt he was "De Lawd" while at the studio. "The little chillun in the picture would spend their time around me," Mr. Ingram said, and because he was De Lawd he felt he had to spend most of his salary buying ice cream cones and frozen custard for them. "I never had any money," he moaned. Although Warner Brothers in the picture had him perform miracles of all kinds and descriptions, De Lawd couldn't raise a single ice cream cone when the kids came around, without putting cash on the counter.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

Green Light

(Warner-Cosmopolitan)

Drama

Story character, production values which it is being given, cast selection and assignment of director unite to establish this film as one that deserves much more than passing exploitation consideration. Basically it is drama that relates unusual but not theatrically unfamiliar events in a young doctor's career. Briefly, in several well rounded chapters, it tells of a young doctor who assumes responsibility for a death on an operating table so that the reputation of a surgeon he worshiped should remain unblemished. It has a further dramatic counterpart in situations in which the younger doctor permits himself to be inoculated with a lethal virus in development of a serum to eliminate the danger of an epidemic scourge. Naturally the production has a compatible romantic counterpart, the love interest quality of which is as poignant as the drama.

With the current series of doctor pictures demonstrating that there is a public appetite for this type of entertainment, the production is adapted from a novel of the same title by Lloyd C. Douglas. The screen play is by Milton Krims, and direction is by Frank Borzage, whose screen accomplishments need no delineation.

To bring to screen realism a story to which the producers attach so much importance, an unusually worthy cast has been selected. The young doctor will be interpreted by Erroll Flynn, star of "Captain Blood" and soon to be seen in "The Charge of The Light Brigade." Flynn, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, noted English player, seen in "The Crusades," Henry O'Neill and Spring Byington are the central figures in the story's dramatic phases, while the romantic quality is entrusted to Anita Louise, currently prominent in "Anthony Adverse." In additional important parts Henry Kolker, Pierre Watkin and Myrtle Stedman will be seen.

As the picture will be released as a Cosmopolitan Production, it can be expected that it will be given the benefit of an extensive publicity and advertising campaign.

Old Hutch

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

The character of the story told in this production and the cast names form a combination open to exceptional exploitation effort. In digest the yarn narrated is about a lovable, lazy old fellow who found $100,000 and then was confronted with the problem of how to spend it without attracting too much attention to himself or causing suspicion. Eventually the problem is solved as the shiftless, irresponsible old rascal is instrumental in obtaining conviction of a bank robbing gang and really earning a reward that will permit him to spend his days fishing.

For Wallace Beery, who plays the title role, the story undoubtedly is of unusual character. As it unfolds, there is considerable about it reminiscent of the atmosphere of "Min and Bill" and "The Champ," two of his most successful appearances. Supplementing the motivating story is a contrast of youthful romance which features Eric Linden and Cecilia Parker, remembered for "Ah, Wilderness." From a publicity angle it should not be forgotten that Beery, also, was prominent in that picture in a similar shiftless role.

Besides those names, naturally the ones that will be relied upon to carry the brunt of exploitation as it pertains to personalities, the supporting cast lists several wellknown players and presents a few that are new to the screen. Among the better known performers are Elizabeth Patterson, Robert McWade (also an "Ah Wilderness" player), James Burke and Donald Meek. Newcomers are the Perkins sisters and the Watson brothers and Virginia Grey.

The production is based on a novel by Garret Smith which attained high popularity, and direction is by J. Walter Ruben, maker of "Riffraff" and "Trouble for Two."

Thank You, Jeeves

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy

Published as magazine serials and books the P. G. Wodehouse stories detailing the hilarious adventures of Bertie Wooster and his sober visaged but whimsical "gentleman's gentleman," Jeeves, have been delighting readers for years. With this vehicle as an introductory effort 20th-Fox is planning production of several Jeeves stories with Arthur Treacher starred.

The story, located in England, was adapted by Joseph Hoffman and Harry Sauber. It is at all times nonsensical farce foolishness. Jeeves and his employer become involved in the mysterious misadventures of an attractive girl, take on an American negro saxophone jazzer for a companion, and get mixed up in a cops-and-robbers story in a haunted medieval English castle. Dialogue, situations, action and characterizations have only one objective—to be productive of the maximum amount of fun for any kind of audience.

With the exception of Willie Best, the cast is exclusively British. Treacher's appearances in over forty pictures since coming to America about three years ago have made him popular with legions of theatre goers. David Niven, who plays the part of Bertie, was seen recently in "Splendor" and Palm Springs." The girl in the case, Virginia Field, has had considerable stage experience and is under contract to 20th-Fox, though her previous screen appearance was in United Artists' in "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Other members of the all-English cast are John Graham Spacey, Lester Matthews, Colin Tapley, Ernest Stanton, Eugene Reynolds and Douglas Walton.

As particular attention was devoted to preserving a full British savor and atmosphere in the picture, Arthur Greville Collins, onetime London stage director and maker of several American pictures, including "Personal Maid's Secret" and "Unconscious," was chosen to handle the filming of the story.

Straight from the Shoulder

(Paramount)

Drama

Actually two stories are told in this picture. One concerns the great affection that existed between a widowed father and his young son and the efforts the boy made to keep his dad from remarrying. The other is a gangster atmosphered drama in which the trio, witnesses to a murder, are put on the spot by the criminals, only to have the youngster, after his father has been seriously wounded, frustrate the vicious attempt of the gangsters to wipe out all witnesses to their crime. As these two main themes are dramatically developed, a third one deals with the happy association between the youngster and an old sharp-shooting gun-maker.

The yarn is based on a story by Lucian Cary, who, as a contributor to Saturday Evening Post, has told many interesting stories with the old gun maker as the central figure. The screen play is by Madeleine Ruthven, and direction is by Stuart Heisler.

With but one exception, the cast is composed of familiar names. However, in spotting the players one radical change has been made: Andy Clyde, whose previous screen appearances have been exclusively confined to comedy roles, will be seen in a dramatic part. He is the gun maker who, in teaching young David Holt how to make and handle rifles, makes it possible for the lad to be the story's hero. Ralph Bellamy is featured, and a newcomer, Katherine Locke, makes her debut as the girl in the case. Onslow Stevens is the brains behind the gangster trio, which consists of Bert Hanlon, Noel Madison and Paul Fix. Other players to be seen are Purnell Pratt and Rollo Lloyd.

Don't Turn 'em Loose

(Radio)

Drama

Though the idea of this story is to demonstrate the danger of lax parole board clemencies, and the yarn is definitely gangster in character, it is, nevertheless, a human interest drama. From a practical topical consideration it is a digest of many headline situations currently prevalent. Looked at from the standpoint of dramatic entertainment, it is a "black sheep" story.

For years the criminal scion of a respectable family has perpetuated the hoax that he is a wealthy business man. A law breaker, living under a dual identity, he commands financial and political power continually enabling him to receive paroles from sympathetic pardon boards. The first smash sequenece, following much thrill action, comes as the boy's father, now a parole board chairman, is forced to recommend clemency when the son threatens to expose the situation. Climaxing the melodrama is the son's death at his father's hands as he plans to commit a payroll robbery.

The story is an original by Ferdinand Reyher, with screen play by Harry Segall. Direction is by Ben Stoloff, familiar with this type of material through his handling of such pictures as "Two in the Dark" and "Night Mayor."

Starred is Bruce Cabot, featured in "Show Them No Mercy" and "Let 'Em Have It," and the character quickly identifies the title and story atmosphere. Outstanding among the screen's portrayers of gangster roles, he is supported by an exceptional cast. Prominent among those to be seen are Lewis Stone as the boy's father and James Gleason as his detective nemesis. As the full gangster-political atmosphere of such plots is preserved, the story also entails a contrasting bit of romantic love interest between Betty Grable and John Arledge. Other players who will be seen are Grace Bradley and Maxine Jennings as gang molls; Frank M. Thomas, a crook lawyer; Louise Latimer;

IN THE STUDIO CUTTING ROOM

Gordon Jones; Harry Jans, Frank Jenks and Addison Randall as mobsters; Nella Walker as Stone's Wife, and in minor atmospheric parts Fern Emmett, Arthur Hoyt and Charles Richman.

Hollywood Boulevard

(Paramount)

Drama

Familiar atmospheric production scenes being incorporated herein probably will prove of more attractive exploitation value than any other elements in the picture. As it tells a dramatic story, in which, strange as it seems, comedy contrast is the result of dramatic situations, the picture takes its auditors on a comprehensive tour of Hollywood. Actually, the story is not a within-the-studio-gates yarn; rather, it is a cross section visualization of things that are particularly Hollywood where everybody wants to be a picture star and yesterday's extraordinaries are today's ordinary extras.

The story concerns a passe star who still thinks he's great if he only had a chance. When he is prevailed upon to write his memoirs, the unscrupulous publisher colors them up with a lot of lurid details (a procedure not uncommon). The articles, creating a sensation, make it seem that their author is still a hot number, and through chicanery the publisher finances a picture that again will star the oldtimer. This leads to a tragic denouement which not only menaces the veteran's scrambled domestic life, but brings danger to one dear to the publisher.

Based on a story by Faith Thomas with screen play by Marguerite Roberts, the production is being directed by Robert Florey.

John Halliday will be seen as the oldtime actor and C. Henry Gordon as the publisher. Various persons whose lives are effected, as the result of the deal made by the two men, are Marsha Hunt, Robert Cummings, Esther Dale and Frieda Inescort. Closely associated during the film's action with stars and featured players are Esther Ralston, Albert Conti, Oscar Apfel, Purnell Pratt and others. Additionally, scores of notables of other years will be seen in atmospheric roles.

The Man Who Lived Twice

Drama

Supporting the literal significance of its title, this production tells a strange story. A killer, knowing that he's at his trail's end, prevails upon a medical scientist to permit him to be the object of his experiment whereby useful men can be made of useless stock. The operation successful, the scientific guinea pig emerges an eminent doctor. He knows nothing of his past, but the law, aided and abetted by a jealous moll of his gangster days, catches up with him. Tried on old charges, he is convicted, but his attorney makes a stirring appeal to the governor that the humanitarian scientist of today is a new man and that the world is more in need of his skill and ability in curing potential criminals than in his death in punishment for the earlier crimes.

The picture is based on an original story by Tom Van Cyche, who prepared the screen play in collaboration with Fred Niblo, Jr. Direction is by Harry Lachman, who in previous pictures has demonstrated a flair for handling this type of material, as the dramatic phases of "Dante's Inferno" attest.

Ralph Bellamy is presented in the dual role of criminal Slick Rawley and the remade Doctor James Blake. Isabel Jewell is the moll of the old days whose jealousy of Marian Marsh sharing the romantic contrast of the story's second phase with Bellamy, leads to her putting the law again on Bellamy's trail. Ward Bond is Slick's gunman pal, later Dr. Blake's protector. The role of the sleuth who devotes his life to tracking down Rawley is assumed by Willard Robertson.

Though the motivating idea of this story is by no means new, the manner in which it has been adapted here is unique. In substance it is the reverse of the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" plot premise. In itself, however, the picture seems to be of the character that makes possible the application of other than ordinary formula exploitation ideas. While the players appearing are worthy, it looks as though the story, itself, is the thing to concentrate on in building interest creating publicity.

Oh Susannah

(Republic)

Drama

While this picture is western in action and atmosphere, it is a romance tinged drama that takes Gene Autry completely out of his heretofore exclusive western player role. Factually the story is melodrama in which the life of the leading player is twice in jeopardy. Hurled from a train by a fleeing murderer who later disguises himself in his victim's clothes to effect his escape, the villain again kills and as he has been accepted as Autry, the last-named again is the objective of a manhunt. But in conjunction with his buddy of several other pictures, Smiley Burnette, and with the musical assistance of a popular coast radio singing orchestra, he does a bit of entertaining, falls in love with the girl in the case and between both contrives to trap the killer and clear his own name.

The story is an original screen play by Oliver Drake and is being directed by Joseph Kane. Musical contrast provides instrumental, solo and chorus numbers prepared by Sam Stept, Drake, Autry and Burnette.

Practically all the relevant action in the story is handled by Autry, Burnette, Frances Grant, Earle Hodgins, Donald Kirke and Boothe Howard, who is the heavy of the piece. Additional players include Clara Kimball Young, Ed Piel, Frank Marvin, Carl Stockdale, Roger Gray, Fred Burns, Lew Meehan, Snowflake and Earl Dwyer.

King of the Royal Mounted

(20th Century - Fox - Sol Lesser)

Drama and Romance

An authentic and believable Zane Grey story sufficiently including virile action and excitement to interest the thrill devotees, a better than average cast and quality of production are the basic ingredients of this production. It's a dramatic story of love and intrigue in the Northwest with a girl's hand and fortune at stake, in which the Royal Mounted policeman frustrates the plot of conspirators to deprive the heroine of what belongs to her.

Many facts recommend the picture to showmanship attention. Zane Grey's popularity as a screen writer is recognized. The story upon which this picture is based is appearing in several hundred newspapers, automatically creating a potential pre-made audience. In it Robert Kent, now being seen in "The Country Beyond" and "The Crime of Dr. Forbes," is presented in the title role. He is of a type not usually seen in action pictures and it is expected that he will be effective in stimulating feminine interest. Sharing the romantic interest with Kent is Rosalind Keith, lately seen in "It's a Great Life," and "Poppy." The part of the heavy is being played by Alan Dinehart. As this trio is the center of all action, supporting players include Frank McGlynn, Sr., Arthur Loft, Grady Sutton, Jack Luden and Artie Ortego.

Direction is by Howard Bretherton, maker of many pictures for Warner, also credited with handling the Hopalong Cassidy series. The adaptation is by Earl Snell, who has a long list of successful screen plays. In this he has introduced many unique twists to distinguish it from previous Zane Grey stories. The film is being produced by Sol Lesser. Practically all action was shot in the Mammoth Lake districts of the High Sierra Mountain Country, the scenic beauty of which duplicates the still primitive Northwest Canada.

His Brother's Wife

(MGM)

Dramatic Romance

According to authentic reports, Robert Taylor's popularity has increased amazingly, particularly with women patrons. A succession of exceptional pictures from "Broadway Melody" to "Private Number," plus his personality, has made him a top ranking favorite. Quite naturally, to most exhibitors, he stands out as this production's dominating showmanship asset. It seems that this story has been selected with a special eye towards increasing Taylor's prestige.

It is a dramatic romance. Part of it is gay and charming; the other half is serious. A young doctor and girl fall in love. His brother and parents object to their intent to marry. The father pays the boy's gambling debts on condition that he go away and forget the girl. Further to remove any obstacle that might hinder his scientific career, the brother marries the girl. Now the story turns completely dramatic. The doctor returns from South America and prevails upon his brother's wife to return there with him. There, as the brother gets a divorce, both understand their love.

With Taylor as the young doctor, the cast looks to be of unusual merit. Barbara Stanwyck is the girl and John Eldredge is the brother. Jean Hersholt will be seen as the boys' father and Joseph Calleia as a gambling czar with whom Taylor gets into financial difficulties. Other players in the cast include Samuel Hinds, Phyllis Claire, Leonard Mudie, Jed Prouty, Pedro de Cordoba, Rafael Corio, William Stack and Edgar Edwards.

Based on a modernly conceived story, the production values are rich in depicting the two major locales, New York and the interior of South America's jungles. The picture is directed by W. S. Van Dyke, whose most recent effort, "San Francisco," is currently causing plenty of excitement.

Films Entered in Festival

Three American producing companies have selected their entries for the fourth International Cinema Festival to be held in Venice, Italy, August 10th to the 31st. Paramount will enter "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine;" RKO, "Mary of Scotland," and Twentieth Century-Fox, "Under Two Flags" and "A Message to Garcia."

Hollywood Premiere Resumes Pre-Depression Glory

Hollywood Bureau of MOTION PICTURE HERALD

There was tumult in the town and copious evidence, audible and visible, that the good old days and nights of box office prosperity are here again when Hollywood, professional and citizen, turned out in what may be termed a body to witness the world premiere of "Anthony Adverse" at the Carthay Circle theatre, Los Angeles, on the star-spangled evening of July 29th.

Data:

Applications for first-night tickets at $5.50 each trebled the number of seats in the theatre.

First-night gross exceeded by 20 per cent the top figure previously established by the Carthay Circle in twelve years of operation.

Advance sale for the first fortnight was the largest experienced since 1929.

Fifteen hundred persons bought subsequent-performance tickets entitling them to sit in a specially constructed grandstand to witness arrival of the cinema nobility and twice as many more tried to.

Students of show business—and who in Hollywood isn't?—read particular significance into the populous presence of the laity. Interest of the professional population in a production based on the most spectacularly publicized book in recent years and brought to screen under notable auspices at highly quotable expense was a factor to be counted upon as routine. Interest of the plain people, of whom so many must be induced, ultimately, to pay their way into theatres across the face of the earth, was not and is never a safely foregone conclusion. It was the outpouring of these, in numbers estimated from 35,000 to 50,000, that convinced novice and graybeard, statistician and celebrant, that reference to the depression in the past tense is genuinely justified henceforth.

The grandstand mentioned was a feature of premiere showmanship seldom if ever quite paralleled in the indubitably showmanly environs of Los Angeles. A sectional, portable type of structure, it flanked on two sides the 50-yard approach to the entrance, with 30 feet of lawn between, down which arrivals progressed afoot from carriage to theatre entrance. Announcers identified each via a public address system and gave way to those who could be persuaded to speak. Between arrivals a band played and singers sang, while floodlights poured down and spotlights pointed up and all the niceties, nifties and ceremonial amenities were appropriately exercised.

Among those attending were Jack L. and Harry Warner, Hal B Wallis, executive producer, and Mervyn Le Roy, director of the picture. Representatives of the cast were Fredric March, who plays the name role.

Conditions reminiscent of those lustrous nights prior to October, 1929, when no week was a social success without its Hollywood premiere prevailed at the opening, July 29th, of "Anthony Adverse" at the Carthay Circle theatre, Los Angeles.

Olivia De Havilland, Anita Louise, Gale Sondergaard, Claude Rains, Edmund Gwenn, Donald Woods, George E. Stone and others. Mr. LeRoy, whose guests were Irving Thalberg and Norma Shearer, was lauded by Harry Warner for his work on the production. George Burns and Gracie Allen also made use of the loudspeaker, practically stopping the show with characteristic banter.

Within the theatre, the staff was costumed in consonance with the Napoleonic period, in which the picture is set as to time. A program, produced in precise dimensions of the novel on which the picture is based, 6½ by 9½ by 2½ inches, was distributed.

Heads habitually wagged sidewise are beheld, therefore, nodding affirmatively when studio talk turns, as it consistently and somewhat excitedly does, to the general business significance of the "Anthony Adverse" premiere. The word is out that the good old box office days and nights are here again.

B&K DOUBLE FEATURING STARTS IN SEPTEMBER

Independents Will Follow Circuit's Policy; Theatre Lobby Radios Bring Star Broadcasts

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

After four years without double features Chicago theatres are to start playing them on or about September 11th. The Balaban & Katz circuit, which dominates theatre activities locally, will be the first to inaugurate the new policy. They will start double feature programs in their "A" houses with the advent of the new season's product and it will be but a matter of days before all other houses in their circuit, with the exception of the loop theatres, will follow suit.

Instead of waiting for the new product to arrive via the regular clearance route, independent theatre men are planning to adopt the dual bills as soon as B & K has opened the way. To wait until the new product is available for them would be a financial blow and regardless of the clause in last year's contract that duals were not permitted the independent exhibitors plan to start using duals as soon as the opening gun is fired. That the distributors will raise any objections is unlikely.

The double feature plan has been so successful in other cities, according to B & K executives, that it is deemed advisable to return to the plan here. The B & K circuit is the only local group which is in favor of the dual program; all other circuits as well as the independents are definitely opposed. Attempts were made last spring by B & K to start the double feature policy but a prohibitive clause in all city contracts ended the efforts.

Warner Brothers theatres, the other leading member of the Chicago Exhibitors Association, is opposed to the return of duals, as are members of the Allied Theatres of Illinois, a group which includes the Essaness and other important but smaller independent circuits.

With a number of deluxe neighborhood theatres that have from 4,000 to 5,500 seats, dual bills are deemed a profitable plan by the B & K group. The smaller independent houses, many of which have but 300 to 500 seats, have done all possible to prevent their return. Inability to get a "turnover" because of the length of the program is the reason given for this situation. The larger houses with plenty of seats can take care of the business when it comes but the smaller house has to resort to a "hold-out" when the rush hour comes.

With the distributors granting B & K an extra seven days clearance between "C" week and the first-week-of-release, a fight is now on between Allied Theatres and B & K and the distributors. Conferences scheduled for this week may result in the settling of this conflict. If not, Aaron Saperstein, president of the Allied group, has been authorized to notify the attorney general that the "Consent Decree" handed down here by the federal court in April, 1932, has, in Allied's opinion, been violated and that the matter of granting extra clearance should be subjected to arbitration. Allied's contention is that the extra clearance affects all first-week-of-release houses instead of just those which are in a competitive situation to B & K "C" week houses. The independent group feels that granting of clearance to houses that are in competitive locations is not out of line but to have the plan effect all first week houses is going too far.

Conferences between exhibitor groups and the Operators Union for the arranging of a new contract for the coming year, are scheduled for this week. Last year's agreement expired in January of this year but through a gentleman's agreement its regulations are to be upheld until September first, when a contract for the coming year is to be made. Last winter the union was asking for a 20 per cent wage increase. What their demands will be at this time is not known. Exhibitors were definitely opposed to the raise when it was last discussed and probably retain that attitude.

Downstate salesmen for local film exchanges report that sales have fallen off sharply the past few days. The continued dry spell throughout the middle western states and especially through the "cornbelt" has placed business in the doldrums in communities which depend upon agriculture for their livelihood. A search of all weather records fails to find a period that has been as dry as the past two months. Corn and small grains have been severely damaged.

Business in the loop lately has been exceptionally good, due no doubt to several strong attractions and livable weather. At the Chicago this week "Rhythm on the Range" and Major Bowes' Dance Band and Unit show are heading for a nice figure expected to pass the $40,000 mark. It is the best business in this big house in months. "Suzy" at the Roosevelt is another big money picture while "Green Pastures" at the United Artists is doing very well. Other loop theatres have been well above average and the next few weeks are expected to be the biggest of the year. The last weeks in August are usually high points.

George Weeks, general manager for Gaumont-British, was a Chicago visitor last week. He gave a luncheon for a number of leading exhibitors, at the Blackstone Hotel, and to preview two new G-B pictures, "Nine Days a Queen" and "Seven Sinners," both of which rated approval from the theatre men. Weeks also dispelled rumors of changes in the G-B sales set-up and said that no changes of any sort were contemplated. Other speakers at the luncheon, besides Weeks, included Clyde Eckhardt, W. A. V. Mack and Abe Fisher.

Voting for the Queen of the Cruise of the Chicago Amusement Publicists Association is heavy along Film Row and among the various theatrical groups in Chicago. The winner will receive a prize the night of the cruise which is midnight, August 18th. The affair will take place on the SS Roosevelt. Each ticket carries 1,000 votes for the Queen. Warner Bros., Essaness and other circuits are fast getting support for their favorite candidates. Harry K. Smythe, president of CAPA, is in charge.

Herb Elisburg is on the vacation list this week. Another to seek solace from a year's busy activity is Larry Stein. Both are press representatives, Elisburg for Essaness and Stein for Warner's.

Ted Weems and his orchestra have been booked into four Great States theatres for stage appearances. As a novelty with his band Weems will show the short film, "The Martins and the Coys," which illustrates the feud between these two clans while Elmo Tanner and Red Engle supply the musical background. The short film, which was first shown at the Chicago theatre, was made here by the General Film Laboratory and directed by your correspondent.

Local theatres are installing radios in their lobbies and waiting rooms so that patrons who wish to hear the various broadcasts of film stars from Hollywood can do so and not miss being at the theatre too. During one broadcast a few days ago almost as many patrons of a local theatre could be found in the lobby and waiting room listening to a broadcast by Franchot Tone and Joan Crawford as were inside the theatre auditorium watching Tone perform on the screen.

Monday, August 24th, is the date set for the annual Warner Club picnic. The affair this year will be held at Wicker Memorial Park in Highland, Indiana. Golf, softball, and other athletic events will highlight the program.

Robert Ripley's "Believe It or Not" unit show of freaks has been booked into the Chicago theatre for one week.

Fair Trade Law Decision Awaited

With decision on a test case involving the Wisconsin fair trade practice act expected this week the motion picture and other industries are focussing attention on the probability of tests of a similar Ohio measure.

The law, which is similar also to those passed in 12 other states including California, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Illinois, stipulates that, "Whoever knowingly and willingly advertises, offers for sale, or sells any commodity for less than the minimum price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant with the provisions of this act, whether the said person is or is not a party to such contract, shall be deemed guilty of engaging in unfair competition and unfair trade practices and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby.

AMERICANS FILMING THE SPANISH CIVIL WAR, DESPITE RIGID BAN

Firsthand Shots of Battle Scenes Arrive from Within Rebel and Loyalist Lines; Film Smuggled Across Border

Not all the shooting these days in strife-torn Spain is being done by the rebels and the Loyalists of the Red Spanish Government. Proceeding quietly and very much under cover, scarcely a dozen in their ranks, are the American newsreel cameramen who, despite as rigid war-time censorship as ever has been imposed upon newsreel or newspaper photographers, are grinding cautiously in the night and from points out of sight in the daylight.

The Spanish revolution was more than two weeks old before the American newsreel home offices in New York were aware that their men were even on the battle-fronts. Disrupted communications and drastic censorship had led the managements on Broadway to believe there would be little if any pictorial record of the war available for American theatres. Now negatives in the can and carefully-worded cables are beginning to get through the lines, and already firsthand shots of the fray are in this country, but not without the continued possibilities of casualties to men and equipment.

The American newsreel cameramen today are with the rebel army at Burgos, recording the activities of the Fascist insurgents while they are asserting that "the beginning of the end" of Spain's rebellion has come, as deserters from the loyal forces are entering the Rightist lines at Buitrago, 40 miles north of Madrid. The cameramen are in Madrid, too, filming the Loyalist movements, and at La Zaida, 30 miles southeast of Saragossa, amid the changing scene of capture and recapture.

The American newsreel men will ignore Secretary of State Hull's blunt warning to United States nationals that they remain in Spain at their own peril.

First Shots Arrive

The first newsreel scenes to reach New York, last Friday, were more of "academic" nature than of action. It still was too early to determine the quality of the pictures now being smuggled across the border, nor could the managements determine how far away their cameramen were from the "closeup" scenes of action.

Pierre Luck, first newsreel cameraman for Fox Movietone in revolt-torn Spain, cabled to Truman Talley, general manager, in New York a vivid description of the trek of luckless natives in one Spanish village to and from their homes to avoid the gunfire of opposing forces.

Mr. Luck had reached the front lines of rebel forces near the town of Vera only by exposing himself to snipers who lined his route as the rebels advanced on San Sebastian.

Mountain Warfare

"I saw scenes of mountain warfare which, for hardships imposed on the troops, were almost unbelievable," Mr. Luck said in his message, relayed to Mr. Talley by Associated Press. Mr. Talley expects to find much of the fighting recorded in Mr. Luck's next batch of negative.

"Starting at Lesaca," Cameraman Luck continued, "I went horseback over the mountains with a native guide. We jogged for five hours before reaching Oyardun, where Colonel Beorlegui commands a column of 3,500 men, mostly Carlist volunteers.

"From the hills surrounding Oyardun the troops looked down on San Sebastian, about eight and one-half miles away. In front of the Fascists, stretching around to Enderlaza, on the right, were government forces trying desperately to cut off the Colonel's troops from communication with Pamplona." Mr. Luck, for obvious reasons, made no mention of his camera.

Mr. Luck reported to Mr. Talley that the rebel commander, Colonel Beorlegui, boasted he could "take San Sebastan easily with a loss of perhaps 500 men, but I have been held back by orders from Pamplona. I could at any moment blow up the important railroad bridge between Irun and San Sebastian and wreck the armored trains used by the government to maintain communication between these two points." And there Mr. Luck has his camera poised, in action.

Luck dined in Oyardun with rebel officers, including two priests wearing uniforms. During dinner, information trickled in that the town was to be attacked. Bugles sounded a warning for evacuation. Not only civilians but soldiers streamed into the hills. Mr. Luck went with them.

Rebel officers later explained to the cameraman that the strategy was to evacuate, let the government's loyal troops come in, and then recapture the town.

"If you find on developing that the negative quality is not up to standard please take into consideration that a good deal of it was shot under danger of life," said the information sheet accompanying the pictures received from Mr. Luck. With him were Editor Hans Mandl, Cameramen Prieto, Alonzo and Palaccio, and two sound engineers were also in contact with him.

Movietone News last Friday released a national "special" to all of its American accounts on the film sent it by its Spanish representatives. Mr. Talley claimed that these were the first pictures of the sanguinary civil war to be shown on American theatre screens. The negative was brought to New York on the SS Bremen, which arrived shortly after noon Friday.

Mr. Talley said he was informed from Europe by Russell Muth, Movietone's European director, that Fox newsreel had scored a beat in every nation in Europe with the revolt pictures. Special prints from New York are now on wing to South America and the Orient.

Movietone's first pictures, of Madrid in the midst of the struggle, were flown secretly from outside that city to Paris in a chartered plane.

Incidentally, Mr. Luck had been the sole Movietone representative in Madrid in the almost bloodless revolution that ousted King Alfonso. He was decorated by the successful revolutionists at that time. Further, he had just returned to Spain from Ethiopia, the last member of the Movietone expedition that covered the Italian conquest to leave Africa.

Reading between the lines of the information sheets coming through to all newsreel headquarters in New York with the film from Spain, there is evidence that every time a crew ventures out to make pictures the men's lives are ventured also. Stray bullets are commonplace when a nation is torn by civil strife, and hot-headed commanders, sullen in defeat or flushed by triumph, are wont to regard cameramen as enemy spies or as persons on whom to vent spleen or newly acquired power.

The "dope" sheets of the second batch of film which arrived on the SS Normandie on Monday were full of such suggestions. Fox's Cameraman Prieto, who to date has made most of the Fox pictures showing the Fascists in action, wrote:

"Had to leave this division after it left Burgos (sleepy cathedral town of Northern Spain). They are all youngsters, between 15 and 20 years old, with the exception of a few officers, and they are going up to the Guadarrama mountains for a major engagement with the government forces. One of the commanders told me that to proceed any further with them would be to invite a taste of trouble. The

BULLETIN

"You may assure the Motion Picture Herald there will be no socialization nor confiscation of American representation in the film group here," Jose Carner Ribalt, newly appointed Comisario de Espectaculos Publicos de Catalunya, told me today," Harry Chapin Plummer, Herald representative in Barelona, cabled New York at press time.

"We propose to rebuild on the old structure, not to tear it down," the new commissioner said. "There will be regulation and intervention in the sense that the Interstate Commerce Commission regulates American railways, and undoubtedly there will be also the establishment of quotas and the enactment of contingent laws will follow as in other countries. As to the native Spanish industry, the position of the producing companies is bad, as their backers under the old regime have fled, leaving them virtually bankrupt, and certain studios, like the theatres, may be made cooperative units in which the proprietors, impresarios and employees will share the production and profit, with the government providing all the legal support and, where necessary, subvention. But no socialization and no confiscation.

"Production of the American group may prove the solution of the frozen money situation."

The Federacion Regional de Espectaculos Publicos was formed to amalgamate the labor groups of exhibition, distribution and production.

two French 'still' photographers with me were 'cuffed' about and had their plates broken."

Again from Pierre Luck:

"The bridge of Endarlaza has been destroyed by the government troops which were stationed on the side of the Bedasson river. Consequently, in order to reach this place, I had to walk seven kilometers in the mountains."

In Movietone News, Volume 18, Number 93, made up Monday and Tuesday of this week, for Wednesday release, both sides of the conflict are shown.

Metrotone Cameramen Active

In spite of the difficult communications and censorship along the French border, Hearst Metrotone News cameramen have cabled that they, too, are succeeding in getting pictures of Spain's civil war past the frontiers.

Metrotone cameramen are in the thick of the fighting in the Madrid area as well as Barcelona. The personnel includes several photographers long in newsreel service: Henri Cabrieres, Gaston Chelle and Ariel Varges. Before actual revolution broke out they had formulated plans for a complete coverage.

In dispatches received in New York Tuesday by Michael Clofine, editor, the Metrotone cameramen disclosed they are experiencing some difficulty in enlarging their staff with newsreel photographers from Africa—men who have been active in recent months in the Italo-Ethiopian war. Here and there, too, they report, they are under protective custody.

First Metrotone pictures were in last week's issue, when views along the French frontier were shown.

Nine Paramount Cameramen

Before the first gun was fired in Spain, A. J. Richards, Paramount newsreel editor in New York, had the European map charted for points of strategy for his camera crews. And no sooner was the initial clash between Loyalists and rebels on the record than Mr. Richard, giving the word by cable from New York, had his men move into position.

Nine cameramen immediately commenced operating out of three headquarters. Reginald Brooks, who traveled from England, occupied the central neutral office in Bordeaux. Through his office negative prints are shipped to the United States and men on firing lines are apprised of the success or failure of their attempts to ship war film news out of Spain. Mr. Brooks has two planes at his disposal which are piloted by Englishmen.

Working out of Madrid is Ludwig Geiscopp, an American citizen. Mr. Ludwig was in Spain some time before the revolution broke out. Paramount newsfilm on Broadway and in key cities of the country this week was taken mainly by this cameraman.

Working also with government troops in Toledo and Barcelona, respectively, are John Baylif and John Dored. Pierre Le Long, a Frenchman, is under the direction of Mr. Dored, the cameraman who gained prominence for his prowess during the Italo-Ethiopian trouble.

With rebel troops are Frank MacGregor and James Hart, both English. Mr. MacGregor maintains his headquarters at Burgas with the insurrectionists.

Editor Richard said he deliberately refrained from naming any cameraman whose nationality might prove antagonistic to either side.

Although Paramount estimates its crews have shot about 12,000 feet of film in the Spanish fray, the home office to date has not had a single report of a casualty, or even slight injury to any man at the front.

At various times, however, Paramount cameramen have been arrested and lodged in jail. In Madrid, two planes and film, as well as men, were seized. Through the American Embassy the men were released, their planes returned and also sections of the film that were not censored.

Newsreel men in New York consider they are fortunate if 25 per cent of the negative which their staffs are exposing in Spain escapes seizure or mutilation. They figure that is about the percentage which arrives in America from the time it passes through the camera until it reaches the shipping cans at Bordeaux.

Pathe Cameras Confiscated

Pathe News cameramen have also been getting news shots out of Spain. Three such stories have come to New York from the five cameramen working on the subject during the past week, their film being shipped through the French border town of Hendaye and then finished by the Paris office.

While street scenes of the battles were being filmed by Pathe's staff, several of the cameras were confiscated, but in each case the operator was able to save the film by hiding it under his coat.

The Spain project is under the direction of William G. O'Brien, European manager of Pathe News.

Demands of Small Group Delay Reopening Barcelona Business

Some semblance of normalcy was returning to the Spanish motion picture industry this week, according to Harry Chapin Plummer, Motion Picture Herald representative in Barcelona, who cabled that the offices of distributors and all theatres were still closed but it was understood that only the minor demands of a small group were standing in the way of a reopening, expected by Thursday of this week.

The "Commissioner of Spectacles" of Catalonia has ordered inspection of all film establishments in the region, including studios and laboratories. The inspector will be empowered to intervene in the activities of the organizations relative to the conduct of business and the internal phases, and in exceptional cases, will have the right to place in the company a permanent delegate "for the proper functioning of the house."

Bank accounts are still closed for the payment of all bills except wages. This is designed to "avoid panic."

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer home office in New York was informed that no harm had befallen its personnel in Spain and that the office equipment had not been damaged by the civil war. Robert Trillo, head of RKO Radio Pictures of Spain, was at Marseilles momentarily expecting to gain entrance to his home territory. He had been refused entrance last week by way of Gibraltar and had returned to Rome.

Ideal Sound Studios, Inc., has renewed its contract for RCA Photophone High Fidelity recording for 10 years.

Far Eastern Managers of Universal Promoted

N. L. Manheim, export manager of Universal Pictures, this week made several promotions in his company's Far Eastern personnel. Lipton Astrachan, present manager for Japan, has been made Far Eastern supervisor with jurisdiction over Japan, China, the Philippines, Dutch East Indies, Straits Settlements and India. Alfred Daff, present manager in Melbourne, takes over the management of the Japan territory. Lawrence De Prida has been made manager of the Philippines to take the place of Charles L. Brookheim, who is on an indefinite leave of absence because of ill health.

Legitimate Theatres Are Showing Revival

San Francisco's periodic burst of legitimate stage activity is on again, enhanced by the running of two Works Progress Administration dramas in local theatres. Homer Curran is presenting Katharine Cornell in "St. Joan" at the Curran Theatre, with Tallulah Bankhead in "Reflected Glory," a new George Kaufman play, scheduled to follow.

Burroughs-Tarzan Increases Output

Borroughs-Tarzan Pictures have stepped up production to meet reported requirements of franchise affiliates and will release 24 feature attractions for the current season.

Twelve of these productions will be made by the company itself and twelve will be farmed out to individual producers.

JACK COHN ANSWERS AYLESWORTH; URGES WAR ON RADIO APPEARANCES

Lending the Stars for Air Programs Is "Selling Ammunition to the Enemy," Says Vice-President of Columbia

Charging "treason within the ranks," Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, this week declared himself unreservedly on the side of exhibitors who now are protesting the appearance of motion picture stars on radio programs. Mr. Cohn said that producers must tell their stars that they are working either for films or for the radio but that they cannot work for both.

The possibility of any working arrangement between radio and motion pictures for mutual profit such as that proposed recently in Motion Picture Herald by Merlin Hall Aylesworth, chairman of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and on the advisory committee of National Broadcasting Company, was termed "ridiculous" by the Columbia executive.

"Mr. Aylesworth must have been talking chiefly in his capacity as a radio executive," he declared.

In answer to the claim that the motion picture would be given a medium for publicizing its product "far greater than any existing exploitation channel" under such a plan, Mr. Cohn remarked that present advertising media are entirely adequate for the film industry.

"Good pictures sell themselves," he said. "We have tried 'plugging' pictures on the air both directly and by means of playing up song hits taken from them, and there has been no noticeable increase in business over that obtained through more tested channels."

Holding that nothing can refute the testimony of exhibitors who are protesting the appearances individually and through their organizations, Mr. Cohn declared flatly that the basic fact in the argument is this: "Exhibitors are objecting, and rightly so, to a situation in which stars of pictures which they are showing are scheduled to give radio programs at the precise hour that the theatre manager expects his evening crowd to appear. Naturally their business suffers."

The temper of exhibitors in the matter is such at present, the Columbia vice-president said, that they are willing to take drastic steps to force producers to bar their stars from the air. "It has been suggested to me," he said, "that they will propose to distributors that product contracts include a clause providing that they do not have to show a picture on nights on which its featured players are making radio appearances.

"They claim that they might just as well close their theatres on such nights," he added.

This point the executive exemplified from personal experience. He remarked that his own family, on occasion, have refused to go to a picture because they preferred to stay at home and listen to the stars on the air.

The argument that radio companies are paying huge salaries to film stars for their appearances and that this should prove a boon to the studios which have been confronted with the financial demands of players who feel that their income is insufficient, Mr. Cohn dismissed with a wave of his hand.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "our stars are getting so much now that they don't know what to do with it. Many of them are talking of cutting down the number of productions a year because of the fact that higher salaries bring them into the high income brackets for tax purposes and they find themselves working hard all year only to turn over a major portion of their salary to the Government."

Exhibitors Letters Cited

Circular letters set to all producers by the Independent Motion Picture Owners Association of Connecticut and the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Owners Association, a personal letter to Mr. Cohn from M. J. Mullin of the Mullin and Pinanski circuit, and an organized protest by the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California and Arizona, were cited by the executive as examples of the objections being made by exhibitors to the radio competition.

Substance of the letters and of the protest is that the use of stars on radio programs is definitely harmful to box office receipts and should be condemned in the interests of fair play.

Sees Time Lost from Films

Not the least of the evils resulting from the increasing use of motion picture stars for radio entertainment, according to Mr. Cohn, is the fact that the players spend time which, under their contracts, should be devoted to work in the studio, to studying their dialogue for radio appearances.

"Radio is competition for the motion picture," he concluded, "and no arrangement can be worked out for an amicable arrangement under which both will benefit. We have met that competition in the past and we will continue to meet it in the future. And we will do it when and if television becomes a commercial reality. But we are treading on dangerous ground, selling ammunition to the enemy, when we lend our stars for the enhancing of competing programs."

Sears Is General Manager of Sales For Warner Bros.

Gradwell L. (Grad) Sears this week was appointed general sales manager of Warner Brothers Pictures Corporation in a move which reestablished a post non-operative since the beginning of the sales regimes of Sam E. Morris, now vice-president in charge of foreign affairs, and Edward L. Alperson, now president of Grand National Pictures.

At the same time, Andrew W. Smith, Jr., eastern and Canadian general sales manager for the same company, resigned from his post. Mr. Smith denied the report he was joining Grand National; he did say he had "several offers under consideration."

Mr. Smith joined First National in 1924 as assistant to the general sales manager and when the company was acquired by Warner he was made eastern and Canadian sales executive. About two years ago he was elected vice-president of Vitagraph, the distributing organization for Warner-First National.

Mr. Sears, who formerly supervised the sales in the West and South for the company, now has all of the United States and Canada under his supervision.

Born in Hannibal, Mo., on January 30, 1897, he was educated at Shelbina, Mo., public and high schools and the University of Missouri.

He served in the World war, leaving the service with the rank of first lieutenant. After demobilization, he joined World Film as a salesman, first in New York, then in St. Louis. Later he joined Republic—the Lewis J. Selznick Company—and Selznick and Vitagraph long before Warner acquired it. In December, 1930, he joined the old First National as a Chicago salesman, later becoming branch manager in that city and in Cleveland.

In 1929, he was appointed southern and western sales manager, continuing with First National after its purchase by Warners, when he was appointed western and southern general sales manager. He was elected a vice-president of Vitagraph in 1935 in Los Angeles.

The First National brand name will not be affected by the recent dissolution at Wilmington of First National Pictures, Inc. Robert W. Perkins, Warner general counsel, said this week the dissolution was merely a legal action taken with respect to an old corporation which had been completely inactive for five years. Mr. Perkins declared that that company had nothing to do with the current First National, which "is just as much in business as it ever was."

Sam E. Morris said the dissolution in no way affects the First National alignment in England, where completely separate organizations are maintained.

Aristotle's Ideas of Art Finally Reach the Screen

Geometrical Blocks and Spirals Used to Create Moods

Possibilities of the motion picture as an art medium, perhaps more far-reaching than in its present dramatic expression, are suggested in two short subjects, conceived, developed and produced by a young woman from Texas with a surprising background of art, philosophy and mathematics and a young man with apparently a highly developed technical knowledge of cinematography.

The product is called a synchromy, a word invented out of "synchronize," "chiaroscuro" and "symphony," which explains the process to the initiated. Reduced to simpler terms, the effect of the film is that of "seeing sound." The first reel, produced a year ago and shown for a two-week run in the Music Hall in New York, was titled "Rhythm in Light." Synchromy No. 2 is explained in the title as "A pictorial composition in abstract forms based on 'The Evening Star' sung by Reinald Werrenrath."

Based on intricate mathematical formulae and developed along principles of art expounded by Aristotle 23 centuries ago, the ideas of Mary Ellen Bute and Theodore J. Nemeth, the enthusiastic originators, conform to one of the primary principles of any art, in that they are understandable, in the finished product, to the most uninitiated, non-technical mind. The principle on which the development is based is that the ordinary perception of music, through the ear, can be enhanced and intensified in its effect by the addition of visual forms coinciding with the harmonies expressed in sound.

Successful audience reaction at the showing of the first reel in the Music Hall last year paved the way for the booking of the second, and it opened there with "Mary of Scotland." The original effort, in addition, was booked independently by the young producers in several houses throughout the country and brought praise from a theatre manager at Grand Rapids, Mich., in the "What the Picture Did for Me" department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Albert Heffernan of the Owl theatre in that city termed it, "a very marvelous short, entirely different from the average."

Creating Mood with the Abstract

Miss Bute, who combines a wide education with a highly personable character, explained that her idea is based on the simple premise that modern artists have proved that abstract shapes, spirals, cones, planes and geometrical blocks, create a mood through the eye as sound creates a mood through the ear. The one essential lacking for matching music with visual images—motion—has been adapted, in her creation, through the resources of the motion picture, and developed on the same rhythmical pattern as the musical composition.

Her thesis was reflected by the reactions induced at the showing of the reels in a projection room of the Film Center on Ninth Avenue, New York, around the corner from the ancient structure in the rear of 422 West 46th Street where Miss Bute and Mr. Nemeth have their studio and laboratory. Here the camera expert has constructed a "stage" and adjustable mounting for the camera, based on his own ideas and built especially for the photographing of the difficult sequences in the scripts. Here Miss Bute works out her formulae and constructs plaster models of the abstractions for the camera.

Images Dissolve Into Fantasy

A concrete example of "seeing sound"—a picture of a sound track—is given in the foreword of the latest production. The images dissolve into an ever changing world of fantasy, the pictures that the artists had in their minds while listening to the selection from Wagner's "Tannhauser" on which the film is based. A galaxy of silver spheres, circles and stars, ghostly, flower-like figures and other forms, nebulous and again starkly clear, glide through the luminous atmosphere of the screen to the exact rhythm of the music. The effect, to the layman, is analagous to that brought about while watching the interpretation of music through the dance.

Miss Bute is now working on a method of incorporating color in the films. She said that she has developed a system which uses the 12 colors of the spectrum in a chromatic scale and this scale will be utilized as an exact parallel of the musical scale. "Thus," she said, "we can have a complete composition, visual and aural, worked out in harmony and counterpoint and welding movement, music, form and color in rhythm to express comedy, gaiety, humor, horror or pathos."

The young artist gained background for her experiment during an education which included study at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and at the Sorbonne, Paris. She took a course in stage production under the late Professor George Pierce Baker at Yale, and later was a teacher on the Floating University and director of a stock company.

Claims Climax Is Intensified

Miss Bute and Mr. Nemeth see endless possibilities for the use of the basic theme. The photographer has employed the latest technique in camera work and in the use of color filters, and has developed, besides, ideas of his own in this direction which he believes will be important in future production.

"This new phase of the cinema art intensifies climax," said Miss Bute, whose efforts are directed mainly toward eventual application of the idea in regular feature product of the industry. "Its future use in feature length films to stress moods and psychological moments should prove an important step forward in motion picture technique."

VITAPHONE BIRTHDAY MARKED BY WARNERS

The 10th anniversary of the public showing of the first motion picture to utilize the then new invention called Vitaphone was scheduled to be celebrated on Friday by Warner Brothers, the first modern company to show sound pictures. Ceremonies at the Warner studios in Burbank, California, and at the home office in New York were to be held.

On August 7, 1926, at the Warner theatre on Broadway, "Don Juan," starring John Barrymore, was the first film to boast a fully synchronized musical score. On the same program was a short subject in which Will H. Hays spoke to the audience and predicted a universal acceptance of sound motion pictures. In 1927 the company released "The Jazz Singer" with Al Jolson in which the actor spoke a few words and a year later, in July, 1928, the same company released "Lights of New York" as the first all-talking motion picture.

Big New York Circuits Expand

With the new buying season presenting a difficult problem for the smaller unaffiliated circuits, expansion moves by the larger independent theatre groups are under way in New York. Several deals strengthening the purchasing power of the circuits have been consummated and a number of others are in work.

Consolidated Amusements is stepping out as the leader in the new move. Within the past two weeks the circuit has bought substantial interests in the Leff-Meyers circuit and the Elite circuit. Another transaction is in progress whereby four to five more houses will be added.

In each instance Consolidated will do the buying and booking. The Leff-Meyers group has 10 houses, while the Elite, of which Abel Fanachi is head, operates the Morningside, Gem, Greely, Village, Chelsea, Annex, Chatham and Savoy. With the two new groups, the new total of theatres for which Consolidated will buy and book for next season is 41.

Reports were current yesterday that Edward Peskay was negotiating to pool his seven theatres with Prudential. Neither Peskay nor Joe Seider could be reached yesterday for statements.

Dave Rosenzweig, who has a number of units in Brooklyn, Long Island, and the Bronx, has joined with Sam Cocalis. This new association plans to build and acquire several theatres in various parts of Brooklyn and Long Island.

Harry and William Brandt have a number of deals in work which will increase the circuit's holdings in Brooklyn, Manhattan and New Jersey.

Century is building two Brooklyn and one Long Island theatres in a move to protect surrounding properties in these areas.

COMPANIES' FINANCIAL PROSPECTS PAINTED BRIGHT BY WALL STREET

Fall Earnings Expected To Be Best in Years Because of Good Pictures and Freer Spending by General Public

Wall Street this week rated the motion picture's earning prospects for the fall as the best in years, due to a series of good pictures and the fact that the public is again spending money. Financial attention in the industry was directed at the same time to a study of the Fox Film financial condition, as reported in an annual statement, and to the disclosure by the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington of important salary and contract information of Fox Film which the corporation had sought to keep secret.

Also, a minority stockholders' suit against Fox for an appraisal of the stock was dismissed; Miles Detroit Theatre Company, Detroit, listed its stock holdings with the Securities Commission; Arthur Loew's stock acquisitions were reported by the Commission, the while Metropolitan Playhouses in New York reported losses of $45,283.

Wall Street's highly optimistic opinion of the motion picture's future was reported by the Wall Street Journal, which said:

"Earnings of the moving picture companies have been running unusually well this Summer in spite of the fact that some of the leading producers have been holding back their principal releases and others have been slow in getting out product.

"The new season's films are now just beginning to come into the key city theatres and based on apparent public response, the big amusement companies should have by far the best earnings this Fall that they have had in years. The public is spending money freely again and the industry has pretty well worked out of its financial worries and now has ample product to bring to the box office. Experience has shown that the prosperity of the film theatre, like that of the stage, depends on the show that is given, and the program of films for this Fall offers an unusual number of probable successes.

Loew's Inventory

"Loew's is leading the industry, having maintained its finances and its personnel intact through the bad years. Loew's this year has the largest film inventory in its history $32,000,000 against $22,000,000 in 1929. Its list is composed almost entirely of high cost feature pictures of quality and the success of this policy is demonstrated by the unusual box office records being made by its current films. Earlier this year earnings lagged a bit due to the sudden jump in amortization occasioned by the simultaneous release of half a dozen major films. Now that these films are in general release profits are starting to mount.

"Loew's current releases," the Journal continues, "include 'Mutiny on the Bounty,' 'China Seas,' the Marx Brothers in 'Night at The Opera,' and 'Tale of Two Cities.' More recently 'Suzy,' the 'Great Ziegfeld' and 'San Francisco' have been outstanding films. The latter film in some cities has been exceeding 'Mutiny' in box office returns.

"Loew's list for the coming season includes a number of films costing $1,000,000 up to $2,000,000 each, the most expensive list ever offered by a producer. Among the leaders will be 'Romeo & Juliet,' 'The Good Earth,' 'Prisoner of Zenda,' 'Maytime,' and films starring the Marx Brothers and Greta Garbo. If Loew's policy of making costly films continues to be successful, earnings of the company next Fall should be the best since 1929.

"For the 40 weeks ended June 4, last, Loew's (including subsidiaries) in its most recent report of earnings, showed net profit of $7,390,495 after depreciation, federal income taxes, subsidiary preferred dividends, etc. This was equivalent after dividend requirements on Loew's $6.50 preferred stock to $4.47 a share on approximately 1,500,400 average number of no par common shares outstanding during the period. This compares with $5,840,351, or $3.50 a share on 1,473,300 average common shares outstanding during the 40 weeks period ended June 6, 1935. For the 12 weeks ended June 4, indicated net profit was $2,357,457 and balance $1.43 a share on 1,504,095 common shares against $1,495,014, or 86 cents a share on 1,490,095 common shares in the 12 weeks ended June 6, 1935.

Twentieth Century - Fox

"Twentieth Century-Fox is running second to Loew's in the number of its apparent successes," the article said. "Earnings for the first six months ended June 27 were $2,769,190, equal after preferred dividends to $1.43 a share on 1,228,039 shares of common against $1,355,781 earned by the Fox Film Co. in the 1935 period, before the merger with Twentieth Century. Current successes include 'Under Two Flags,' 'The Country Doctor' showing the Dionnes, and the usual profitable Shirley Temple films.

Warner Profits Delayed

"Warner Brothers having started well this fiscal year will show a material decline in earnings during the second and third periods of its fiscal year ending August 31, mainly because its two main features will not come into general release until Fall. 'Green Pastures' has just started showing in New York and 'Anthony Adverse,' one of the most ambitious films Warner has made, had its first showing on the coast recently. These films should bring a sharp upturn in Warner's Fall profits.

"For the 26 weeks ended February 29, 1936, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., including subsidiaries, showed net profit of $1,976,245 after depreciation, amortization of film costs, interest, federal taxes and minority interests. After allowing for dividend requirements during the period on the $3.85 preferred stock on which there were unpaid dividends, there was a balance for the period equivalent to 48 cents a share on 3,701,091 shares of $5 par common, excluding 100,253 shares held in treasury. The company's net profit contrasted with a net loss of $133,515 for the 26 weeks ended February 23, 1935.

Columbia Pictures

"Columbia Pictures has two successes, Grace Moore in the 'King Steps Out,' and Gary Cooper in 'Mr. Deeds Goes to Town,' and is now awaiting the release of Capra's 'Lost Horizon,' which cost over $1,250,000.

"The latest report of Columbia Pictures Corp., including subsidiaries, covers the nine months ended March 28, last. Net profit was $958,579 after federal taxes, depreciation, etc. This was equivalent after preference dividends to $3.12 a share on 280,413 shares of common. It compares with $1,572,720 net profit, or $8.62 a share on 177,933 common shares for the nine months ended March 30, 1935.

Paramount Pictures

"Paramount, still in process of recovering from its management difficulties, is beginning to get its new product out on the market. Its latest, 'Rhythm on the Range,' has been well reviewed, and its new star, Francis Lederer, is appearing in 'My American Wife.' Cecil B. DeMille is now making 'The Plainsman.' Paramount's earnings may be slow in recovering this year, but its position will be helped by the successful production of other companies which will increase the revenue of its chain of 1,000 theatres.

"The report of Paramount Pictures, Inc., for the quarter ended June 30, 1936, showed a tentative estimated consolidated loss of $476,000 after provision for normal income tax, and after applying $800,000 of the inventory reserve set up as of December 31, 1935, interest, foreign exchange adjustments, reserve provided for undistributed earnings tax, foreign investments and other contingencies. In the preceding quarter company reported a profit of $718,922 after federal taxes and after applying $800,000 of the $2,500,000 inventory reserve set up last year. Thus, indicated profit for the six months ended June 30, as compiled from the first and second quarterly statements, was $242,922.

"For the first three months of 1935 the Paramount company, then newly reorganized, showed in its quarterly statement estimated net profit of $1,472,000. This was after allowance of $400,000 for interest on the new debentures for the period and after deducting federal taxes and certain non-recurring charges, notably bank interest and a $440,000 foreign exchange adjustment. For the second quarter estimated earnings were $796,000, including foreign exchange adjustment and after federal taxes, interest and reserve for losses of Paramount Broadway Corp. and of certain other companies,

U. S. ADMISSION TAX PAYMENTS UP A TENTH

A gain of more than ten per cent in admission taxes collected in the fiscal year ended June 30, last, as compared with the preceding year, is reported by the Internal Revenue Bureau. Collections during the twelve months ended with June reached a total of $17,112,175 compared with $15,379,397 during the year ended June 30, 1935.

Collections in June, bureau records show, were the largest of any month in 1936, totaling $1,532,189 against $1,318,765 in May and $1,211,288 in June, 1935. The previous highest collection in 1936 was $1,459,694, in January, from which point receipts dropped to $1,404,836 in February and in March to the half-years' low of $1,255,393, beginning to climb, with collections in April jumping to $1,266,425.

RKO Production Running Smoothly

"Radio-Keith-Orpheum, still in receivership, will probably have its reorganization plan ready by early Fall and in the meanwhile studios are running smoothly and earnings improving. Its latest big film, Hepburn in 'Mary of Scotland,' is doing well.

"The most recent report of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, in receivership, showed for the company and subsidiaries for the 26 weeks ended June 27, 1936, profit of $734,492 after interest, depreciation, income and excess profits taxes and minority interest, but before dividends on preferred stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corp. No figures were issued for the comparable period the year before.

Foreign Developments

"The foreign situation is causing some concern to American motion picture producers, particularly in England, since upwards of 30% of film income comes from abroad. The British are endeavoring to push their own producers at the expense of American films. The new arrangements between Loew's, Twentieth Century and British Gaumont are designed to improve the position of these American companies abroad. It is hoped that demand for amusement in Britain will be sufficient to offer a market for both domestic and American producers.

"One factor which may be of considerable benefit to producers is the policy of reviving old successes. Many of the older films which have been entirely written off the books are being reshown with profit to the exhibitor, and may be a minor but unexpected source of revenue to the film companies."

Warner Refunding Discussed

Preliminary discussions on the refunding of the $31,924,000 of 6 per cent debentures of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., are underway, were heard in Wall Street by the Evening Journal, which said:

"Early plans for the financing call for issuance of a 4½ per cent issue, with a convertible feature, to be offered in exchange for the present 6 per cent obligation. Brown Harriman & Co., Inc., it is expected, will underwrite the new issue.

"If effected, the refunding would save the motion picture company $478,860 in interest charges annually.

Report this week of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and wholly owned subsidiaries, for 26 weeks ended June 27, 1936, shows net profit of $2,769,190 after amortization of production costs, participation in film rentals, interest and amortization, depreciation of fixed assets (not including depreciation of studio building and equipment absorbed in production costs), and provision for federal income taxes. No provision has been made for surtax on undistributed profits. This net profit is equivalent, after allowing for 26 weeks' dividend requirements on 1,357,833 shares of $1.50 cumulative convertible preferred stock, to $1.43 a share on 1,228,039 no-par shares of common stock.

Twentieth Century-Fox has 42% stock interest in the National Theatres Corp. As no dividends were declared during the period, no income was included in the above figures from that source.

For the 26 weeks ended June 29, 1935, Fox Film Corporation and wholly-owned subsidiaries reported net profit of $1,355,781 after charges and taxes, equal to 55 cents a share on combined 2,436,409 no-par shares of Class A and Class B stocks then outstanding.

SPECTROGRAPHIC FILM MAKES ACTOR OF ATOM

Spectrographic motion pictures, or "atomic movies" marking the entry of motion pictures into a new field of great value to industry, were announced recently at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology conference on spectroscopy.

The spectroscope is the instrument that tells astronomers many of the secrets of the stars. It photographs light which has passed through a slit and prism to form a rainbow. These "still" pictures show what kind of atoms give the light and their condition at the moment of taking the picture.

The new motion pictures give a continuous record. They are used, not for stars, but for analyzing industrial samples burning in a carbon arc flame or in an electric spark.

The motion pictures are made by use of an electric motor which moves photographic film, at an even rate, past the slit admitting the light from the burning sample. The old "still" pictures produced short spectrum lines, each one identifying some kind or state of atoms.

For the 13 weeks ended June 27, 1936, net profit of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and wholly-owned subsidiaries was $1,529,430 after above deductions, equal to 83 cents a share on common comparing with $1,239,760 or 59 cents a share on common for the preceding 13 weeks period ended March 28, last. For the 13 weeks ended June 29, 1935, Fox Film Corporation and wholly-owned subsidiaries reported net profit of $738,974, equal to 30 cents a share on combined Class A and Class B shares.

Consolidated income account for 26 weeks ended June 27, 1936, compares as follows:

SEC Lists Salaries

The salaries paid their executives, terms of management contracts and financial statements of more large corporations were thrown open to public inspection by the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington this week as orders were handed down denying further confidential treatment of information supplied by fourteen concerns.

Most handsome of the annual compensations shown were in the lists of the Fox Film Corporation and Celanese Corporation of America, both of which had executives earning more than $100,000 a year.

The three highest salaries paid by Fox Film Corporation to its officers or directors for the 1934 fiscal year were $191,460 to Sidney R. Kent, president; $300,000 to Winfield R. Sheehan as vice president in charge of all productions at its Hollywood studios, and $36,618.75 to W. C. Michel as executive vice president. Sidney Towell received $21,890 as treasurer and $200,000 was paid to Hughes, Schurman & Dwight as general counsel, while Alfred Wright received $20,800 as counsel.

Contract With Lasky

Under the terms of a contract with Jesse L. Lasky dated Oct 17, 1932, and which expired on the same date in 1935, Mr. Lasky was to produce eight photoplays and a third of all profits therefrom were to be turned over to him after deduction of all production and distribution costs, it was shown. No payments had been made to Mr. Lasky under the profit-sharing arrangement at the time the information was filed with the SEC.

Under a contract with George White to produce eight photoplays, Fox Film Corporation was to advance $50,000 toward production of each play, a half of which would be considered as salary paid the producer and the remainder to be deducted from his percentage of gross film rentals.

Mr. White was to receive as his participating share of the rentals 10 per cent of the first $1,000,000; 15 per cent, receipts between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000, and 20 per cent of all receipts in excess of $1,500,000. This arrangement was to apply to production of the first four films and on the next four he was to receive 10 per cent of all rentals within the first $1,000,000 and 25 per cent of all over that amount.

Sidney Kent was to be paid $2,500 a week plus $200 a week for traveling expenses but the contract with him contained a contingent provision whereby he would get an additional $25,000 a year from the corporation if he were employed by a newly organized theatre company, of which the corporation was a minority stockholder.

Another Pact With Sheehan

Winfield Sheehan was a party to another agreement calling for the payment to him of $5,769 a week during 1934; $7,692 during 1935 and $6,731 in 1936.

Information concerning the management of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation given the SEC in confidence in connection with registration of 4,466,000 shares of its common and preferred stock revealed other large amounts paid Mr. Kent as president of that organization.

Conditioned upon the consummation of a reorganization plan for Twentieth Century Pictures, Mr. Kent was to receive from the registration as compensation $2,500 a week exclusive of a $200 a week allowance to "cover moneys expended in the interests of the business of the corporation, for entertainment, etc."

Beginning in November, 1934, Mr. Kent's contract with Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation was to last for seven years. In addition to the above mentioned weekly compensation he was to receive $50,000 on Dec. 31 of each year and it was provided that $75,000 was to be paid him on Nov. 1, 1935.

The registrant corporation also was to pay

Mr. Kent the difference between $25,000 a year and whatever he received from National Theatres Corporation, of which he also was to be president. He also was to be given options entitling him to purchase 10,000 shares of common stock of the registrant each year until 60,000 shares had been acquired. He was to pay for stock the average price prevailing on the New York Stock Exchange for new stock of the organization during a ninety-day period after its listing, but not less than $10 a share.

Other Salary Agreements

Other salary agreements for payment of $5,000 a week to Darryl F. Zanuck, producer, and $2,500 a week to Joseph M. Schenck, in charge of production, were shown, as well as reasonable traveling expenses.

On motion of attorneys for Twentieth Century-Fox, New York Supreme Court Justice Levy, this week dismissed an action brought several months ago by Munson G. Doremus and several other stockholders of old Fox Film Corporation for an appraisal of their stock.

No opposition to the dismissal was made on the part of the stockholders. Mr. Doremus and the other holders of stock had applied to the court for the appointment of three appraisers at the time of the reorganization of the firm. The stock in the organization having increased in price, the stockholders finally decided to drop the entire matter.

Miles Detroit Statement

Miles Detroit Theatre Company of Detroit has filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission a registration statement covering 35,000 shares of no par value common stock. The statement was filed July 24.

The stock is to be offered to stockholders of the company at $4 a share for a period of 30 days from August 15 on the basis of one share for each share now held. All shares not subscribed for by the end of that period will be offered generally to the stockholders for an additional period of 15 days, but the company, it was stated, does not at present contemplate a public offering.

The proceeds from the sale of the stock will be applied to the payment of delinquent real estate taxes and to the reduction of current taxes.

Stanley G. Miner of Detroit is president of the company.

Arthur Loew's Shares

Acquisition by Arthur M. Loew's holding company in June of 353 shares of Loew's common stock, bringing its holdings at the close of the month to 3,883 shares, was reported this week by the Securities and Exchange Commission in its semi-monthly summary of stock transactions by officers and directors of corporations.

The commission also announced the filing of a report for August, 1935, by Sidney R. Kent, showing acquisition by his Berkshire Finance Corp. of 2,942 shares of Twentieth Century-Fox common, disposition of 11,769 shares of Fox A common and acquisition of 5,885 shares of $1.50 cumulative preferred. The Twentieth Century-Fox common and preferred were secured in exchange for the Fox stock.

Metropolitan Playhouses Loss

The net operating loss for Metropolitan Playhouses and wholly owned subsidiaries for the approximate five-month period from Sept. 3, 1935, to Jan. 31, 1936, was $45,282.93, according to the first financial statement issued by the company since it was reorganized last year.

Listed among current assets is $153,292.24 cash on hand in the banks and $171,334.63 on deposit with the sinking fund trustee for payment of interest due Feb. 1, 1936, on five per cent debentures, including $5,605 applicable to debentures in the treasury. Other items in this category bring the current assets figure to $448,853.67.

RCA Report

Radio Corporation of America reports a net income of $477,088.35 for the second quarter of this year, a decrease of approximately $194,000 from the corresponding quarter of last year. The net income of $1,763,779.62 for the first six months of this year represents a decrease of approximately $525,300 from the same period of 1935.

The net has been transferred to surplus. Dividends on the seven per cent "A" preferred totaled $862,291.03 for the six months and on the $3.50 cumulative first preferred the total of dividends was $805,241.85. The surplus on June 30 was $12,346.20.

Otterson Pact Is Settled By Paramount Board

The board of directors of Paramount Pictures, Inc., at a meeting late last week, effected an "amicable and satisfactory" settlement with John E. Otterson over his contract as president of the company.

The statement issued following the regular board meeting included no details and gave no hint of the amount involved in the settlement, which has been the subject of considerable speculation since Mr. Otterson left the presidency. It was generally anticipated that he had intended bringing suit against the company for the unexpired portion of the contract if a settlement was not reached.

Broadway reports said that the settlement was for $200,000, with Mr. Otterson's attorneys, Schwartz and Froelich, reputedly getting $30,000 as their fee, from him.

Mr. Otterson, when informed of the board's acceptance of the terms of settlement shortly after the meeting adjourned, declared he knew the board was considering the matter but had not known of its decision at the time.

Mr. Otterson at one time had seriously discussed with Paramount the possibility of undertaking foreign production for the company, probably in England, where, it is understood, he has long had a desire to live. Whether the fact that he sails within two weeks may have a bearing on a production venture, but on his own, was a matter of speculation along Broadway this week.

The board of directors also authorized the merger of the wholly owned subsidiary, Paramount Productions, Inc., with the parent company, which means the elimination of the corporate name, Paramount Productions. Henry Herzbrun was elected a vice-president of Paramount Pictures, Inc., and Frank Meyer and Jacob H. Karp, assistant secretaries.

Interstate Losses in GTE Are Shown In Investigation

Interstate Equities, during its period of sponsorship by Bancamerica-Blair, lost $467,890 in General Theatres Equipment and profited by $97,000 in stock transactions in Fox Film Corporation, it was revealed by Charles G. Wiggins, who was vice-president of Interstate, in testimony given during the Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of investment trusts and trust companies in Washington this week.

E. R. Tinker, who was president of Fox for a brief time, and who is now president of Interstate, personally lost $280,000 in the underwriting of General Theatres Equipment stock in 1930, it was also revealed at the investigation. Mr. Tinker succeeded Harley L. Clarke as president of Fox in the period that followed the exit of William Fox from the company.

Meanwhile, it was revealed in Kansas City that six GTE bondholders will file suit against the Chase National Bank, National Theatres, Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain theatre companies, and others, within the next month. The circuit court of appeals in St. Paul on July 9 turned down the bondholders in their appeal from the ruling of Judge Albert L. Reeves in federal district court at Kansas City, that his, the bankruptcy, court in the matter of Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain, was not the court in which their charges should be heard.

The nature of the new suit to be filed, probably in federal court, has not been divulged by C. A. Randolph, R. R. Brewster and others, attorneys for the bondholders.

The bondholders are Jacob Smith, Lee Hamlin, William Snower, Ray D. Jones, Anna Kupper and Katherine K. Mosher. They charge the Chase National Bank with fraud in its acquisition of controlling interest in Fox Film, and in its acquisition of the assets of the two middle western theatre companies in bankruptcy sale through its subsidiary, National Theatres. The bondholders also sought to impose a lien on those assets in favor of themselves and other GTE bondholders.

In Albany, N. Y., General Theatres Equipment Corporation, the new company formed following the reorganization and chartered under Delaware laws, has filed a certificate of statement and designation to enable it to do business in New York. The capital is listed at 800,000 shares of no par value stock.

EXHIBITOR UNIT PROTESTS REPORTED WARNER PLAN TO ENTER 16mm. FIELD

Many Theatre Organizations Consider United Action to Fight Possible Competition From the Narrow-Width Film

The growing importance of the 16mm. field has been emphasized by the report that Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., is planning to follow several other producers in the serving of non-theatrical accounts, and by the fact that exhibitor organizations are considering united action to fight possible competition from the narrow-width films.

Executives of Warner are understood to have begun preliminary negotiations with manufacturers of 16 mm. sound equipment as the first step in the new undertaking, and reports of the move brought a letter of protest addressed to Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, from Harry Vinnicoff, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California.

The protest was the result of a series of meetings held in the last two months by directors of the exhibitor group, who contended that the release of 16 mm. films for use in homes and schools will hinder the industry through "amateurish" projection. Mr. Vinnicoff's letter declared that the ITO, together with every other exhibitor organization in the country, will be obliged, in their own interests, to combat the use of the narrow films.

The letter said in part: "Every ethical foundation that the producers in this country have built to make good pictures and distribute them to exhibitors throughout the United States cannot help but be broken down by such a policy on your part. We do not wish to insult your intelligence by outlining many other reasons why your action is detrimental to the industry, so suffice it to say that we urge you not to establish such a policy."

For Theatre-less Towns

Warner executives at the home office declared that the plans are not at all definite and no decision has been made on the subject. Reports were that the aim is to provide theatre-less towns, as well as communities where there are no houses having sound projection equipment, with motion pictures through the medium of 16mm. programs. Distribution of the product to individuals having home projectors, and to schools and clubs might be another feature of the plan, it was said.

Warner and other large companies have been distributing some product on 35mm film to non-theatrical accounts, but this is the first indication that the company might consider making its extensive film library available for the 16mm. field at large.

Interest in the narrow width films has been stimulated by progress made by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in the effort to attain adoption of uniform international standards for the product.

The SMPE formulated and adopted a number of dimensional standards relating to 16mm. sound-film and equipment which were accepted in the United States without dissent and at first seemed scheduled for adoption also by European countries. When the Deutscher Industrie Normen, German standards relating to the narrow width film, were published, they appeared to be practically identical with the SMPE specifications. Several months later, however, at an exposition in Paris in which American and European equipment was shown it was disclosed that German 16 mm. sound projectors were designed to accommodate film having the sound track on the edge opposite that prescribed by the SMPE.

Investigation revealed the fact that when transcribing the American drawing the Hermans inadvertently had constructed mirror images of the drawings so that the position of the sound track had become transposed. During the several months that had elapsed, commercial investments employing the one standard in Europe and the other in America, had increased considerably and proponents of the two systems were reluctant to change. In England and France both systems were in use.

Submitted to Referendum

The International Standards Association was asked to arbitrate the differences and after months of negotiations it was agreed that the question should be submitted by referendum to the 19 national standardizing bodies comprising the association. Holland was the first country to notify the association that it had adopted the American standard and Great Britain followed shortly, after conferences had been held by members of the standards bodies of several of the Dominions.

At present the United States, Holland, Great Britain and Denmark follow the SMPE standards and Germany, Hungary, Switzerland and Russia, the German specifications. Preference is divided in Austria and France, while Czechoslovakia, Sweden, Italy and Poland are undecided.

Regarded as important by the SMPE is the fact that the English-speaking countries of the world, including the United States, England, Canada, and Australia, are in agreement on the matter. In some of the countries listed as uncertain, development of the 16 mm. field hardly has begun, so that it will be an easy matter for them to adopt whichever set of standards proves acceptable to the world.

Vast possibilities for the narrow width film have been suggested by Edwin Carewe, veteran director-producer, who is reported to have started a series of films which will be printed on 16 mm. stock, to meet the demand for films which would receive support of churches, schools, civic and fraternal organizations, women's clubs, parent-teacher associations and similar groups.

Sees 147,000 Outlets

Mr. Carewe is reported, in the July issue of the Camera Digest, published by Local 666 of the International Photographers, to have made a survey which revealed that there are 147,000 possible outlets for such product in schools and churches. The producer has formed the Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation and is to produce 10 units each year, consisting of a feature picture and coordinated short subjects. All scripts and casts are to be approved by a board of nine churchmen and educators before production starts. Completed pictures will be submitted to the same board before they are released. The first feature, completed recently, is titled "Are We Civilized?"

Complications Seen

The International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees and, in one case at least, a state licensing board, have recognized future complications in the expansion of the field. The IATSE is reported to be considering a campaign of unionization which will be aimed at large industrial firms producing advertising and sales shorts on the narrow film, with neither union cameramen nor projectionists employed on these projects. The business of making these industrial subjects, which are shown at trade exhibitions and salesmen's conventions, has developed to such an extent in the last year that it has become a major branch of the industry, according to cameramen.

An opinion handed down recently by the Attorney General of Maryland prohibits teachers and other instructors in the state from acting as their own operators in showing motion pictures in schools and school auditoriums unless they pass the necessary examinations and are licensed. They will not be required to pay any fee, however.

TRAVEL AND HEALTH FILMS HOLD LEAD

Travel and health films are most popular among educational motion pictures, Alfred L. Frederick, director of distribution for the motion picture bureau of the YMCA, said this week in a report showing that the bureau distributes more than 100,000 films yearly to churches, clubs, schools and other groups.

Films dealing with basic industries are second in popularity, and those dealing with "home and home-making" are next. Mr. Frederick added that there has been a striking change in taste shown by school children who now demand informative films where once they insisted on films including stories.

EXHIBITORS LOOKING TOWARD PRICE RAISE

Cleveland Association Invites First-Run Circuit Leaders to Join Discussion on Increase

Motion picture theatre owners are beginning to talk about the advisability of increasing their admission prices. A survey on admissions in last week's HERALD indicated that federal taxes, aided in most situations by local taxes, were preventing the raising of scales throughout the country.

It was revealed last week that besides the federal impost which is levied in every state, there are 13 states that impose sales taxes which include admissions, five with taxes on gross receipts of theatres and four states with straight admission taxes. In addition, many special sessions of the legislatures are expected this fall to levy other assessments against theatres for "welfare" and relief measures.

It was further pointed out in the survey that theatre operators and exhibitor leaders expressed a common conviction that admission prices should be definitely increased, but that the problem of taxation intervened to make such a step inadvisable.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association called a special meeting this week for the purpose of discussing the possibility of a general rise in local admission prices. Local representatives of major first-run circuits have been invited to the meeting.

Asked concerning the attitude toward a raise in admission prices at first-run theatres in Cleveland at this time, Colonel Harry E. Long, Loew's division manager, said that while final price determination rests with New York, it would seem inevitable that if the subsequent-runs raise prices, it will become necessary for first-runs to do likewise in order to maintain the proper balance of protection.

The first-run theatres, Colonel Long pointed out, have a problem that does not confront the subsequent-run theatres. This is taxation. Subsequent-run theatres are affected only by the state tax of three per cent on gross receipts. First-runs have to pay not only the state tax but also the 10 per cent federal tax, which starts at 41 cents. Top price at the straight motion picture houses in Cleveland is 42 cents, which subjects the house to the federal tax. In order to net the theatres any material increase, Colonel Long said, it would be necessary to raise the price to 55 cents, at the straight film houses, and probably to 75 cents at the RKO Palace, now charging 60 cents for combination pictures and vaudeville.

Meanwhile, in New York, disclaiming any knowledge of an Independent Theatre Owners' Association—Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce proposal to have the major companies join in a move to raise prices this fall, Charles C. Moskowitz of Loew's and Nate Blumberg of RKO both said that the question of price increases by their circuits would depend on fall business conditions, product, competition and other factors, and that as they could not predict now what the conditions would be, they did not know whether prices would be advanced.

The old Arch Street Theatre in Philadelphia, linked with many names great on the American stage, is being torn down to make room for an automobile parking space. The house opened on Oct. 1, 1828, and Philadelphia historians call it the second oldest theatre in the United States, giving first place to the Walnut, also in Philadelphia.

Beginning in 1862, the theatre was under the command of Mrs. John Drew, mother of the famed actor, for 30 years. Such stars as William Wheatley, Edwin Booth, Edwin Forrest, John Sleeper Clarke and others played stellar roles there and Ethel, Lionel and John Barrymore, grandchildren of Mrs. Drew, began their careers on its stage. Since 1892 the house has been devoted at various times to vaudeville, musical comedy, stock companies, melodrama thrillers and burlesque.

Spectrum Starts New Series

George Callaghan and Jed Buell, producers for Spectrum Pictures, have announced the beginning of production work at the Talisman Studios on "Romance Rides the Range," first of the new series of musical westerns featuring Fred Scott, the cowboy opera star. Marion Chilling has been signed to play opposite Scott in the productions.

Tim McCoy Will Star In Series of Eight

Tim McCoy, screen and circus star, will be featured in a series of four outdoor and four G-man dramas, to be produced by Imperial Pictures.

Centennial Song Bought

The official Texas Centennial song, "Ride, Ranger, Ride," has been purchasd by Republic Pictures to be used in a musical western production of the same title.

Progress Reported In Taxation Fight By Indian Society

Progress in all activities but particularly in increased membership and in efforts to reduce import duties on raw film and apparatus and other taxation problems was reported at the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Society of India held in Bombay.

During the year 1935-36 membership of the society increased from 95 to 125, Rai Saheb Chunilal, presiding officer, reported. The Honorable Sir Phiroze Sethna was unanimously elected president and H. G. Jagirdar, manager of Select Talkie Distributors, vice-president.

The annual report published at the meeting notes that when the provisions of the Ottawa Pact were being drawn up, the society succeeded in staving off the imposition of an extra five per cent duty on raw films. At present the industry is paying 15 and 25 per cent, which is, in effect, a saving of 10 per cent on films imported from the United Kingdom and five per cent on stock imported from other countries. The economy is estimated to total Rs. 75,000 yearly.

Among benefits obtained for the exhibitor branch of the industry through the society were listed:

The reduction of the 20 per cent tariff on projectors to 10 per cent ad valorem; an increase from five to 15 per cent in the amount allowed for depreciation in the annual balance sheets of producing concerns; permission for film shipments to be carried on mail trains, allowing five more bookings a year for each film; effective opposition which has delayed adoption of a proposed import tax of Rs. 10 per box of film on shipments entering Nagpur Municipality, and a similar delay on a Cinema Posters Bill in Bengal.

In addition a concession from the State Railways, obtained through the society, allows producing units numbering 20 or more persons to travel at half rate in any of the classes available.

The society is carrying on an intensive drive for increased use of educational films and a fund has been appropriated out of which suitable films in this class are to be purchased and exhibited.

An appendix to the report notes that there are at present 110 producing companies, 99 distributing companies and 670 motion picture theatres in British India. Capital invested in the three branches, production, distribution and exhibition is estimated to total more than Rupees 50,000,000, and about 25,000 persons are directly engaged in the industry.

Native films passed by the Bombay, Bengal, Madras and Punjab boards of censors during 1935 included 297 features and 92 shorts. American films totaled 311 features and 828 shorts and English pictures, 89 features and 575 shorts.

A total of 60,669,534 feet of raw fillm, valued at Rs. 2,102,262, was imported into British India in the same period. Importation of exposed film totalled 8,537,589 feet, valued at Rs. 2,411,048.

DISTRIBUTORS WIN IN INDEPENDENTS' ANTI-TRUST SUIT AGAINST MAJORS

Prior Runs and Admission Prices Argued in Rolsky-Midwest Theatres Case; Kuykendall Says 4 Proposals Will Be Accepted

Fair trade practices, that highly debatable subject concerning the relations between independent exhibitors and the major interests, was the center of controversy this week in the federal courts, in the prosecuting machinery of the United States Government and within the industry itself.

Federal Judge Merrill E. Otis at Kansas City, in the case of Rolsky vs. Fox Midwest and major distributors, found that conspiracy had not been shown.

New-found hope for the enactment of the MPTOA program of fair trade practices was seen by Edward L. Kuykendall, sponsor of the plan, who predicted adoption of four of the ten proposals.

The Department of Justice proceeded with its investigation of trade practice conditions in the field. The survey is expected to stand distributors and circuits close to $1,000,000 as the cost of gathering the information.

The MPPDA evidently intends to deal directly with complainants in trade practice matters, in a move to eliminate their handling by the Justice Department.

The program of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for "fair trade practices" had been considered dormant until Edward L. Kuykendall, MPTOA president, addressing the convention of the Southeastern Theatre Owners at Jacksonville on Monday, declared that at least four of the ten proposals are expected by his organization to be effected "before one more selling year is ended." In any event, it now appears that they will not be recognized this season, that is, in their application to this season's contracts. Mr. Kuykendall's optimism alluded to the proposals for a reasonable and workable elimination privilege and the elimination of score charges, designated play dates and the forcing of short subjects with features.

An Expensive Survey

Expenditure by distributors of up to $1,000,000 to comply with the Department of Justice's request for field information on trade practices and conditions was estimated necessary by a major sales executive in New York, who said that it probably will take about six months to get the data asked for by the department in its five-page questionnaire. The department's procedure was taken following complaints from independents against distributors on different trade practice "improprieties."

Among the questions being asked by the Justice Department in its questionnaire to determine the exact nature of conditions are the listing of specific theatre properties, type of run, seating capacity, partnership arrangements, cost of buildings, product deals pending and arranged for, length of product franchises, and the like.

In an effort to make unnecessary further investigation by the Department of Justice into complaints regarding alleged monopolistic practices of major distributors and circuits, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America has adopted its own checking plan.

Some of the major companies are considering the advisability of not answering the questionnaire, however, and it has been learned that several meetings of attorneys representing the companies have been held at the New York offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

Because of the wide scope of the questionnaire, an attorney for one of the companies said, it is possible that if all the material were given the Department of Justice the government might use the material for anti-trust suits.

Exhibitor Loses Case

Basing his decision on his own question—"Did the defendants conspire?"—Judge Otis found that conspiracy had not been shown in the case of E. Rolsky vs. Fox Midwest and major distributors. While there was great force, the judge said, in the plaintiff's argument that 1935-36 contracts between distributors and the Fox circuit embodied concerted action, yet the defendants had satisfactorily explained how the contracts were entered into, because the contract was more advantageous financially to each distributor and is one commonly entered into elsewhere in the United States. He held that the distributor has a right to sell exclusive rights to a picture in a territory.

Attorney W. G. Boatright said the plaintiffs would appeal.

Elmer Rhoden of Fox Midwest, testifying on Monday, was asked by W. G. Boatright for the plaintiffs:

"Unless there was concerted action by distributors, no one exhibitor would get all the prior runs in one zone?"

"Regardless of conditions, if I bought the same run from several distributors, there would be a similarity in contracts without concerted action on the part of distributors," Mr. Rhoden replied. Rhoden was president of the Film Board of Trade for four years, and from this experience he knew that "distributors always are suspicious of each other."

Mr. Rhoden testified he bought runs in 1935-36 identical with those he purchased in 1934-35 with the exception of five theatres, three of which took poorer runs, and two better.

He refused to buy day and date, and he did insist on a clear run, Mr. Rhoden testified, but he did not tell distributors he wouldn't buy for the other theatres in the group of 97 which he controls (in Iowa, Nebraska, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas), if they didn't sell him prior runs in Kansas City. Nor did he, he testified, ever instruct distributors not to sell the Castle, colored house opened in Kansas City, this spring.

"It has been my experience over a number of years that I could gross more if I didn't play simultaneously with a number of competitive theatres," he went on.

Prior run selling increases competitive bidding among the theatres in buying pictures, Mr. Rhoden testified.

"I don't think it fair," he said, "to sell a theatre a picture for $20 and then sell another theatre across the street the same picture for $10 and expect the two to play concurrently."

"You're still opposed to day and date booking?" Boatright asked.

"Yes."

"How does it come, then, that "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" played the Fox Vista and the independent Belmont on August 2?"

"I don't know."

Mr. Boatright mentioned giveaways at Fox houses the past year: furniture, ice boxes, furs, besides bank night. Mr. Rhoden said his theatres are giving away less than independent exhibitors, and that all admissions at Fox theatres are fixed. Fox has only one house using bank night.

Mr. Rhoden testified that Fox city theatres had lost more than $500,000 in the time prior to 1935 when he was managing them.

"Have you stopped some of your losses?"

"Yes."

"You know of no plan of selling pictures to avoid both priority of run between equally priced houses and day and date releasing?" Boatright asked. "What is to prevent Twentieth Century-Fox, say, from selling 10 pictures for first-run showing to the Rockhill in its zone, the next 10 to another exhibitor for first-run in the zone, and so on""

"Confusion. I wouldn't know what I was paying."

Mr. Rhoden offered to renegotiate all contracts November 4, with the exception of Paramount and Metro, whose contracts weren't complete.

"You knew distributors wouldn't renegotiate, though, didn't you?" Boatright questioned.

"No. If I did renegotiate and took a lower numbered run in the zone, I expected the price to be adjusted."

"Just so. So you knew they wouldn't want to renegotiate?"

"No, sir!" Mr. Rhoden asserted.

Cites Variable Admissions

"Variable admission prices and day and date booking in Kansas City from 1932 on left no way of determining what we or any one else was buying," testified Mr. Rhoden, who is president and general manager of Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc.

Mr. Rhoden, placed on the stand by Sam Sawyer, attorney for Fox Midwest, explained that if he bought a 20-cent run in a zone, he didn't know how many theatres would play with him, though he knew the number of 20-cent houses when he bought.

"If I didn't attempt to buy specific runs, I might find myself playing with all the theatres in the competitive area because they could change their admission price, drop back whatever the clearance was, and play with everyone else. On the next picture they might return to the higher admission. In the case of 'The Great Ziegfeld,' for instance, which will be sold to play at a minimum admission of 25 cents, it is possible that every subsequent run theatre in Kansas City would show the picture at the same time, in which case there is no possible way to compute its value."

Eleven 15-cent houses played "Mutiny on the Bounty" at one time, he pointed out.

Distributors called to the stand by defense attorneys continued to testify that admission prices didn't enter into sale of runs prior to 1928; that they offered Rolsky and other independents first-runs in their admission price classification, and that they had no discussions of the Fox deal with other distributors. They testified Mr. Rhoden had told them his city houses had been losing a lot of money and that something would have to be done about it, especially in getting away from day and date releasing.

Exchange managers testified that independents declined to buy first-runs because the price was too high, or because they had agreed not to buy them and were considering the present litigation.

"Would you consider it fair if all distributors sold the Newman, Midland and Mainstreet, and did not sell the Uptown," Mr. Boatright asked R. C. LiBeau, Paramount district manager. LiBeau replied that it was the right of producers to sell their product as they see fit.

Exchange Manager Testifies

Frank Hensler, MGM exchange manager explained that two or three years ago Metro was worried about its investment in the Midland, its own first-run, and inaugurated an exclusive policy.

Mr. Hensler denied he didn't attempt to sell local exhibitors until Fox's deal was completed.

"You offered Rolsky the first 15-cent run in his area for $10 more per picture than you sold Fox," Mr. Boatright asserted. "You wouldn't sell an independent the same run for the same price as Rhoden pays?"

"I disagree," Mr. Hensler said. "Independents generally buy later than in August."

Joe Manfre, exchange manager for Paramount, also was on the stand.

Holder of Majority Stock

Testimony revealed that Mr. Rhoden owns approximately one-third of the stock of Commonwealth Amusement Corporation. Other stockholders are Clarence A. Schultz, executive vice-president, an attempted intervenor in the present suit; Robert Withers, branch manager for Republic-Midwest; Harry A. McClure, district manager for Fox Midwest, and L. J. McCarthy, assistant to Mr. Rhoden.

Mr. Rhoden also testified he owns the Fox Waldo building, and he said that he extended the protection for the Waldo against any new theatres from 15 to 20 blocks in last fall's contracts because he had heard there were two new houses going to be built close by and he had to have specific protection.

W. E. Kemp, for the distributors, wanted to amend their answer to include a charge that on information and belief plaintiffs have formed a conspiracy and are now conspiring, and that they do not therefore come into court with clean hands. The court denied the request.

A letter written by E. Rolsky, president of ITO, to all members in July of this year, making a plea for dues and support, was introduced in evidence by the defense. The letter closed, "it is my wish to see a fighting, snarling ITOA."

William Benjamin, branch manager for Universal, on the stand, said he didn't offer independents the same run at the same price as to Rhoden because he had to consider getting the most from the entire city situation and not just individual theatres.

"I don't know to this day how other distributors sold Fox Midwest last fall," testified E. T. Gomersall, Universal's western division manager. "That was a chance I had to run in selling our pictures, a business gamble I had to take."

W. E. Truog, United Artists branch manager, cited figures to show that on UA pictures he sold to Fox for 1935-36 playing, he got much more money in the city than on those he didn't sell Mr. Rhoden and then had to sell to independents.

Day-and-Date Plan Stands

"How did you know no other exhibitor would pay more than Rhoden if you didn't ask any others before you closed your Fox deal?" Mr. Boatright asked W. J. Kupper, Twentieth Century-Fox Western division manager.

Almost as many theatres are playing day and date now as in 1934-35, Ward Scott, district manager for Fox, testified.

Then, Mr. Boatright, concluded, the prior run plan wasn't set up to eliminate day and date booking?

Mr. Rolsky testified that day and date playing had been prevalent all this season.

"Didn't the feasibility of the prior run plan, introduced in 1935, depend on all distributors selling Fox alike?" Mr. Boatright asked distributors. Harry Taylor, Columbia branch manager, admitted that if all distributors sold prior runs exhibitors would be forced to buy that way. He also agreed that it was important to him to know how other distributors were going to sell Fox. He admitted, with other exchange men, that he did know, but from exhibitors and not from any other distributors.

"Why didn't you ask the other distributors?" Judge Merrill E. Otis asked. "Wasn't that the easiest way to find out? Was it fear of the law that prevented you?"

"No," Mr. Taylor said.

William Warner, Warner Brothers manager, wrote Carl Lesserman last fall that it was his, Warner's, understanding that major companies have not approved the Fox-Midwest clearance plan. "You can find that out more easily than I," he wrote.

In his answer to Warner November 19, Mr. Lesserman told Warner to return to Rhoden an attached copy of Rhoden's clearance and zoning proposal and any other copies Warner might have. Lesserman asked Warner to tell Rhoden that "we are not interested in how other distributors have sold him pictures," and that Warner Brothers would give him, Rhoden, the same clearance as in 1934-35.

E. C. Raftery, attorney for distributors, sought to show by 1933 contracts that Young's Central played back of the equally priced Baltis on Fox Film pictures. Mr. Young denied it.

Mr. Young said he would be the first to support any uniform plan fair to all equally priced houses.

"I have a wife and family to support and children to educate," he asserted. "If this plan continues, I cannot stay in business."

Says Exchanges Forced Price Raise

The St. John and National formerly played at 10 cents, back of 15-cent houses, Mr. Rolsky admitted, but he charged that distributors forced him to 15 cents.

"I'd go to 10 cents now if I could play them that way altogether," he said.

Two distributors, Warner Brothers and Twentieth Century-Fox, are committed to the prior run plan this year, selling Fox Midwest on this basis.

Mr. Raftery tried to show by Mr. Potter, plaintiff and treasurer of the ITO, that independents conspired to retain day and date releasing, but the court suggested that the plaintiffs were not on trial.

Distributors testified that prior runs are the best way to sell and to play pictures; the only way they are sold and played elsewhere, and the only way they were sold and played in Kansas City until 1928. They testified that admission prices did not enter into the sale of runs prior to 1928.

Mr. Raftery questioned the accuracy of Mr. Rolsky's gross reports on some 1935 Warner Brothers percentage pictures, some of which the exchange checked, some of which it didn't. Mr. Potter admitted he had had trouble with distributors over percentage pictures. Apparently Mr. Raftery was attempting to show that if plaintiffs' reports on percentage film could not be trusted, neither could their figures on their year's business or elsewhere.

Mr. Rolsky purchased a new home at the time he said in his petition he was losing money, Attorney Sawyer brought out. Mr. Rolsky said he had traded for the home.

Fifty per cent and more of film rentals secured from Kansas City, Mo., come from first-runs, Mr. Hensler and other distributors testified. Some distributors went as high as 70 per cent. Mr. Hensler said that he almost always got more from the 11 Fox subsequent-runs than from all the independent houses, about 30, including the 13 plaintiff theatres.

Day and date booking did not affect Fox Midwest theatres in 1931 because Fox theatres all were charging higher prices than other exhibitors, Mr. Rhoden testified, but in 1932 Kansas City houses began really to feel the depression. Loew's Midland went to an exclusive policy, later abandoning it (in 1933) to lower its admissions to 15 and 25 cents. Independents met to protest and invited Mr. Rhoden to a meeting.

Sought Higher Price

"We agreed to use our combined effort to get a higher price at the Midland. I went to New York to talk to Schiller (E. A.) of Loew's. He showed me the advertising section of the Kansas City Star, wherein 25 subsequent-runs announced their admissions as 10 cents, and said he could do nothing until that situation was remedied."

Along in 1932-33, distributors began permitting exhibitors to drop back out of their regular and announced admission spot and play at a lower price, though their contract called for playing at the higher price. Mr. Rhoden protested, and he protested again when a new clearance schedule, never adopted, was being worked out under the NRA.

Danville Theatre Opened

The formal opening of the Capitol in Danville, Pa., was held recently with M. E. Comerford, Frank C. Walker and Comerford-Publix Corporation as hosts. A testimonial luncheon was given by citizens.

Southeast Owners Elect M. C. Moore

M. C. Moore, manager of the Riverside theatre in Jacksonville, Fla., was elected president of the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association at a business session of the group's convention held in Jacksonville this week. The three-day program included golf, beach sports, two banquets, and business sessions.

Edward Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, guest speaker at the opening session, urged the delegates to become better acquainted with their political representatives to the end that they may prevent the enactment of hostile legislation. He added that at least four of the points embodied in his organization's "10 Point Program" for fair trade practices, will be realized before the end of another selling year. He referred to the elimination of forcing shorts, score charges, designated playdates and the establishment of a reasonable cancellation clause.

Mr. Kuykendall said that the Pettengill bill died in committee because "it had no merit; was unworkable and unreasonable." Mayor John T. Alsop, of Jacksonville, pioneer theatre owner and exhibitor, welcomed the delegates in an address which preceded Mr. Kuykendall's speech.

Officers elected besides Mr. Moore were: Bill Griffin, Alabama, vice-president; Hugh Manning, Tennessee, vice-president; H. C. Wales, Florida, vice-president; Mrs. Willingham Wood, Georgia, secretary, and R. B. Wilby, Georgia, treasurer.

The following were named directors: O. C. Lam, Rome, Ga.; William Karrah, Swainsboro, Ga.; Mrs. Violet Edwards, Commerce, Ga.; Sonny Shepard, Miami; Louis Bach, Atlanta; Col. Arthur Lucas, Atlanta; Fred Weiss, Savannah; Lee Castelberry, Nashville; L. J. Duncan, West Point, Ga.; Bob Oulette, Brooksville, Ala.; Mack Jackson, Alexander City, Ala.; W. S. Barksdale, Fort Payne, Ala.; Warren Pindlar, Nassau; Tom Brandon, Titusville, Fla., and Sam Borisky of Nashville.

Roach Studio Starts Heaviest Schedule

Production has been started on the heaviest schedule in the more than 22 years' history of the Roach Studios. Filming opens on the series of 12 "Our Gang" shorts with Gordon Douglas directing. "Spanky" McFarland will be featured with Darla Hood, "Alfalfa" Switzer, "Buckwheat" Thomas, "Porky" Lee and "Baby Patsy" May.

It marks the 15th year for the "Our Gang" comedies. Their personal appearance tour established the "Gang" more prominently than ever as an American entertainment institution, the studios said.

Republic Signs William Berke

Nat Levine has closed a contract with William Berke, independent producer, as executive in charge of the new Republic series of six action features and four outdoor productions in color.

Mr. Berke, whose motion picture career started with his activity as camera man in 1920, produced "Doughnuts and Society" for Mascot.

Young Actors Form Screen Boys' Club

The Screen Boys' Club, limited to youngsters who have at least three motion picture roles to their credit, was organized in Hollywood this week with Freddie Bartholomew, Bennie Bartlett, Jackie Cooper, David Holt, Billie Lee, Mickey Rooney, Sherwood and Buster Slaven as charter members.

The idea originated with Bartholomew, Cooper and Rooney and the hundred or more boys appearing with them in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture "The Devil Is a Sissy." Age limit has been set at 16. In as much as none of the charter members is more than 14, that allows any member at least two years in the organization.

Ray Kirkwood Schedules 21 For Next Season

Ray Kirkwood, Hollywood independent producer, who made 11 pictures in 1935-36, has increased his schedule to 21 for the coming season. The program includes four specials, eight "Super Western Actions," eight Spanish Action Westerns and a 15-chapter serial.

K. C. Picnic August 17th

The fifth annual picture of the motion picture industry in Kansas City, Mo., has been scheduled for August 17th. Committees to handle every aspect of the annual festivity have been appointed by General Chairman John Muchmore.

Books Demanded in William Fox Case

Referee in Bankruptcy Robert E. Steedle this week ordered the All-Continent Corporation to show cause next Tuesday why it should not be required to turn over to Hiram Steelman, trustee in bankruptcy for the estate of William Fox, all of its books and records to enable the trustee to have a thorough audit made in order to develop information on the acts, conduct and property of Mr. Fox. The order was the latest development in the hearing being conducted in Atlantic City, N. J.

Referee Steedle issued the order after a petition was filed by Mr. Steelman which set forth that "the main purpose of its organization (the All-Continent Corporation) was as a vehicle for William Fox in carrying on his own private business affairs." Counsel for Mr. Fox's creditors have continually sought to prove that All-Continent is an actual Fox asset, available toward satisfying the more than $9,000,000 in claims, rather than a separate $6,400,000 trust for his wife and daughters.

The books of the Parkwood Corporation, New York, All-Continent subsidiary, were admitted in evidence earlier this week. Creditors' counsel forced their admission by showing that Parkwood was used almost exclusively as a bank and clearing house for Mr. Fox.

A further possible line of questioning was indicated when David Katz of counsel for the creditors, asked Herbert Leitsteen, bookkeeper for Mr. Fox, to prepare an itemized statement of all Fox moneys handled by Hirsh, Newman, Reass and Becker, Fox attorneys. Mr. Leitsteen said on the stand that Parkwood has no business or income of its own and that "every penny it borrowed or received was used in connection with disbursements of Fox" in 1934.

Connelly Clarifies Charter of Writers

Explaining the move by which the Authors League of America secured a charter from the State of California, Marc Connelly stated this week:

"The filing of an application for a charter by the league to do business in California is a legal step necessitated by the fact that the organization has many members and many interests in all parts of California.

"The league had contemplated this step for some time as it had been advised by its attorneys that such procedure would be necessary in order to transact the business entailed by its interests."

Rex O'Malley in Hollywood

Signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the role of Gaston in "Camille," Rex O'Malley arrived on the coast over the week end and at once joined the cast assembled for the new production. This is his first Hollywood role after a career of many outstanding successes on the Broadway and London stages.

"Scrappy" in Bank Form

Zell Products Corporation of New York has launched a "thrift plan" drive to promote the sales of its Scrappy Banks, designed with the likeness of Scrappy, the animated cartoon character.

MORE STRINGENT FILMS ACT SEEN RESULT OF SCHENCK-OSTRER DEAL

British Trade Raises Issues of Effect on Employment and Use of the Gaumont-British Pictures as Quota Cover

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Wardour Street has been in the rather tantalizing position this week of depending on American cables for information about a reorientation of the British trade which must have an influence on the future of practically every concern operating in the three branches of the business. At this time it still is guessing what the Gaumont-British-Metro-20th Century Fox deal really means, but interest in the merger as such has rather shifted to the question of what, if anything, the British Government is going to do about it.

There are two schools of thought. Quoting earlier instances of official action to prevent the control of British key businesses passing into foreign hands some responsible individuals have openly bespoken the view that the Board of Trade, through the Treasury, would instigate a definite prohibition of the deal. The argument is that, as a means of propaganda, the film is of equal national importance with the electrical and chemical goods involved in the earlier Government actions.

Accepting this statement, another section of opinion takes the view that, bound by the letter of the law, official departments must accept any deal which formally leaves the control in British hands and that, so far as they may be doubtful about the real basis of the merger, they will seek safeguards in new general legislation rather than in specific action directed at the GB-Metro-20th-Fox amalgamation.

Various side issues are raised which, in fact, may prove to have an important bearing on official decisions. There is, for instance, the question of employment; this inevitably is raised by the prospect, near or distant, of the three organizations being merged into two or one. Allied is the consideration that the use of G-B films as quota cover by Metro and 20th Century-Fox means a decrease of the total annual British footage by the twenty to thirty features at present made by or for these companies in other studios. Many of these films are of indifferent quality, but their production has meant work and, to a certain extent, they have helped exhibitors with their exhibition quota obligations.

The Political Aspect

Important to the understanding of the situation in its political aspect is to remember that the news of the Schenck-Ostrer deal reached England at a time when, as earlier communications to the HERALD have emphasized, the suggestion of an undesirable extension of American control of the British industry was being made rather emphatically both from the producing and the exhibiting sides of the industry.

It is easy to smile at the extreme policy of protection for British film production formulated in the Case presented to the Statutory Committee on the Films Act by the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, and since disavowed by a considerable percentage of the Group. There is also a temptation to write off as just oratory the various complaints from the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association of oppressive trading methods by American companies, with their customary tag about an appeal to the Government. The importance of these statements lies entirely in the fact that the Board of Trade has shown itself definitely disposed to take them seriously.

Official Interest Accentuated

It can be taken as established that the Schenck-Ostrer news definitely accentuated the official interest already being taken in this general controversy. This was shown by the fact that, on the first rumors from America, the Board of Trade solicited the views of leading British companies as to the probable effect of the deal; statements in the House of Commons also made it plain that the maintenance of British control of G-B is regarded as a matter of importance.

The certainties of the position appear, at this time, to be as follows:

1. The Treasury, advised by the Board of Trade, will scrutinize the details of the agreements between G-B and the American companies with an eagle eye and will pass the holding company only if it specifically safeguards British control.

2. So far as provisions for legal British control seem, in the eyes of Government departments, incapable of providing completely against a predominant American influence, there is a big probability of legislation to meet this.

3. There will be a new approach by British production interests to the Statutory Committee, which has formally concluded the taking of evidence but is likely to reopen the matter on an appeal of urgency which, quite probably, may be backed by the Board of Trade.

4. Existing differences of opinion among British producers in regard to Films Act revision will tend to disappear in face of a new danger. The two most important dissentients from the Film Group's policy were G-B itself and Associated British Pictures; the former's opinion is now unlikely to count and the latter, which was in opposition largely because of its theatre holdings, is probably of the majority view in regard to the American danger.

5. There will be considerable pressure upon the Government in the House of Commons, and possibly in the press, in regard to the Gaumont deal, with an intensification of Films Act provisions as a likely sequel.

There is also a possibility, one of the many whispered in Wardour Street these days, that G-B may disappear as a distributing organization, splitting its product between Metro and Twentieth Century-Fox. Aside from the fact that a British organization would disappear, with a possibility of hardship to British employees, the prospect of an executive personnel of Americans is one on which the exhibiting section of the trade probably will have something to say; the tendency of CEA leadership is to lay at American doors all those hardships of exhibitors which can be ascribed to high-powered salesmanship.

Overbuilding

The "Redundancy" Committee appointed by the CEA, as a result of the discussion on Ken Nyman's paper at the Eastbourne conference, has issued an interim report in which it is stated that, under the chairmanship of Thomas Ormiston, the committee "has reached a conclusion and has approached the Kinematograph Renters Society for its cooperation." The full recommendations of the committee are to be presented at the next General Council meeting of the CEA in September, and at the moment it is not known officially what it has suggested to the KRS, which, incidentally, has not yet replied to the approach.

Unofficially, it is believed that the distributors have been asked to enter a Joint Trade Tribunal which, as outlined in the Nyman paper, would give a yes or no to all proposals for new theatres. In the case of a decision to

U. S. PICTURES LEAD BRITAIN'S IMPORTS

Official figures for film imports into the United Kingdom for the 12 months ended June 30 were given in London this week in a written reply by Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade, to a question by Harry Day, member of Parliament. They indicate nationalities and footage as follows:

Country	Films	Footage
U. S. A.	1,060	3,868,188
Germany	12	70,492
France	12	90,441
Russia	6	42,494
Austria	5	37,727
Other countries	4	26,806

In reply to another question by Mr. Day, W. S. Morrison, Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury, stated that assistance to film producers by loan of personnel and equipment is being or has been rendered by the Air Ministry, the Admiralty and the War Office in the case of 20 films during the past three years.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

"Pagliacci" in Colour

British Chemicolour Process, Ltd., was announced as a new enterprise this week. With Karl Grune slated as managing director and Major H. A. Procter, MP, and Louis Anthoine Neel as his co-directors, it was obvious that BCP was associated with what are known as the Schach group of companies, also located at Walmar House, Regent St., and in due course it leaked out that the new British colour process would be first used for "Pagliacci," a Capitol Films version of the Leoncavallo opera long scheduled for Richard Tauber, and, it was anticipated, for black and white production at Denham. The studio engagement stands, but British Chemicolour will be used, in the plant where Technicolor first was employed in England.

Imported Americans

Both Genevieve Tobin and Edward Everett Horton, importations from Hollywood for Twickenham's "The Man in the Mirror," have reported at the J. H. Studios, Elstree, where the picture started three days ago under Maurice Elvey's direction. It is being made with a definite view to the American market. The dialogue writer, F. McGrew Willis, also is from the States. The original is a novel by William Garrett. Willis, who has been here since January and previously worked on the France Day-Robertson Hare "You Must Get Married," has a play of his own, "Canal Zone," scheduled for production in New York in the fall.

At the Twickenham main studio at St. Margaret's, Redd Davis is in the second week's direction of "Underneath the Arches," current scenes showing the variety duo Flanagan and Allen as a couple of hobo stowaways on a liner. New additions to the cast are Stella Moya, Edmond Willard and Edward Ashley.

Loaned to Star

Margot Grahame, with the laurels she won in "The Informer" still fresh, has been loaned by Radio to Criterion Film Productions for the lead in the already announced adaptation of the Louis de Wohl "The House of a Thousand Windows." She will play a gangster's sweetie and opposite her, as the crook, will be Basil Sydney. Victor Armenise, who photographed "Accused" for Criterion, will be at the camera. The working title of "Gang" is likely to be changed, Alfred Zeisler will direct at Worton Hall.

Matthews Picture

An addition to the cast of the Jessie Matthews "Head over Heels" at GB's Lime Grove studio is Edward Cooper, theatre-cabaret-radio star, who has his first big screen part. Cooper toured the States some years back as accompanist to Irene Bordoni and made a name here in Charlot and Cochran revues before developing his own cabaret act, composing and singing numbers in high favor with London West End audiences. Also to be introduced are two 19-year-olds, Thelma Toone, Jackson and Joan Young, with revue experience. Leading parts are being played by Romney Brent, Louis Borell and Robert Flemyng, the last named called a juvenile lead discovery.

For "O. H. M. S.," on location on Salisbury Plain, Raoul Walsh has been staging scenes advertising the mechanical efficiency and resourcefulness of various wings of the British Army and particularly of the Royal Engineers, who built a pontoon bridge under heavy stage fire for the later crossing of mechanized artillery and transport units.

This picture, designed to show the world that Britain still has an army, certainly should look authentic. Acting as military advisers to Walsh in these scenes were General Sir Burdett-Stuart, Commander-in-Chief of the Southern Command, and Brigadier W. Platt, commanding the Seventh Infantry Brigade, to say nothing of two thousand "other ranks." The unit, with Anna Lee, is going to the army centers, Aldershot and Tidworth, for story sequences before returning to the Plain for more battles.

The Gaumont-British outdoor lot at Northolt has proved its usefulness for scenes proceeding for the Alfred Hitchcock "Sabotage." A complete street system, over 500 feet long, has been erected to provide London backgrounds of shops, office blocks, railway stations, a cinema and whatnot. Also imported were a consignment of authentic London omnibuses, taxis, delivery vans and street vendors' barrows and of a number of the soon to be obsolete London trams; GB bought these outright from the London County Council disposal department and put in an efficient overhead wire system whereby to operate them.

Due to the speed with which this erection job was done, Sylvia Sydney was able to complete her part this week, leaving for a Continental holiday before returning to Hollywood.

Filmed Before Staging

Herbert Wilcox will have another "first" to his credit when "This'll Make You Whistle" is finished at Elstree in about a week's time. This Jack Buchanan production is not due for its West End stage production until September. It played the provinces last fall and was due to go into cold storage while Buchanan went on holiday, before his film engagement with Herbert Wilcox Productions. He got back from Bermuda to find that the story had been scripted and that the studio was waiting for him. Now the position is that the film will be held up until the stage show is put on and that in due course it will appear as a version of the West End success.

Building Elizabeth

The outstanding feature of "Fire Over England," the Erich Pommer production directed by William K. Howard at Denham, is likely to be the life-like portrait of Queen Elizabeth provided by Flora Robson with the connivance of Guy Pearce, makeup expert from Hollywood. Pearce's key piece of equipment is a somewhat grisly one. Each morning, when Good Queen Bess is scheduled for a scene, he reaches down an authentic copy of the great lady's death mask and shapes Miss Robson a face for the day; its outstanding feature, in a very literal sense, is a putty replica of the famous Elizabethan nose.

That this portrait of Elizabeth is likely to be as noteworthy an achievement for London Films as Laughton's forever famous picture of her royal father Henry is already clear. Certainly no pains are being spared the artiste, who has shaved her eyebrows because Elizabeth had none, and who starts making up at 7 o'clock each day and carries on her back a high ruffed costume weighing many, many pounds, also closely copied from authentic pieces from the Queen's wardrobe.

Currently in production is a big scene in the tapestry room of the royal palace with the Earl of Leicester (Leslie Banks) urging Elizabeth to build ships to meet the menace of the Spanish Armada. Howard, who first worked with Alexander Korda in the Fox studios at Hollywood, expects to finish direction in September.

Scotland at Shepperton

Sound City, Shepperton, controlled by the Scotsman Norman Loudon, temporarily and coincidentally has become the London center for production of features with Scottish stories and backgrounds, with the FitzPatrick "David Livingstone" to be followed by the same producer's "Auld Lang Syne" and by U. K. Films' "Banks of Allan Water."

The Livingstone picture is, as far as interiors are concerned, practically all-Scottish, the scenes shot at Sound City including a number illustrative of Livingstone's early years at Glasgow. "Auld Lang Syne" is a life of Robert Burns and the Sound City interiors will be added to many exterior scenes at actual places associated with the Scottish poet's history.

"Banks of Allan Water" will be directed by John Baxter and in this case also there will be a plentiful use of Scottish backgrounds. Baxter, who attracted much attention with "Doss House," is first going to produce a picture of rural life in Sussex, presumably on similar lines to his "Song of the Plough," a semi-documentary which combined beautiful landscapes with a provocative statement of the British farming problem. The new film, at present untitled, is the story of man and horse in competition with mechanized appliances.

McCormack in Color

As a special feature of the all-color "Wings of the Morning," New World production at Denham for Twentieth Century-Fox release, Robert T. Kane has signed Count John McCormack to appear, in his own character, in a party scene and to sing "Killarney" and "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms." The engagement is another illustration of the acute box-office sense which has marked the planning of "Wings of the Morning" from the beginning. Already the exhibitor is assured of these big selling values: the first British all-color feature; the Derby in color, with a winning Derby jockey in Steve Donoghue appearing in person; fox-hunting scenes with red coats all complete—and now the famous tenor.

BIP Buys Play

British International Pictures has bought the screen rights of "Aren't Men Beasts," the Vernon Sylvaine play, still in the full course of an exceptionally successful run at the Strand theatre, and will put Robertson Hare and Alfred Drayton, of the stage, cast, into the leading parts.

Brian Desmond Hurst, famous in a night after the display of his first directed feature, "Ourselves Alone," has now completed his second BIP picture, "Tenth Man," with Antoinette Cellier and John Lodge in the leads. Adapted from the Somerset Maugham play, "Tenth Man" is a drama of modern finance. Aileen Marson, Iris Hoey, Athole Stewart and Clifford Evans are others in the cast.

Itemized

Marlene Dietrich, after a stopoff in Paris, is expected for tests and rehearsals of "Knight Without Armour" with Robert Donat at Denham the end of this week. . . . Victor Saville begins shooting immediately at Denham on "Dark Journey," starring Miriam Hopkins and Conrad Veidt. . . . A new unit, Medway Films, is making "International Revue," with Ronald Frankau starring and acting as compere to a musical to which artistes of all nationalities will contribute. . . . Neil Hamilton is making his 200th screen appearance in "Because of Love" for Tudor Productions at Highbury studio. Gitta Alpar is the co-star. . . . Paramount has three British pictures in progress at Sound City; "Grand Finale," with Mary Glynne and Guy Newall; "Murder by Rope," with D. Clarke-Smith and Sunday Wilshin; and "Show Flat," a comedy built on the new type of apartment block.

Disney Art Exhibit in Third Year

Initiated three years ago, the Walt Disney Art Exhibit continues its tour of the country with five new exhibitions arranged for. class a new project as "redundant," the joint trade ruling to that effect would be presented forcibly to the licensing authority. If a license still were granted the theatre would be refused membership of the CEA and possibly would be refused product by KRS members. On this point the CEA has to overcome an existing KRS resolution refusing to operate a boycott policy. As an immediate measure the committee is approaching all licensing authorities with a request for "improved facilities for information when plans for new cinemas are deposited."

Star Contract in Courts

The right of a star player to refuse to act unless dialogue is altered and the right of a producing company to withhold salary on the ground of such refusal were issues in an action between Frances Day and Gaumont-British which came before Justice Porter in the King's Bench Division in London this week. The matter previously had been before an arbitrator, who had found Miss Day guilty of breach and awarded £1530 damages against her.

The contract between the parties gave G-B the right to sublet Miss Day's services, which they retained at a yearly salary of £6750. It was alleged that, cast in "Jack of All Trades," she refused to go on the floor, with other artistes ready for the camera, unless new lines were written. For the artiste it was claimed that the contract was "servile," but the Judge decided that it was valid and that G-B were entitled to put Miss Day off salary for the period during which she would have appeared in "Jack of All Trades." He ordered the artiste to pay the cost of all proceedings.

British Lion's Net

British Lion, in its annual report, showed a net profit of £12,093, 12 shillings and seven pence, which compares with a net of £14,891, six shillings and two pence last year.

Cash on hand totaled £29,977 against £4,047 last year. The gross trading profit equaled £74,901, which is an increase over the last period of £20,000. In explanation of the smaller net, the company stated, "We have absorbed the establishing of Republic Pictures out of revenue."

The balance sheet showed that $250,000 was deposited with the Chemical Bank and Trust Co., New York, in accordance with the stipulation in the Republic contract, and there exists an obligation to deposit an additional sum in the same amount. The issued capital is £141,545 and £125,000 in six per cent convertible debenture stock. Film stock is valued at £117,813 against £98,883 last year. Directors' fees totaled £1,133, and they waived further fees of £872.

ABP Final Dividend

Associated British Pictures has paid a final dividend of 7½ per cent, bringing the years' total to 12½ per cent, which compares with 10 per cent last year.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

CALLING OF DAN MATTHEWS, THE: Richard Arlen, Charlotte Wynters—We played this picture rather old, and it did not do a big business, but it was played on a holiday, and most of the people were probably out shooting firecrackers. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 4-5.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

DEVIL'S SQUADRON: Richard Dix, Karen Morley—Played this on Friday-Saturday in place of western, and it filled the bill very nicely. Business good and favorable comments. Played July 17-18.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

GIRL FRIEND, THE: Ann Sothern, Jack Haley—An amusing bit of nonsense that went over acceptably on Bank Night.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—This is one of those truly great pictures which leave you flabbergasted for want of superlative descriptive phrases. The audience response, like the picture, was perfect.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—Here is a picture that will please everyone. This may or may not be given the award this year. It makes no difference whether it wins the blue ribbon or the gold "standee' or not. It's real entertainment every inch of the way and if any exhibitor does not make plenty of money with this picture, it's his own fault. Boys, you've got a picture in this one so step right out and tell your patrons. Raise your prices so they will know you have something. I know a company if they had a picture like this they would pull it out and resell it to you at top guarantee plus 40 per cent or more after it had been road showed for a year or two. Columbia pictures have been pretty good in spite of what some exhibitors say. It's true they do not sell them to you and the public the way some do but if you put the same effort and money into putting over Columbia pictures you will find a nice profit at the end of the season.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

PANIC ON THE AIR: Lew Ayres, Florence Rice—Fair program picture. Will get by if you have plenty of shorts to go with it. Running time, 7 reels. Played July 17-18.—H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Mo. Rural patronage.

SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT: George Raft, Joan Bennett—Slim midweek business. It's a good light comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT: George Raft, Joan Bennett—A real good picture but played it weekend, which proved a grave mistake on our part as we had the lowest gross of the season.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

First National

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee, Patricia Ellis—A nice program picture that did not do much at the B. O. Myself, I liked the picture and so did the few that came to see it. No drawing power in the star names and the title does not convey anything. Played June 10-11.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

BROADWAY HOSTESS: Winifred Shaw, Lyle Talbot—Wini's first starring picture and could be better. Story weak, recording poor, ballet in champagne glass very good. Wini's songs not as good as "Broadway Lullaby" or "Lady in Red." Played Friday and Saturday to average business. Played June 5-6.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Just fair Saturday business. My people seem to be tiring of these noisy, roaring air pictures.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—Very good program picture; used on a mid-week program and did a little extra business for us. Davis is well liked here as is also Brent. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 15-16.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis—A fine dramatic picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—Kay Francis is no extra draw to us. A very good picture but didn't do business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SNOWED UNDER: George Brent, Genevieve Tobin, Patricia Ellis, Glenda Farrell—A very weak picture for these stars. Dialogue rapid and hard to catch in spots. Several kicks from patrons, and this is unusual. Played July 15-16.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

SONG OF THE SADDLE: Dick Foran, Alma Lloyd—A western just made for our Friday and Saturday business. A very short picture that had to be filled out with plenty of short subjects to make our two hour show, but it pleased 100 per cent. Box office good. Running time, 56 minutes. Played June 26-27.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

SONG OF THE SADDLE: Dick Foran, Alma Lloyd—This I would say was above average western. This chap Foran can sing although he'll never be a Buck Jones with our audience.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilburn, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SONG OF THE SADDLE: Dick Foran, Alma Lloyd—These Warner Bros. musical westerns have gone over in great shape here. They are distinctly above the average western and provide good entertainment for almost any kind of show goer. Foran certainly is not, and never was a cowboy, and he needs a little exercise and reducing (nothing personal, Dick) but the stories have been good; the star is O. K. in his work and voice; the folks like his shows. Running time, 6 reels. Played June 27.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

MISTER HOBO: George Arliss—Pleased my patrons, but was not the special we thought it would be. Running time, 8 reels. Played July 14-15.—H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Mo. Rural patronage.

MISTER HOBO: George Arliss—This picture miscast Arliss. We thought the sound was poor. The same old show with British pictures. They don't click with our audience.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Mascot

DOUGHNUTS AND SOCIETY: Louise Fazenda, Maude Eburne—This slapstick comedy proved popular with our juvenile patrons and was adequate as part of a double bill.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WATERFRONT LADY: Ann Rutherford, Frank Albertson, Barbara Pepper—This program picture received a satisfactory audience response from our patrons as part of a double bill. It is fairly well produced.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—This did only normal business with diversified opinions. The extreme hot weather made it suffer. We had a picture contest which helped it out.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET, THE: Charles Laughton, Norma Shearer, Fredric March—Another "Old Favourite" and very good one, too, especially for my British patrons, as the story is English. Very strong cast; wonderful acting. These three stars are very popular here. Played it one day as revival on June 8th to very good business.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—Laurel and Hardy have made better pictures than this, but our patrons enjoyed it, nevertheless.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—This is one of the biggest "Old Favourites" I have brought back this summer and had record takings for return showings. Played it to crowded houses one day, Sunday. Even the heat did not spoil business for this one. Played June 7.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

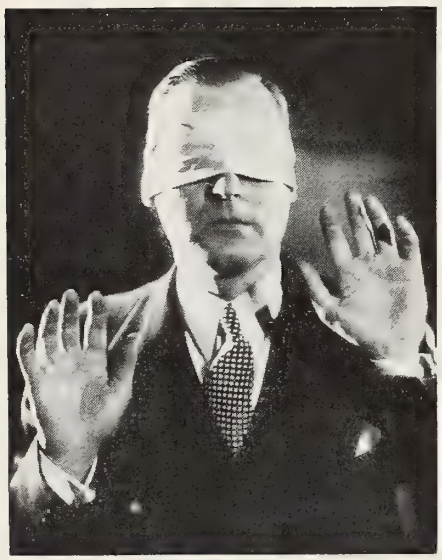
PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—Clever comedy. Pleased a good house on Bank Night.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—Here's a swell pair to draw to. And it was a swell comedy for them. Some thought it a little silly, but that was just the type of story. Running time, 81 minutes. Played July 12-13.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—Just a darn piece of nonsense, light as a feather, but the kind that Bob seemingly delights in. Anyway, it played to good weekend business, due to star pull only. Running time, 81 minutes. Played July 17-18.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—A perfect picture. Hot weather. Slim Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—We were greatly disappointed in the gross on this picture, but at the same time we are proud to have run such a picture in our theatre. The music was superb, the scenery magnificent, and we consider it one of the finest pictures we have ever shown. Evidently too much "class" for our trade, but it was worth the rental for just my wife and self to see it. Played July 5-7.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.



SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—Here is a picture that will give unusual satisfaction. It is the very best of its kind of entertainment and one of the best pictures released this year. Don't be afraid of this one no matter what kind of a house you have. It is good for big and little towns and will build up each day. Step on it, kid, and make yourself some vacation money.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

THREE GODFATHERS: Chester Morris, Irene Hervey—Here is a picture which follows "Three Bad Men" of the silent days every inch of the way. Only it is not half as good. It is one of the poorest pictures of the year. In fact, my advice is to pay for it and leave it alone. It is worse than nothing. Absolutely no value as entertainment. Shame on a company that is bragging so much on releasing such pictures as this and the same thing holds good for "Garden Murder Case," "Moonlight Murder," "Murder Man" and all the rest of the murder pictures released by MGM. You couldn't find a "Thin Man" in a carload.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

Paramount

CALL OF THE PRAIRIE: Wm. Boyd—Our patrons on Friday and Saturday are strong for westerns, and the Hopalong Cassidys are very good. The scenic background helps a lot, and the recording is better than most westerns. Business okay. Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 10-11.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

DESERT GOLD: Larry Crabbe, Marsha Hunt—A typical western. Only six reels, but it did a big Friday and Saturday business. Played July 24-25.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

FLORIDA SPECIAL: Jack Oakie, Sally Eilers—This picture brought in the poorest Sunday gross we have had for months. Although I did not have a chance to see the picture myself, I am told that the action was very slow, and the comedy not so good. However, the box office tells the best story, and it was certainly a flop for us. Jack Oakie usually goes good here. Played June 20-23.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION (Re-Issue): Gary Cooper, Wynne Gibson, George Raft, Richard Bennett, May Robson—A very good picture, that was strong enough to be revived as an "Old Favourite." Has taken at the B. O. more in one day than some of the new programmers in two days. The prison episode is rather too tragical and should be cut. Played June 4.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

IT'S A GREAT LIFE: Joe Morrison, Rosalind Keith—Another of those pleasant little program pictures that entertain but do not create a great deal of patron enthusiam. The film's most obvious weakness is its very cheap settings which make it somewhat remindful of the features turned out by a few of the lesser independents.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields, Mary Brian—Poor and a misnomer. Fields is doing his best to save a weak story, but without success. Played to average midweek business only because there was no competition at all on the first day of showing. Played June 24-25.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

MILKY WAY, THE: Harold Lloyd, Adolphe Menjou—An all round very good cast. Had been sold to use as a "Special," but did not do business of a "Programmer." Lloyd is not popular here any more. Picture is not bad, only slow in spots, and then we had too many boxing pictures around lately. The Chinese titles that Paramount is superimposing on some of their pictures here in China are poison for our theatre. They jump all over the picture and distract the attention badly. This is very good for Chinese theatres, but for the Star, patronized exclusively by Europeans, it is terrible. Had many complaints. Played June 21-23.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

MILLIONS IN THE AIR: John Howard, Wendy Barrie—An amateur Radio Hour story. This kind of picture is not popular here. Even Wendy Barrie, our own Hong Kong star, did not save the picture from a bad flop. Played it three days with Sunday and lost money. Played May 31-June 2.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—Two objections to westerns of this type. Entirely too short and it is necessary to build up with more singles, also it is just the same old story in every one of them. One can tell right at the beginning how it is going to run. Yet the distributors want the same guarantee as on the other program pictures. Running time, 59 minutes. Played July 17-18.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—Since Fred MacMurray's appearance in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," his popularity with our patronage has zoomed to new heights. This picture permits him to continue the good impression he has made in his recent films and offers above average entertainment.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TOO MANY PARENTS: Frances Farmer, Colin Tapley—Made the mistake of putting this picture on our worst night. It is no special by any means, and Paramount does not claim it to be, but it has a lot of nice clean entertainment, and the few who saw it were high in their praise. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 25.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

TOO MANY PARENTS: Frances Farmer, Colin Tapley—It is really unfortunate that this, one of the most human and appealing pictures of the year, should be nameless. Everyone who saw it had something kind to say. A few noticed the similarity between it and the Radio picture, "Wednesday's Child."—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Fred MacMurray—A wonderful picture, due to the coloring. A nice business, and this may be considered Paramount's hit of the season in our house. Running time, 106 minutes. Played June 28-30.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Henry Fonda, Sylvia Sidney—Despite the fact that this picture played almost every house around us, we did a very large business. Numerous patrons saw it several times. We never tired of seeing it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fred MacMurray—A little late, but just a word to congratulate Paramount on this wonderful box office attraction. This picture is not only box office but it has universal appeal. The color is beautiful, good cast and is excellent in every respect. Give it added playing time and find your last days your best days.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins, Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis—A wonderful picture; one of the best that Lubitsch ever produced. Brought it back as an "Old Favourite" (that's what we are calling our revivals) for one day and packed them in. Could not accommodate all that came to the last show, so am bringing it back for one more day in July. Played June 3.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China, European patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—Nothing in it. Skip it if you can. Bing Crosby's popularity was declining here, but this picture certainly did him more harm than any one before. Played it two midweek days to terrible business. Played June 17-18.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

Puritan

I'LL NAME THE MURDERER: Ralph Forbes, Marion Shilling—We have found the product from this company to be very inconsistent in quality. Their latest release is one of the poorest to date. The audience response was very unsatisfactory.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ROGUES TAVERN, THE: Wallace Ford, Barbara Pepper—This program picture is highly suitable for double bills, and in some situations it should be able to play alone. Our patrons gave it a very encouraging response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Republic

DANCING FEET: Ben Lyon, Joan Marsh—This got by Sunday, played with the Louis-Schmeling fight pictures.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HITCH HIKE LADY: Alison Skipworth, James Ellison—Another very good show from Republic. A very interesting story well acted. Sure to satisfy. Running time, 76 minutes. Played May 5-6.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

LEATHERNECKS HAVE LANDED, THE: Lew Ayres, Isabel Jewell—A great picture. A good story with plenty of action and will hold your interest from beginning to end. Every Republic picture is better than the last. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 7-8.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

LONELY TRAIL, THE: John Wayne, Ann Rutherford—This is one of the best, if not the best, in the John Wayne series. It has an intelligent story, beautiful photography, convincing acting, and an abundance of thrills. We heartily recommend it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

$1,000 A MINUTE: Roger Pryor, Leila Hyams—In looking back over the past season's product (westerns excepted) from this company, we have concluded that this picture is probably the most outstanding of the lot. It is exceedingly novel, depicting the adventures of an ambitious young man when he is assigned the rare task of spending one thousand dollars a minute until a certain expenditure is reached. We recently gave it a repeat date and had satisfactory business.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

$1,000 A MINUTE: Roger Pryor, Leila Hyams—A very interesting story with plenty of laughs. Will certainly please everyone. Was booked in for one day but was well worth more. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 12.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

WINDS OF THE WASTELAND: John Wayne, Phyllis Fraser—This picture was very popular with our patrons and drew well. It is good entertainment.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BUNKER BEAN: Owen Davis, Jr., Louise Latimer—Went over much better than expected, especially with such an unknown cast. Running time, 7 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—We are still trying to figure out why this picture flopped at the box office. It had the story and the stars and should have built on second and third days. Instead, business dropped to new low on last day. Running time, 81 minutes. Played July 12-14.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—Excellent picture. Good for big cites but not a drawing card for small towns. Acting is fine and drew better class. Played July 25.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—Pretty fair warm weather entertainment, just a bit too silly and hardly up to the rather extravagant advance notices RKO gave it. There seems to be a very decided Hollywood trend to far-fetched comedy that they apparently consider "smart." Somehow, it hasn't registered in this small town. And that goes for several pictures that have done well in the big spots. Maybe we country folks aren't clever enough to get it. Running time, 10 reels. Played July 19-20.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

FANG AND CLAW: Frank Buck—Very interesting picture of big game capturing. Slim midweek business. Can't get the women out to see these.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FARMER IN THE DELL, THE: Fred Stone, Jean Parker—Quite a pleasant little picture, but it is best for small towns and would not go far in the larger cities. About an average production. Played June 27.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

LADY CONSENTS, THE: Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall—An excellent production that should go over well in any kind of a theatre, big or little. Fine acting, wonderful appeal. Played July 11.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster, Dorothy Wilson—A very good picture, but business not up to expectations. Played it three days with Sunday and just made the rental and expenses. Foster is very good as gladiator, but Basil Rathbone is miscast as Pontius Pilate. He looks more a Jew than a Roman and his acting is false as to character he portrays and as to epoch. The scenes of the destruction of Pompeii are very good and impressive, but fire falling from heaven is too obviously superimposed, also the Temple in earlier parts of the picture is without perspective; just painted on a canvas. Played June 14-16.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

LAST OUTLAW, THE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson—If yours is a western picture town, you can get behind this one as it's a knockout. We couldn't get the kids out of our house. Tom Taylor makes a good villain. If RKO is wise, they should team this pair in more of these really good westerns. Running time, 8 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—Good, entertaining, bright little picture; nothing big and never pretended to be, but the cast and the director seemed to enjoy their job and any small town audience will enjoy it with them. O. K. show for the midweek. Running time, 8 reels. Played June 23-24.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

MUSS 'EM UP: Preston Foster, Margaret Callahan—This is a good program picture, although its action is far from being as blood-curdling as the title implies. Our patrons liked it, and business was good.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—A wonderful picture for the B. O. Astaire and Rogers are very popular here; in fact, Ginger Rogers is the most popular star in Hong Kong. Irene Dunne has a very good following, too. In opinion of many of our patrons, this picture is still the best made by Astaire-Rogers team. Played it one day, on Saturday, June 13th, as an "Old Favourite," to nearly packed houses.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Wheeler and Woolsey—During the year I have played some mighty fine pictures from RKO. As a company and so far as product is concerned, they are right up among the best, but here is a picture that is not worth making a report on. It is cheap. It has no entertainment value. It is worse than nothing. It is obtaining money under false pretenses. Why any company would release a picture of this kind is a mystery, especially a company that can and does make some of the best product on the market. Shame on you RKO. You'll never be forgiven for giving us "Silly Billies."—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

TWO IN THE DARK: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Our patrons told us in no uncertain terms that they considered this one of the poorest pictures of the year from a major company. We agreed that the picture suffers from an over-emphasis on dialogue, but we hardly think the film deserved the severe comments it received.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Wash, Texas. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—It is good but not her best picture. Drew fairly well but not above the average attendance. A good production. Played July 18.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee, Slim Summerville—This Temple picture is better than "Littlest Rebel" and did much better business for us. Shirley has had her best day with us, but is still good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—Shirley Temple has lost none of her drawing power at this theatre. Our patrons do not say: "Is it as good as 'The Littlest Rebel,' etc.; just so long as Shirley does her stuff they are satisfied. "Captain January" seemed to please as much as any that have gone before. Shirley seemed to enjoy every minute making this, and Guy Kibbee and Slim Summerville seemed to have the time of their lives playing up to Shirley, and were a show by themselves. Buddy Ebsen had a small part and did it to perfection. Cooler weather after the record heat helped the draw.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland, Keye Luke—An entertaining program picture that might not have been as good as it is without its two big little stars, George and Olive, the midgets, who do an amusing rumba.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET: Warner Oland, Rosina Lawrence—Fairly good program picture. Played July 10.—H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Mo. Rural patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A (Re-Issue): Will Rogers, Myrna Loy—Business was excellent on this film, although it is not quite as amusing as some of Rogers' later pictures. We are anxious to run the reissue of "State Fair."—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

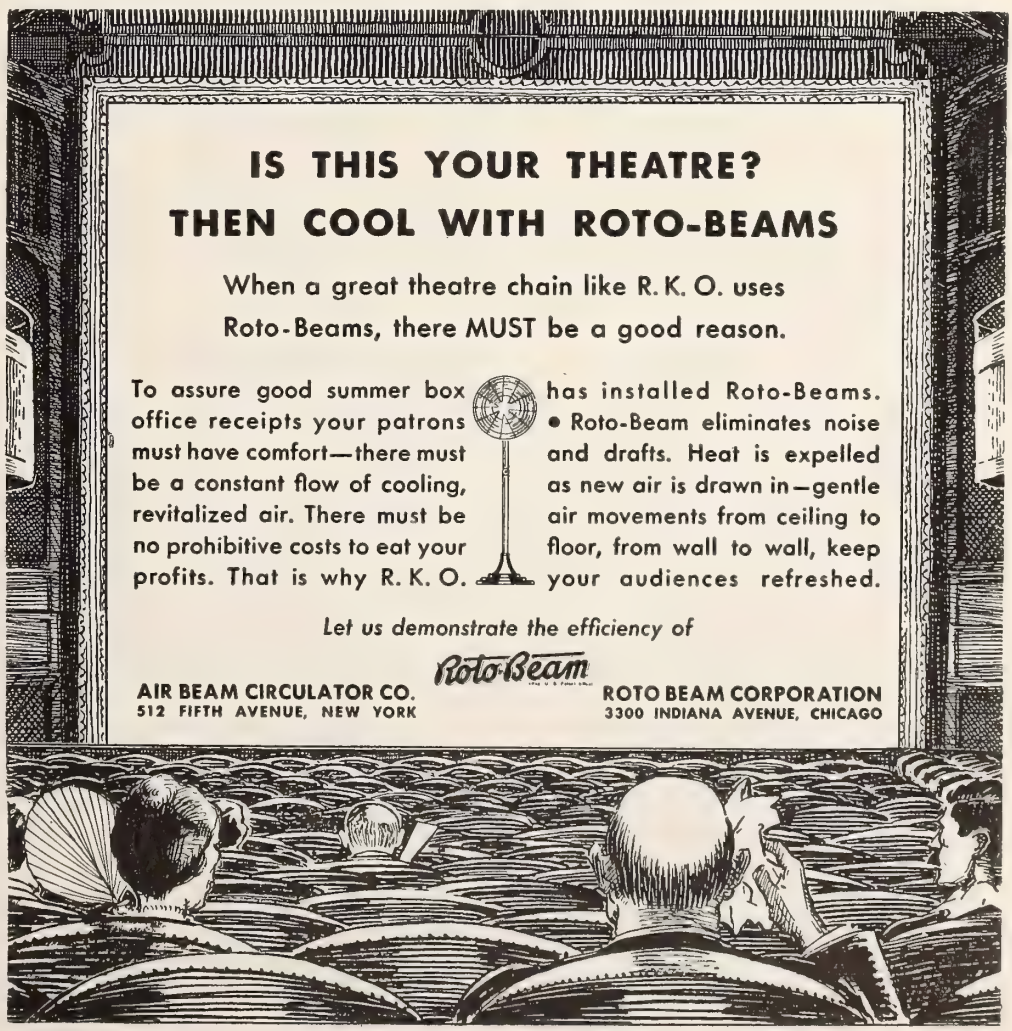
CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers, Myrna Loy—Just a word, boys. Double bill this one with some good selection and make yourselves some money. It will draw as good as ever. It surprised me in a midweek showing, really doing more than Saturday-Sunday business. Book it and step on it.—S. R. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—A nice picture, but certainly not worth the fancy price we paid for it. Business slow due to it having played all around us first. Box office a disappointment. Running time, 94 minutes. Played July 19-20.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—Fairly good. Running time, 87 minutes. Played July 3-4.—H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Mo. Rural patronage.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY: Jane Withers, Ralph Morgan—The only kick was lack of adult romance as some thought too kiddish. Running time, 8 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

MAN WHO BROKE THE BANK AT MONTE CARLO, THE: Ronald Colman, Joan Bennett—Very average business. Didn't think it as good as some Colman pictures. Did no extra business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.



PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—Like so many others, they didn't go for this in any great big way. It was just a picture, never got down to earth, never seems plausible enough to be really interesting. It may be a percentage picture and a wow in the big town, but not out here. Running time, 10 reels. Played June 9-10.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SONG AND DANCE MAN: Paul Kelly, Claire Trevor—A fair program picture that received a satisfactory audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Fred Allen—A pleasing musical comedy. Did fair Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Victor McLaglen, Claudette Colbert, Rosalind Russell—The action of this picture appealed to our patrons who were not as disapproving of Claudette Colbert's screen death as we anticipated. Business was good.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

MODERN TIMES: Charlie Chaplin, Paulette Goddard—Personally, I enjoyed this picture very much. Charley is still in a class by himself and there are some very clever gags. The fact that he does not talk does not affect the picture in any way. In fact it's a relief to get away from the talk for a little while. The picture was not box office for me. I think that the old timers do not go to the shows so often and the young people don't know Charley, so he has no draw in my small town.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

SANDERS OF THE RIVER: Leslie Banks, Paul Robeson—My people didn't care much for this.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SCARLET PIMPERNEL, THE: Leslie Howard, Merle Oberon—This is one of those pictures that the average patron loves to hate. A costume film, it received the worst audience response of the year.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SPLENDOR: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—This well cast and faultlessly produced film received fine audience comment, particularly from feminine patrons. As a box-office attraction, it was average.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Universal

INVISIBLE RAY, THE: Boris Karloff—Fair picture of its kind. Hot weather; poor business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

INVISIBLE RAY, THE: Karloff, Bela Lugosi—Quite a thriller and very well done. For the time of the year and the weather, did better on this than expected.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—Hot weather; weekend business just fair. It's a very good picture that appealed mainly to the highbrows.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones—In 110 hot weather, this went right out and did a very satisfactory business. Running time, 13 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Paul Robeson—Good show with nice audience response. Torrid temperature smacked gross. Robeson's singing "Old Man River" high spot. Running time, 115 minutes. Played July 19-21.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SILVER SPURS: Buck Jones, Muriel Evans—Average western. Fair Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes, Lee Tracy—The nature of this subject made smooth continuity impossible, and while the picture was well done, it failed to arouse any box office response. Running time, 95 minutes. Played July 9-11.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—Good action picture, with plenty of thrills. Business good, and what more can we ask? Played July 8-9.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—A very pleasing melodrama with interesting scenes of the Dam and thrills around the Dam worked into the story with a pleasing romance. It is hard to judge drawing power on a sunny Sunday.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DANGEROUS: Bette Davis, Franchot Tone—A very good picture, well acted to above average business. We double billed it with a Western. Westerns are necessary for our farmer customers.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FRESHMAN LOVE: Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull, Frank McHugh—Amusing light comedy. Slim midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney—Rather slim Saturday business, with a centennial celebration in a neighboring town as competition. Cagney doesn't look so well in a long-hair role.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDEND: Marion Davies, Dick Powell, Charlie Ruggles, Claude Rains—Much better than we expected. The trailer was very poor and did more harm than good. But in spite of the fact that the picture was good, why cannot this company see that Marion Davies is a has-been and has no more drawing power? Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 19-20.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Olivia de Havilland—A good comedy that everybody enjoyed. Played it two days, Friday and Saturday, to better than average grosses. Played June 19-20.—C. Goldin, Star Theatre, Hong Kong, China. European patronage.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—I personally didn't see this picture as we played it with the fight pictures and had such crowds I couldn't see it. So didn't mind, but everyone who saw it told me it was fine. Heard a lot of laughs.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST, THE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—An excellent picture, but it couldn't overcome the hot weather jinx.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

OLD MOTHER HUBBARD: Comicolor Cartoons—Very clever color cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

Columbia

I DON'T REMEMBER: Harry Langdon—A fair two-reel comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHARE THE WEALTH: Andy Clyde—A very good comedy. Clyde quite popular with us, especially his Scotch antics.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SPILLS AND SPLASHES: New World of Sports Series—A very good short subject worth playing for summer audiences on water sports.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Educational

GRAND SLAM OPERA: Star Personality Comedy—Very funny slap stick.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Musical Comedy—Very good. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AUDIOSCOPIKS: Special—Very amusing but much oversold. There is very little extra drawing power for small towns with only a couple shows; in fact, we do not believe that the extra advertising was paid for, to say nothing about the extra cost of the subject. Running time, 8 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

HONEYLAND: Harman-Ising—This colored cartoon is going after Disney. Very clever and enjoyed in general.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HOW TO SLEEP: Robert Benchley—One of the most amusing shorts I have even seen.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LET'S DANCE: MGM Miniatures—A one reel oddity on different dances which proved interesting.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PINCH SINGER, THE: Our Gang—Sunday crowd found this very amusing.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PIRATE PARTY ON CATALINA ISLE; Musical Revues—Enjoyed this so much had operator show it again before we returned it. It's a masterpiece for color and entertainment.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PUBLIC GHOST NO. 7: Charley Chase—Just fair. Had better Chase comedies.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WHEN THE CAT'S AWAY: Happy Harmonies—I thought it awful, but the audience ate it up. Laughed a lot of seats loose.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Paramount

GRANTLAND RICE SPORTLIGHTS SERIES: These Sportlights are all good with our crowd. "Sporting Network" is a particularly good one. Hats off, and an orchid to Ted Husing for a very consistently good job. He can talk all sports in their own language and there are very few who can do that and make the man who has a particularly hobby appreciate and enjoy it. Running time, 1 reel.—Heny Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

LUCKY STARLETS: Headliners—Not worth running time. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

LUCKY STARLETS: Baby Leroy, Bennie Bartlett, David Holt, Betty Holt, Billy Lee, Virginia Weidler—Here's a really good novelty single reel aboout Paramount kid stars. So often these are just blah, but this one is O. K. If Paramount features even began to match their shorts, what a company that would be. Running time, 1 reel.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

NERVE OF SOME WOMEN: Paramount Varieties—A very interesting single reel on daring feats performed by women.—Harland Ranklin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BUGLES FROM BLUE GRASS: Sports With Bill Corum Series—Here's a "natural" for Western exhibitors; be sure and give it a boost. Bill Corum has a way about him and his Sport Reel that gets over, and this horse reel is just fine for everybody who loves a horse. That one shot of Man-O-War was a beauty; tell your race fans about this one. Running time, 1 reel.—Henry Reeve, Mision Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR PARADE SERIES: These go over good and pull a little extra biz. Running time, 1 reel.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

MISMANAGED: Radio Musical Comedies—Good for weekend. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

NEVER CATCH THE RABBIT: Sports With Bill Corum Series—Entertaining. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY: Rainbow Parade Cartoon—A dandy color cartoon, right up with any of them. Lots of laffs; sure-fire stuff for any who have enjoyed Fontaine Fox's cartoons these many years. Running time, 1 reel.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MICKEY'S GRAND OPERA: Mickey Mouse—Was disappointed in this one as it lacked both originality and entertainment. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

I'D LOVE TO TAKE ORDERS FROM YOU: Merrie Melodies—Excellent color cartoon. Several stayed to see it again. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

OH EVALINE: Hal LeRoy, Eleanore Whitney—Fair comedy. Swell hoofing.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

OKAY, JOSE: El Brendel—The poorest two-reel colored short we have had from Warners, as we always look to Warners for something extra.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

REGULAR KIDS: Meglin Kids—A very entertaining colored subject.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

LOUIS-SCHMELING FIGHT FILM: Four days to good business. So far, the season's biggest attraction.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOUIS-SCHMELING FIGHT FILM: The best fight pictures we have ever seen, and they did a wonderful business. First run in this territory. Running time, 33 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

LOUIS-SCHMELING FIGHT: The biggest gross we had in some time. It's a natural. A week's business in two nights.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

ADVENTURES OF REX AND RINTY: Rex and Rin Tin Tin, Jr.—I am halfway through this serial and it seems to have a certain following. I would like to do away with serials, but public wants one a week.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Answer to Question No. 30

Bluebook School Question No. 30 was: (A) Why are temporary repairs often necessary and valuable? When should they be avoided? (B) Do dust deposits reduce generator efficiency? (C) Is the sound impression on film always in perfect synchronism with motion?

To Section A W. C. Brown replies, "Temporary repairs often are necessary, either to prevent interruption of the show or to make interruption as short as possible. They should never be made if it be possible to effect permanent repair quickly enough to avoid stoppage of the show, or if the making of a permanent repair will involve an appreciable addition to time of stoppage. They should not be resorted to if such temporary repair seems likely to inflict damage upon the equipment, or to give poor results."

G. E. Doe says, "According to my view, temporary repairs are not only necessary but very often highly desirable. They are necessary when the making of a perfect permanent repair would cause a shut-down of the show which the temporary one would avoid. They are, in fact, desirable in one-man rooms when a breakdown occurs, or something happens that would require a hastily made permanent repair.

T. F. Bochert says, "Temporary repairs are not only necessary but valuable when they either prevent a shut-down, or minimize its length in case one is necessary. They should be avoided, however, when (a) a permanent repair cannot be made in proper manner without show stoppage or only a negligible increase in it if one is necessary, and (b) when the projectionist is not entirely certain their making will not cause further damage."

J. R. Prater says, "Temporary repair is often necessary to avoid a shut-down or to minimize the stoppage, if one is inevitable anyhow, and enable one to carry on until proper repairs or replacements can be made.

(B) C. Rau and S. Evans say, "Dust should not be permitted to accumulate around either the polepieces or armature of a generator. If such accumulation be permitted, the efficiency of the machine will be more or less impaired. Once each week all dust should be blown out, more especially from around the pole-pieces—where most of the metallic dust will accumulate because of the magnetic attraction."

F. H. and L. Klar, and T. H. Morton say, "Yes, dust accumulations will most certainly decrease generator efficiency. Magnetic attraction causes microscopic bits of metallic dust to gather at the pole-pieces, where they most certainly will, if of sufficient amount, have the effect of reducing or at least altering magnetic action, and since in order that maximum efficiency be had the action must be such as was planned by the engineers, the effect will not be good. Also it is very essential that when we may term copper dust be kept out of the slots between the commutator bars, since if this be not done there is likely to be more or less current leakage from bar to bar, and therefore unnecessary sparking, which not only means electrical loss, but a roughening of the surfaces of the bars themselves."

C. A. Ellison sees it thus: "Metallic dust attached to the magnetized pole-pieces of a generator will certainly operate to decrease efficiency. Not only is this true, but it will collect in the slots between commutator bars where limited shorts and injurious sparking will be formed. Dust getting into the bearings causes undue wear, all of which could easily be eliminated by periodical cleaning."

(C) C. and S. E. Gay answer, "No, but it is regarded as not seriously harmful if movement and sound be 'out' by one or two frames. This, we believe, is not infrequently the case where the sound is joined to the motion after the latter has been made—'dubbing in,' we understand they call it. According to what we have heard and read, (2) frames out of perfect synchronism is not detectable by patrons, though personally we believe the general effect would be better were even that small 'out' not present."

L. A. Weller says, "When the sound and scenes are made at different intervals, the motion and sound may not be in perfect synchronism, but the fault permitted is so slight that the observer will be unable to detect it. When sound and scenes are made on different films, certain marks are used as guides when the two are assembled on one film, the correct matching of which should insure absolute synchronism."

In order that we may all have exactly the correct dope on this matter, concerning which there seems a rather wide difference of opinion, I append the statement of sound engineer, as follows:

"Discounting errors in manufacture, the sound impression on the film is placed to give absolutely correct synchronism in a theatre when the film is properly threaded. In the proper threading of the film the distance between center of picture and the respective sound is 14½ inches. A tolerance of plus or minus one frame is allowable without detectable out-of-sync. Actually on the film itself, the sound is placed 15½ inches from the respective picture. This extra lead of sound takes care of the difference between the speed of light and sound in such manner that at a 75-foot distance the synchonism becomes perfect, and no difference is detectable at other distances found in theatres."

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

Dear Herald:

We wish you would tell Abner that we are home and mighty glad of it. We traveled Minnesota for a week when the mercury monkeyed around 105 to 114 and when we got to Sherm Fitch's RKO office in Sioux Falls, F. D., we were non est inventicus, or words to that effect. Sherm wouldn't let us go to the hotel, but put us to bed in the basement of his office which he said was the coolest place west of Kalamazoo, Mich. Sherm put that basement stuff into us and we are now writing this in the basement of our wigwam, with a bag of ice on our head and a glass of ice lemonade on the stand.

When it comes to service Sherm is 100 per cent plus. He kept us in his basement over the weekend and then sent one of his boys to drive us home. You can't beat that guy Sherm no way you can fix it.

When we got home we found a letter awaiting us from Mr. H. Rankin of the Plaza theatre at Tilbury, Ontario. This letter was addressed to "Mr. Al Jenkins, care Motion Picture Herald, Rockefeller Center, New York". We would like to inform Mr. Rankin that our name is not Al Jenkins. The "WANTED" register carries our initials as "J. C." and if Al (whoever he is) should hear of this he might get awfully sore about it because we presume that Al is a pretty fine chap. Anyhow, Mr. Rankin invites us to come and see him, which was mighty nice of him, but we presume we would have to cross the Detroit River to get there and April Shower gets the miasmi in her transmission every time she goes near the water. We thank Mr. Rankin for his letter just the same.

Then we got a letter from E. E. Beattie of the Strand theatre at Ocean Beach, Cal. Mr. Beattie evidently has taken over the Strand from Mr. Gruber and he says that he needs the HERALD and wants us to have it sent to him. Of course he needs it, and of course we will have it sent to him; that's part of our business, and sending the boys the HERALD is what makes this heat endurable; in fact, all of the boys ought to have the HERALD. We thank Mr. Beattie for his letter. He addressed the letter thusly: "The Colonel who covers the field like an April Shower, Neliegh, Neb." We got it all right

The town is spelled "Neligh" and it is a whistling post on the North Western railroad which runs from Omaha, Neb., to the Black Hills of South Dakota, and in case you can't find it on the map you might refer the matter to Jim Farley; he ought to hunt it up for you, since he hasn't anything else to do, but we want to warn you autoists that when driving to Neligh be sure to observe traffic signals or you might run over some Berkshire shoats or Plymouth Rock hens. We love our shoats and hens. We were very much pleased to receive Mr. Beattie's letter, as we are always pleased to receive letters from all the boys, whether they want the HERALD or not, but we will admit that an order for the HERALD adds a little zest to their letters.

We are wondering if you boys ever met Al Miller of Atkinson, Neb. Al, you know, operates the Lyric theatre up there, and when Al tells the Atkinson folks that he has a good show on at the Lyric they all believe him, that is, all those who are deaf and can't read. Al sent us a clipping from an Omaha paper of Ripley's "Believe It or Not" column and in this column we noted Al's picture, and weren't sure at first whether it was a picture of King Tut or one of 'em that came off the boat that time when Noah landed. If Ripley would publish a picture of us like that we'd sue him for damage. The description under the picture says that he has served on every election board in Atkinson for 56 years, which would indicate that the Atkinson folks have a lot of confidence in his honesty and ability (but we don't know how they could). Al has sucked the same political bottle ever since he was a baby; in fact, he has chewed up 617 nipples, and the wonder is that he hasn't landed in that "believe It or Not" column before.

Al wears the belt for the state of Nebraska for having the most prolific imagination of any man in it, and we believe that territory could be successfully enlarged to include the entire Middle West. We used to wear that belt ourself until Al took it away from us. His descriptions of his wonderful exploits with rod and gun in the early days of Holt County would push the Mighty Nimrod and Izaak Walton back in the A.B.C. class. We wouldn't assume to doubt anything he says, but then—. Should you ever go to Atkinson be sure to go to the Lyric and see a good show, but don't ask Al to tell you of his early experiences. Al has operated the Lyric for 27 years, and that's a long time.

Then on top of it all we started down into the basement a little while ago and we became dizzy and fell down the stairs and took the nail off our big toe slick and clean, and now the nurse has another job, but she's a good nurse. How would you like that, Oscar?

Just to make everything more pleasant and to put us in good humor, the grasshoppers have eaten up everything in our garden and flower garden except our mango peppers, and if they eat those we hope it will give every dodgasted one of 'em the bellyache.

We once read that a wouldbe scientist claimed that our summers would continue to be colder and colder until this country would become a frigid zone. Oh, yeah, with the mercury right now at 106 and around 102 to 109 for the last 21 days.

We wish somebody would hit that guy on top of the head with a soft squash, for he is crazier than a Texas havalena. We claim to be pretty handy throwing the bull ourself, but that rooster makes us look like a monkey. It must be that he is the author of that "Shelterbelt" idea. You know, Gertie, that we crazy people are not all living west of the Mississippi.

The only reason why we would go out to a theatre at all right now would be its cooling system, and Walt Bradley has one in his Moon theatre that will make you wish you had put on your woolen underwear. It's so darn hot, s'pose we quit. Whatjasay?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

EGGS—NOT GOLDEN

As far back as 1934, this pen with vigorous jabs called attention to the menace of permitting stars to appear on radio programs. More than one Round Tabler concurred in pointing out the boxoffice danger of such participation, the general opinion being that in so doing the stars themselves were undermining their own draw. Which very practical dollars-and-cents viewpoint went in one ear and out another as far as the studios were concerned to judge from the deluge of prominent contract players on the air during the past two years and still at it.

It is only recently that the rumblings of dissatisfaction have crystalized into action and from exhibitor organizations throughout the country now come resolutions demanding an end to the practice with stronger moves indicated if these resolutions come to nought.

That theatremen have sought and obtained cooperation with local stations in putting over pictures sets aside any hasty assumption that there is no virtue in the usage of broadcasting as a means of additional publicity. But there are definite limits to such tieins of which smart showmen are well aware and these limits certainly do not include the personal appearance of the players themselves.

Stars who accept radio offers and producers who allow them to do so should be made to realize that demand by air-minded advertisers for picture names is made possible only by the accomplishments of theatremen in building up these players at the ticket window.

In taking radio so to its bosom, the industry is laying an egg, and we don't mean golden.

IMPORTANT TO BOTH

Your Round Table at this time of the year receives pretty picture cards with joyous sentiments from vacationing members and it is gratifying to know that the boys are able to shake off the tough routine for a few weeks, to rest mind and body for a stretch before going back to the Battle of Grosses. More exhibitors this year are making these rest periods possible during the summer months and may as a result look forward to renewed activity from their managers.

Unfortunately not every executive nor for that matter every manager realizes the value of vacationing during the heated period. F'instance, there is one Round Tabler who for home office reasons has twice had to postpone his departure. And another member has allowed his bookings to so encroach upon his vacation period that the chances of his getting away before cold weather are not very bright.

The manager's yearly summer vacation is important both to himself and his superiors. It should not be juggled about.

AND STILL GOING STRONG

No matter which way one may regard the span, a quarter of a century is a long, long time. Thus it is of more than passing interest that 1936 marks the twenty-fifth year in showbusiness for a trio of managers who are going along with no letting down in effort and doing a highly-regarded job in their respective posts.

Congratulated duly for reaching successfully this milestone were two Loew-ites, Vic Morris, of Boston; Matt Saunders, of Bridgeport, and J. P. Masters, of Bowling Green, Ky. Superiors honored, newspapers praised, brother-showmen feted. And well they might.

For these well-timbered theatremen serve as excellent examples of how lightly the years touch upon the shoulders of long-experienced managers who know their way around.

IT'S A HEALTHY SIGN

The appointment by E. L. Alperson of adman Ed Finney to a producer's post with Grand National Films adds another name to the expanding list of those from the field given an opportunity of bringing their years of experience to the making of pictures.

It's a healthy sign.

Wasn't so long ago that the wall between production and other branches of the industry was pretty high and it took quite a combination of circumstances to hoist a man over on the other side. But the recent years have seen a change for the better in this direction.

The high percentage of "clicks" among those who have gone into the studios from distribution and exhibition is reason enough to encourage others from the firing line to lend their savvy in turning out a higher voltage of boxoffice product.

Report Card Plugs "High School Girl"

A novelty gag for his "High School Girl" date was used by Louie Richmond, National Theatre, Boston, Mass., in the form of a report card listing various marks of Cecilia Parker, lead in the picture. Copy below read "a daring dramatic lesson endorsed by press and clergy, all high school girls, parents and friends are hereby notified to report to the," etc.

Electric Cooking School Promoted by Bowser

Out in Warren, Ohio, Les Bowser, assisted by Albert Johnson, advertising man at the Harris-Warren Theatre, have recently inaugurated what they term an all electric cooking school through the cooperation of the local electric power company. All expenses are stood by the company, including publicity and free ads and Les reports this is the first of its kind ever held in his county.

Another stunt put over by these boys is a ladies' day matinee held every Wednesday afternoon. Prices are reduced from 26c to 15c for one hour and a movie star album given to each lady, and each succeeding week star photos, paid for by merchant's ad on reverse side, are given out.

On "Great Ziegfeld" blotters were distributed in downtown office buildings, packets of matches at all cigar counters and several large oil paintings were planted in leading store windows.

Quake Survivors Exploit "San Francisco" for Bovim

Survivors of the San Francisco earthquake of 1906 were requested to communicate with Russ Bovim, Loew's Ohio, Columbus, Ohio, and identify themselves as part of the campaign on "San Francisco." This was done by means of a want ad in the local Dispatch and survivors providing proper proof were awarded guest tickets. Human interest feature story on these was also run in paper.

A contest was also conducted to locate a double for Clark Gable, winner was picked during an evening performance and awarded a cash prize. Theatre organist used the songs from the picture in a musical identification contest over local radio station, with 20 pairs of tickets awarded as prizes. Stunt was plugged on screen and in theatre program.

Police Commissioner Aids "Crime Doesn't Pay" Series

An example of the possibilities of exploitation for the "Crime Doesn't Pay" shorts was demonstrated in Buffalo. Metro's branch manager, E. K. O'Shea, joined hands with Shea's Buffalo Theatre in arranging for Police Commissioner Higgins to go before the mike in their behalf.

Both the Commissioner and his assistant lieutenant, John Regan, appeared in a radio dramatization of "The Perfect Setup," current at the theatre, which was broadcast over station WBNY. Photos of the commissioner and his lieutenant together with stories were run in papers, as a result business was reported to be tops.

Fashions Stressed On "Scotland" Date

Strong campaign for the world premiere of "Mary of Scotland" at the Radio City Music Hall had the RKO Radio and the theatre publicists combining to put over a lot of exploitation that commanded wide attention, groundwork of the drive laid as far back as March.

At that time, an issue of Women's Wear carried an illustrated story—a feature on the costumes of the picture, predicting a trend toward Scotch motifs in the new fall modes. Spirited publicity barrage was also put into effect with special stores and art in the New York press. This included interviews with Dudley Nichols, responsible for the script, who came down from his Connecticut farm for interviews.

Style slants were carried further day ahead of opening when special preview at the Music Hall was held for leading local and syndicate fashion designers, followed by a reception to Walter Plunkett, who designed the picture's costumes. In conjunction an informal fashion review was put on, models wearing the originals and then modern adaptations to illustrate the Scotch motifs. This last was tied in with Macy's and Modern Merchandise Bureau.

Picture was also brought to the attention of the many Scots in the metropolitan sector by a theatre party opening night of the Yonkers Kilty Band in costume and traveling to the Music Hall in bannered busses. United Scottish Clans of New York and New Jersey in the thousands gathered at Jones Beach, nearby ocean resort, were greeted with special ballad named after the title, singer wearing one of the original Hepburn costumes. In the announcement made before the number, the picture and theatre were duly credited.

Peoria Greets Brown At World Premiere

As Peoria, Ill., is the home of the Caterpillar, around which the story of "Earthworm Tractor" was written, good showmanship called for the premiere of the picture in that spot, the opening put over at the Madison Theatre in giant fashion under the wing of Len C. Worley, Great States city manager, and E. G. Fitzgibbons, zone publicity director. Tractor company officials, newspapers and civic heads also came in on the campaign, topped by the personal appearance at the opening of Joe E. Brown.

This event was of course made much of locally. Mayor proclaimed a Brown Day, streets were decorated and lighted, the festivities put on with all the premiere accessories, including lobby broadcast to introduce the celebrities. "Earthworm Black," new style color, was advertised by women's stories in conjunction with the opening and many social gatherings duly publicised were held before and after the performance.

Newspapers gave the star everything in the house, to judge from the tear sheets. In addition to the pages and pages of stories, interviews and art, autographed photos were given to those advertising on classified page and tickets to the opening offered for subscriptions. "Hyperbole" contest for most exaggerated description of the star was also run for five days, paper carrying daily photos and two-column stories on the stunt. Co-op "welcome" ads were numerous, especially five-column full taken by the tractor company.

Radio Sponsor Cooperates On New Crosby Picture

Paramount has effected an arrangement with Kraft-Phenix, Bing Crosby's radio sponsor for tiein on "Rhythm on the Range" wherein the food company has published a manual on the tiein for information of salesmen and distributors. Sponsor has put out display card carrying title, photo of Crosby and Bob Burns, with space at top for theatre.

Salesmen will be supplied with dates on the picture and are expected to work with managers in their territories and also retail outlets. The card is the main accessory for the tieup but other exploitations are encouraged to benefit both sides.

SMALL TOWN STUFF. Swingin' gates, grass mats, etc., were eye-catchers in Manager Louis Fishkin's flash on "Small Town Girl" at the Commodore Theatre, over the river in Brooklyn, New York.

SIX WEEKS ADVANCE. To build up the date on "Anthony Adverse," Philadelphia Warnerites Skip Weshner and Harry Goldberg utilized the temporarily closed Aldine Theatre for extra publicity, starting six weeks ahead. Marquee, electric sign, stills and special displays effectively covered the front.

City Extends Welcome To Newest Theatre

With the opening of the new Salida, Salida, Colo., unit of the Atlas Theatres group, local prominents turned out to honor the occasion and all the folks connected with the enterprise, headed by C. U. Yager, circuit president, and district manager Dave Davis and Frank R. Kelly.

Local paper ran a special four-page section, top story being a two-column full on Harry R. Moore, manager of the Salida and also the Isis, other local Atlas house. Head was full-page streamer and story included large cut of the highly-regarded theatreman.

12-Day Want Ad Tiein Publicizes Four Dates

Results for both sides on classified tieins were evidently highly satisfactory in Kingston, Ontario, judging by tear sheets on recent contests put over between the local Whig-Standard and Manager F. J. McCoy, of Famous Players-Canadian's Tivoli Theatre. McCoy sends along details of four such tieins, each running three days, making a total of 12 days of extra advertising.

One of the contests was to fill in fourth line of printed jingles, of which this is an instance: "A house to rent, a farm to sell; A man to dig your garden well; The ads will find just what you need"—with suggested last line given: "And do it with a burst of speed."

Another slant was to write a sentence suitable for the streamer across the top of classified page, and a third, to select single lines, one from each of three classified ads, and to run them as one ad with the purpose of making it humorous or unusual.

In all the contests two guest tickets were given to each of ten winners and in return the paper contributed a series of two-column ten-inch displays which included contest rules and theatre credits.

"Showboat" Calliope Greets New Liner

It so happened that the Queen Mary, new British boat, was due at Southampton the day of the premiere of "Show Boat" at the Leicester Square Theatre, London. And as Irene Dunne and director James Whale were aboard, General Film Distributors prepared a welcome that was well publicized before the thousands gathered to greet the Queen Mary's arrival.

Bannered tended carrying calliope steamed out to await the liner's arrival and on meeting the "Queen," the hit tunes were played as the tender preceded the ship into the dock. One banner read: "Two famous ships arrive—the Queen Mary at Southampton and Universal's Show Boat at the Leicester Square Theatre." Another welcomed Dunne and Whale. When the tender docked across from the Queen Mary, handbills were distributed among the crowds that gathered.

Campaign was handled by publicity director L. Stewart working with the theatre.

Mayor Proclaims Week For "Hit and Run Driver"

A special screening of "Hit and Run Driver" was held a week ahead for the mayor and city officials by R. W. Rhodes, New Weller Theatre, Zanesville, Ohio, with the mayor proclaiming a "drive carefully week," pictures and story running in papers showing Hizonner signing and endorsing the proclamation.

Several ministers included the theme of picture in their sermons, municipal court judge endorsed the picture, sentencing all reckless drivers to see the picture and newspaper ran photo and story of traffic officers bringing reckless driver to the theatre to witness the picture. President of the Auto Club mailed notices to all members, wrecked car was planted on courthouse square (see photo) with appropriate copy and cards displayed in windows and tacked on busses.

Lamm Ties Up Paper On "Bullets or Ballots"

Classified ad page was tied up to Louis Lamm's "Bullets or Ballots" date at the Palace in Lorain, Ohio, with names and addresses scattered throughout page. To those finding their names and calling at the offices of the Journal and Times-Herald tickets were awarded.

No cost heralds were distributed house to house, paid for by merchant's ad on reverse side, as were tabloids, jumbo cards placed in windows and cards on dashboards of street cars.

Semel Goes to Town With "Mr. Deeds"

To sell his "Deeds" date at the Marboro Theatre in Brooklyn, Herman Semel had cards distributed about town with bright new pennies pasted to them and copy reading "here's your share of the $20,000,000 given away when Mr. Deeds goes to Town." Cost was paid for by local beauty shop whose ad was carried on the cards.

Imprinted blotters were handed out, through cooperation of local photo studio roving photographer snapped pedestrians and to those identifying their faces circled on lobby easel, tickets were awarded.

Stage Wedding Held By Floyd at Granada

As part of his stage wedding at the New Granada, Sioux Falls, S. D., in connection with "And So They Were Married," Joe Floyd, in addition to tying up merchants for gifts to the bridal pair, promoted them for prizes to the couple who had the largest family, married the longest, golden wedding couples and the couple coming the greatest distance to witness the stage wedding.

Hotels donated bridal suite, local auto dealer came forth with car, gas and driver for two-day trip to Omaha and back, cafe a bridal breakfast for ten and Joe was even a little anticipatory and provided a baby carriage. Entire campaign was not only advertised by the newspaper, but through the radio station and special 24-sheet posters about town for which posting company stood half cost to tie in on the wedding publicity.

In securing the bride and groom, ad was placed in paper four days ahead, stage was decorated and couple with best man and bridesmaids marched down aisles up to stage while the organ played the wedding march. Accompanying photo shows the couple on stage with wedding party.

Charninsky Dresses Front For "Sutter's Gold"

Depend on Louis Charninsky to dress up his front as witness accompanying photo for his "Sutter's Gold" date at the Capitol in Dallas; that's Louie to the right. Hitching post was stationed on sidewalk, solid shingle roof across entire front and box-office and both sides were made of old lumber.

Special setpiece was constructed for lobby with cutout head of Edward Arnold and title of picture in gold metallic letters. Two men dressed as old time prospectors were planted in lobby playing flutes, as did Lee Tracy in the picture.

For "Devil's Squadron," Louie tied up aviation school, receiving announcements at aviation field daily. School loaned motors for lobby display and arranged it so that it was crashing through a six-sheet board, attracting plenty of attention.

Ableson Stages Campaign For New Theatre Opening

With the opening of the new Hollywood Theatre, Devils Lake, N. D., Art Ableson put over an effective campaign featuring a parade and two band concerts in front of the theatre given by the 68-piece Governor's Boys' Concert Band.

Get-together party was held with city officials and prominent businessmen attending, newspapers coming through with pages on opening with photos of the new house. Special ad was run listing important dates in history winding up with opening date.

Claim Stakes Used By Wilbern For "Gold"

Claim stakes carrying picture copy were placed in all Main Street flag-pole holes by Manager R. F. Wilbern, Palace, Duncan, Okla., on "Sutter's Gold." During the showing, boy dressed as a prospector, leading a bannered mule carrying pack, picks, shovel, frying pans, etc., toured the main business districts.

Money sacks filled with rock were placed at the base of three-sheet art board week ahead by Arlie Crites, Rex, Borger, Tex., on "Desert Gold." Also helpful was a Sign Language contest in local daily with guest tickets to the first ten correct replies.

"White Angel" Float Sells Date for Pratt

The float was a huge affair completely covered with flowers, with picture's title and theatre name standing out against a white background of beautiful flowers. A girl, dressed in a nurse's robe similar to that worn by Kay Frances as Florence Nightingale, was stationed on a raised platform at one end. Rising above the center of the display was the Red Cross emblem designed in flowers.

Griffiths' Circuit Recent Activities

Reported by various of the Griffiths circuit theatremen in Oklahoma and Texas and forwarded by circuit ad chief C. O. Fulgham are exploitation and publicity activities recently effected that obtained a lot of coverage, among them the old but still reliable stage wedding as promoted by Alvin Powell, of the Guthrie, Okla., houses and detailed by Powell as follows:

Tieup was made with paper which ran ads two weeks ahead for a bride and groom. The couple secured, license, minister, ring and gifts from cooperating merchants were obtained with a total cost to the theatre of $19. Newspaper continued to build up the event with page one stories withholding the names of the couple and the minister, thus creating more interest.

For the actual wedding, stage was set as the minister's living room and to the strains of the wedding march on the house p.a. system, curtain opened showing minister reading a paper. Answering knock on the door, minister ushered in the couple and their witnesses, and before performing the actual ceremony, accompanied by playing of "I Love You Truly," gave short talk on the sanctity and responsibilities of marriage. Finale was wedding march for exit.

Lyman Sends to Arkansas For Pine Trees and Bark Slabs

That there were no pines handy to the theatre for decoration on his date for "Lonesome Pine" at the Lyric, Vinita, Okla., did not deter Manager Foster Lyman, who contacted a saw mill down in Arkansas to secure two tall pine trees, pine burrs and long slabs of bark. Front was enclosed with the pine bark to resemble a log cabin, leaving two openings for doorways. Burrs were scattered over the marquee and the trees with colored lights in small barrels placed at each corner of the marquee.

Three sheet board mounted on a box board piece and framed with strips of pine was fitted over brass frames in front of boxoffice and on either side of door were displays of photos also framed in pine. Rustic sign with title in blue lettering was suspended under the marquee. Lettered wooden arrows pointing in direction of theatre were placed for three blocks on each side of house and old wall-paper circulars inserted in out-of-town and local newspapers.

Manager Announced as Candidate For Better Business on "Ballots"

His date on "Bullets or Ballots" coming at the time of local elections, Manager David Dallas, Grand, Holdenville, Okla., utilized this slant in various ways, by announcing, for instance, that all county candidates for office would be admitted free to see the picture. Dallas also attended a political rally in a nearby spot having himself introduced as a candidate for better business at the Grand and urging the audience to see it.

For street bally, doorman was dressed as old-time Tammany politician in derby hat and loud checkered suit, and distributed cards reading: "Vote for Me—By attending the Gala "Bullets or Ballots" Political Prevue tonight, etc."

On the same picture, Manager Hal Grady, Palace, Lubbock, Texas, broke the local front pages by persuading the sheriff to act as host at the theatre to prisoners who were held for minor misdemeanor charges. Hal was not allowed to go through with it due to proximity of election time but did land page one publicity under the caption: "Jailbirds Make Escape, But Only For Show."

For "Sons o' Guns," Grady pulled a neat one with a lobby idea showing a baby buggy with large and medium sized guns labelled "Papa Gun" and "Mama Gun" and inside the buggy, two smaller pistols labelled "Sons o' Guns" with tiein theatre copy.

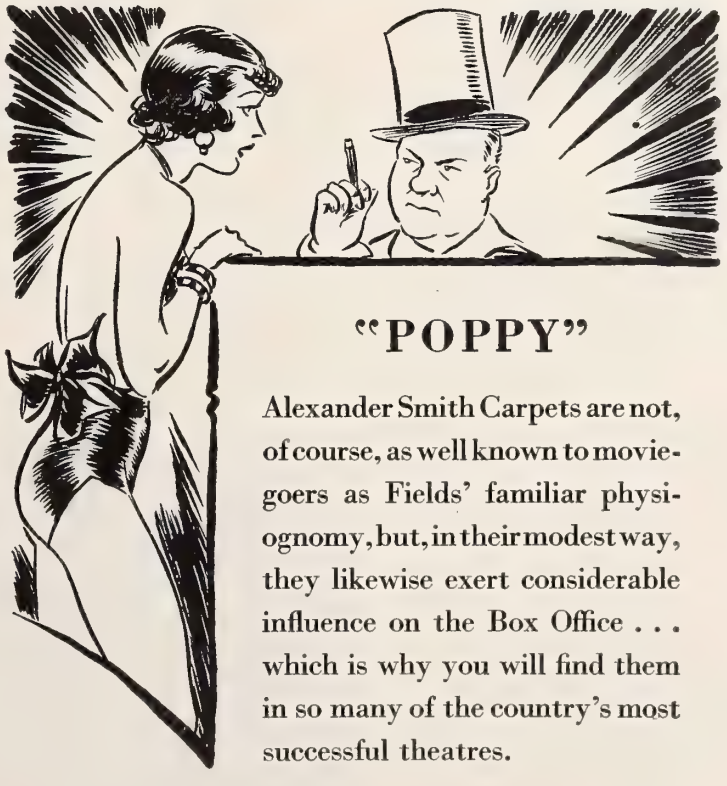
Effective Devices Are Employed To Attract Lobby Attention

Other interesting slants contributed by the Griffiths theatremen include a giant telephone, 14 feet high, built and used in outer lobby on "Private Number" by Mrs. L. G. Killough, manager, McSwain, Ada, Okla. Phone was set in front of background that carried stills. Title was spelt out in cord that ran to the receiver of the phone.

For "First Baby," Manager George Limerick, Palace, Cleburne, Tex., hung out a clothesline of diapers, cutout letters of the title in black attached to the diapers.

Hangman's scaffold with dummy dangling from end of rope was Manager C. F. Motley's idea on "Last Outlaw" with appropriate copy hooking the slant to the picture.

On "I Married A Doctor," Manager Ralph Leachman, Palace, Blackwell, Okla., mailed personal invitations to all local doctors' wives asking that comments on the picture be penned on the letters and turned in at the boxoffice.



Alper's Atmospheric "Flags" Display

Alper Dresses Theatre For "Under Two Flags"

A corner of the lounge of the Alba Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. was converted into a legionnaire camp by Murray Alper (see photo) for his "Under Two Flags" date with usher and usherette dressed in promoted legion uniforms stationed at beaverboard fortress. Flags were promoted from French and English steamship lines, sand was sprinkled around tent and one sheet was placed inside.

Opening day parade was held with veterans of nearby post marching to theatre with banners, bugle and drum corps. Usher dressed in Legionnaire uniform distributed folders on streets, back bannered with theatre, title and playdates, box office was turned into fort effect with stone turrets and windows cutout of beaver board and local florist stationed uniformed boy in window standing at attention beside small tent.

"POPPY"

Alexander Smith Carpets are not, of course, as well known to moviegoers as Fields' familiar physiognomy, but, in their modest way, they likewise exert considerable influence on the Box Office . . . which is why you will find them in so many of the country's most successful theatres.

Round Tablers Report Further Ideas

Unique Co-op Page Created by Adams

From up in Montreal, Manager J. C. Adams, Loew's Metropolitan, lists a number of exploitations put on with various of his vaudeville dates, outstanding among which is a different sort of a full-page co-op on the date for the Olsen & Johnson stage unit. Page took the form of a shopping visit to various stores, and at each stop a photo was taken with the stars in some action shot having to do with the store merchandise or service. Nine of these shots of equal size were used, each carrying a five-line caption. Two-line streamer across the top carried the theatre and star credits.

Another tie-in that clicked for Adams had to do with Huber, the magician, who freed himself from a straight-jacket while suspended from the top of the theatre building. Local firemen held life-nets below and Adams spotted a large theatre banner conspicuously for the crowds that gathered and blocked traffic.

Find "Fourth" Parties Build Good Will

Among the toppers favored by Frank Boucher, now at the Metropolitan, Washington, D. C., the Fourth of July goodwill party is listed. Boucher has put this on in various spots and staged it under the auspices of newspaper and civic club to promote safe-and-sane Fourth. Parade of children carrying American flags, contributed by club and stores, makes the main section of town and winds up at theatre where special show of repeat feature or shorts is shown. The party is usually good for a flock of page-one publicity.

Big in returns also was a 13-week amateur contest put on by Frank in Lynchburg, Va., sponsored by local merchant, half hour weekly program broadcast from the stage of the Paramount Theatre and entire cost borne by station and merchant. Talent was secured locally and from drawing area bringing in a lot of extra business and was so successful that a second series was put on immediately after the first was completed.

For benefit of local charity, on "Copperfield," Boucher obtained copy of the script of the picture from the studios and auctioned it off from the stage. Built up in advance with a lot of publicity, the stunt aided the showing and contributed to the theatre prestige.

Turtles and Trick Ford Are Moyer Standouts

Over in Hanover, Pa., Charley Moyer recently dug up an old Ford from the junk pile, cut the body in two and on the rear planted the front, hood lamps, wheel, etc., from another old Ford roadster body. Two drivers were used, facing each way, with the one facing the front of course doing the actual driving and going into reverse to make it appear as though the outfit had two separate power plants.

AIR COOLED THEATRE AIDS SUFFERERS

Charley Zinn, of the Uptown, Minneapolis, discovered last summer that folks afflicted with hay fever and other sicknesses found relief from their ills by attending the theatre. Zinn relayed this information to scores of local doctors, advising that patients might receive the same benefits by regular attendance at the Uptown. The medicos cooperated, with the result that a lot of new patronage was built up, including, says Charley, many expectant mothers.

Hunt's Junior Critics Club Gets School Cooperation

In the fall of 1934, George Hunt, Jr., says he was having difficulty in getting school cooperation on worthwhile pictures shown at Loew's United Artists, Louisville, Ky. To break down this resistance, a Junior Critics Club was started in one of the junior high schools which made attendance necessary at the theatre in order to write proper reviews. Idea spread quickly and now has become a Motion Picture Appreciation Club now functioning at all the local junior highs. Picture advertising is now allowed on school bulletin boards.

On "Fauntleroy," Hunt held a screening for the inmates at a crippled children's home where loudspeaker was hooked to telephone and Freddie Bartholomew spoke to the youngsters over long distance from the studios. Publicity on this, as to be expected, was very big.

Situated in the home of the famous annual Derby horse race, some years back Hunt says he started a Derby contest with one of the papers, with different stars being named as jockeys and readers invited to pick the winning horses. Stunt went over so well, he reports that it has been picked up in many other spots for the same occasion.

Profits on Special Shows During Summer Months

In St. Louis, some years back, S. G. Cardas, now at Loew's State, Los Angeles, put on a number of special shows sponsored by different companies such as candy, novelties, shoes and ice cream manufacturers. Each of these advertised the events heavily, paid all expenses including the special shows and plugged the parties on the radio. Theatre received a flat sum, which was net, and put on before opening time, the shows did not interfere with the regular performances.

Purely as a stunt, on a date for the late George Beban, Cardas arranged with the woman in the show playing an Italian mother who could not speak English, to post herself on a busy corner and pretend she was lost. Picked up by the traffic officer and escorted to the station, the gag went over to the extent that the papers carried the story including names of the theatre, attraction and the date.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Chevalier "Proxy" Receives City Welcome

On a Maurice Chevalier picture in Youngstown, Ohio, Sig Solomon put over a citywide welcome as part of an itinerary contest to decide how the star should be entertained, were he to visit the city for 24 hours. Wax figure, dressed in costume of the star was met at the railroad station and escorted to the leading hotel with a parade. Then followed a round of personal appearances, all this heavily publicized.

Chevalier had wired that he could not come but was sending his proxy and Sig reports the humor of the slant helped to bring out a crowd and the contest angle also contributing to build up the idea generally. Similar stunt in which a Mae West "double," a professional model, on "Goin' to Town" was used is another "welcome" gag that worked well for Solomon last year in Newark. Campaign detailed in the Round Table pages was prominent in the Quigley Awards.

Air Stunts Click

In advance of date on "Sky Bride," Solomon promoted a couple to be married in a plane flying above the city, the Mayor officiating with leading localities and Sig as witnesses. Newspapers got after it by querying whether or not a civic official had vested authority to perform a marriage off the ground so the Round Tabler settled it by putting on a stage wedding the same night and promoted a lot of gifts to the couple.

On "Young Eagles," Sig dug up an eight-place plane, placed it across two seven-ton trucks and had it driven to the theatre with the implied intention of placing it on the theatre marquee, which, of course, did not have room for the huge plane. Traffic, however, was effectively tied up and as Solomon conducted the proceedings from the cockpit of the plane, he was given a ticket for holding up the works. This, with story of the gag, was good enough for a page-one story with suitable theatre mention.

On "Best" Box Office Exploitations

Screening for the Blind Nets Unusual Publicity

In an earnest effort to ascertain just how much a blind person could "see" or perceive through the sense of hearing and also of course for publicity purposes, Jack Simons, Loew's Poli, Hartford, reports as among his top exploitations a tiein some years back in Pittsburgh to screen a picture for a specially selected group from the Western Penn. Institute for the Blind. Guests all were able to read and write Braille and were requested after the screening to write an essay covering the story and scenes.

Professors in medicine and education, psychologists and other scientists from the local universities attended and of course the newspapers played up the story from an educational and experimental standpoint. Stunt was put on ahead of "Coquette," this feature selected because there were few scenes in the picture. Experiment was a big success and the fine publicity built up the date for much extra business.

Fires Mountainside on "City Lights"

His most sensational stunt, says Simons, was the setting afire of a mountainside, which also took place in Pittsburgh. The city is in a valley and surrounded by a huge range, Mt. Washington, the ridge of which can be seen from everywhere in the city. Jack secured hundreds of red fire sticks and mustered an army of boys to carry them to the mountain and place them at certain distances apart. At a given hour the fires were lit and shortly after phone calls poured into the newspaper offices inquiring about the "fire."

Papers not being let in on the stunt sent over reporters to see what is was all about and Simons spilled that it was a gag for the date on "City Lights." Papers passed along the information to inquirers and also ran a page-one story that duly explained the "fire."

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Howard Waugh Lists Some "Firsts" Stunts

From his voluminous files, Warner Theatre Kentucky zone chieftain, Howard Waugh, sets down some original slants he lists as being originally used by him, a "first" now in general use being the painting of the sidewalk in front of the theatre a pure white to create an effect of coolness under summer lights. Although the idea has been copied and often used with the checkerboard variation, Waugh opines that pure white is the most effective under lights providing the paint is renewed frequently.

Summer garden out front was also inaugurated by Howard at the Uptown Theatre, in Philadelphia, permission being obtained from the city. Grass, soft lighting, rustic furniture were placed along the sidewalk and when passersby sat down to rest themselves, iced tea, promoted, was served.

On "42nd Street," Waugh got plenty of returns from use of a mechanical policeman out front to direct traffic automatically. Stunt was a traffic-stopper for keeps and an excellent word-of-mouth spreader.

HOLDS CONTESTS FOR BEST COUNTY BAND

It seems that in Amsterdam, N. Y., there are five bands, the members of which were continuously involved in the question of superiority. So, to settle the matter, Eddie De Cosmo, at the Strand Theatre, volunteered to discover the best by means of a series of contests wherein each of the bands performed, one a week, from the stage. Silver cup was promoted from local jeweler and awarded to the winners, designated from then on as the best in the county. Boxoffice reaction was aces, says Eddie.

"Movie Memory" Star Idea Tops Newkirk Slants

Jack Newkirk, Loew's Granada, Cleveland, promoted a "Greater Sales and Show Month" with 40 of his neighborhood merchants, and featured a 'movie memory' star contest as follows: Each store placed in its window, unidentified photo of a star. Patrons were asked to make the rounds of the stores, mark down the names of all the stars on entry blanks available at all stores, and also name two pictures in which each of the stars had appeared. Blanks when filled were deposited at theatre for prizes of over $200 in cash, given by the merchants.

Stores also went to the expense of putting up shields on lampposts, participated in a full co-op page and radio programs for extra publicity contest was highly successful with mayor of Cleveland awarding prizes at a dinner given by the merchants.

Recommended also by Newkirk is an Egg Coloring Contest put over last Easter with results good enough to be worked again next year. Neighborhood paper sponsored the idea which allowed readers to enter colored eggs to be displayed in theatre lobby for cash prizes. Paper started the gag three weeks ahead and hundreds of eggs were received.

INFORMATION BOOTH. One of the builder-uppers on "Green Pastures" at the Hipp, Cleveland, was an information booth in lobby, "thunk up" by Warner publicists, Dannenberg and Goodman.

Local Girl Contest For Opening Hostess

Recommended by Dick Wright, Warner Theatres Cleveland zone district manager, is tiein with department store worked on "Golden Arrow," wherein store was requested to choose good-looking blonde to be hostess on opening night, girl to stand under spot and greet patrons. Store furnished entire ensemble, duplicate of that worn by star in picture and indicated by still photos.

Flash of the hostess in costume is run in the newsreel with proper credits and store runs series of ads illustrating various items in the ensemble and of course referring to the picture with cut of star. Window displays are also in order.

Newspaper mixed "Caption Contest" is another Wright suggestion also worked on the Davis picture, whereby are selected a scene still from four different attractions in which Davis has appeared. Each of the stills includes the leading man and are run, one a day, each scene being captioned erroneously. Idea is to identify players and pictures from which stills are taken, and contest assures four art breaks for star and plug for current attraction.

Rose Invites Old Couples To a Dinner at Eight

Over in the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn, New York, Sam Rose, on his date for "Dinner at Eight" at Loew's Bay Ridge, tied in with community newspaper to find the eight oldest couples in that section to be guests of the theatre for dinner. Strong tie-in was put on for date on "Big Drive" with aid of local Legion Post parading with Boy Scouts through the main streets to the theatre. Lobby display of implements was borrowed from nearby Fort Hamilton and Legion members acted as ushers.

For the Loew 30th Anniversary, in 1934, Rose promoted a 200-pound birthday cake displayed in the lobby and later brought to the stage where local judges and civic officials did the cutting and distributing to patrons.

Newspaper Tieins Do Well For Famous Players-Canadians

Up in Kingston, Ontario, leading newspaper put on a circulation drive to reach folks outside the immediate district and to stimulate the campaign Ernie Smithies of the Capitol offered two guest tickets with each new yearly subscription. Paper in return gave the theatre a number of full-page ads on coming pictures during the month of the drive and otherwise publicized the tie-in. The idea went over so well that the paper repeated offer the following month.

Ernie Moule, of the Capitol, Brantford, Ontario, sends along tear sheets on recent "Spring Festival" campaign showing how he promoted eight full pages of ads with leading merchants and also secured fine window and lobby displays, his campaign netting him the district prize in a circuitwide contest.

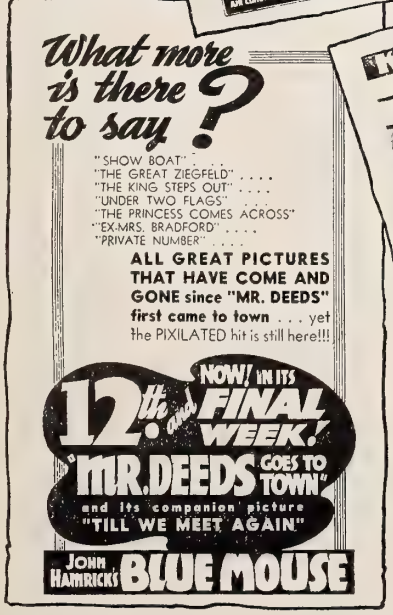
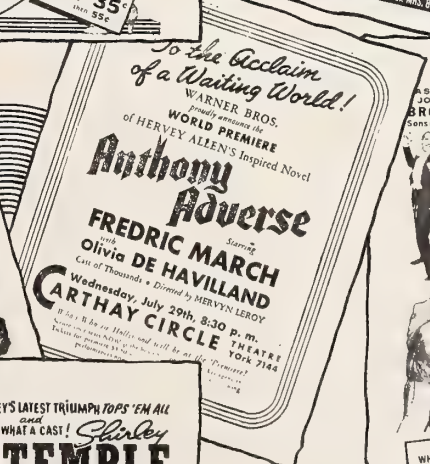
NEWSPAPER ADS FROM AFIELD





TOP U. S. FILMS GIVE NEW LIFE TO THE THEATRES OF URUGUAY

Distributors Increase Advertising and Newspapers Cooperate; Glucksmann Prepares for Wider RKO Activity

by PAUL BODO
in Montevideo

From the point of view of the box-office, the motion picture season in Uruguay is the most satisfactory in years. There is a considerably increased theatre attendance with positive signs that the public preference for film entertainment is permanent.

Last year in most of the houses large attendance was registered only on Saturdays and Sundays and in the second and third class houses on the socalled "dia popular"—popular days—when the admission fee is reduced to 0.30 pesos (15 cents). During working days, most of the theatres were not able to cover expenses and had to pay the losses out of Saturday and Sunday business.

This year completely sold-out first-run houses are not rare, and the subsequent-run theatres also are working quite satisfactorily. Local exhibitors believe the better business is a logical consequence of the great number of first-class American pictures. Last year almost all the great productions were exhibited at the beginning of the season, in April and the first weeks of May. Then the box-office had good results, but as later the quality of product dropped the public immediately registered its reaction at the box-office.

This year all exhibitors are able to present good pictures throughout the season. All distributors are increasing their advertising and exploitation. Newspapers are giving more free space and the public is showing more interest in all phases of the cinema.

American pictures are on the top. Shirley Temple has the same drawing power here as in other countries. "Ricitos de Oro" ("Curly Top") gave excellent results. Good business also was done with "Sombrero de Copa" ("Top Hat") and "Capitán Rojo" ("Captain Blood"). The best picture to date at the box office is "La Vida Trágica del Luis Pasteur."

In second rank, French pictures have brought good business, but only in the first-class houses, as the majority of their public speak and understand French.

British and German pictures are shown in the stage theatre of the SODRE, official radio station, transformed into a film house. While the local representative of Gaumont British and Allianza Film last year released but two pictures, he now is presenting a number of old productions of the company. Although the attendance is not very great, the business done is rather satisfactory, as the operating costs are low and the pictures have been well received in the second and third run houses.

Of the American producers represented here, only MGM so far has not presented any new picture, this because its releasing plans were being delayed for the opening of the new Cine Metro.

RKO Expanding Activities

After a few hours in our city, Ben Y. Cammack, foreign sales manager of RKO, continued on his way to Buenos Aires. Mr. Cammack is on a South American tour of inspection of the RKO offices in Argentine, Chile and Uruguay, and is preparing more intensive activity of these branches in view of the expanding production and distribution plans of his company. RKO has distribution branches also in Buenos Aires, Rosario, Tucumán, Santa Fé and Bahia. From Argentine Mr. Cammack is going to Chile to visit Santiago and Valparaiso, and in the return trip will stay a few days at Montevideo.

The local representative of RKO has founded a new company in order to extend his activities. Radio Cinema S. A. has Don Bernardo Glucksmann as president and René and Carlos Glucksmann as directors. Authorized initial capital is 20,000 Uruguay pesos, divided into two series of 10,000 each. This capital may be increased according to the requirements of the business up to 100,000 by issuance of corresponding shares in series of 10,000 each.

Business Is Called Satisfactory, Low Operating Costs and High Standard Product Offsetting Light Attendance

The new company, according to its by-laws, is authorized to transact business in the fields of the theatre, motion pictures, music, photos and the like, throughout the Republic of Uruguay.

Radio Cinema S. A. will act as representative and distributor for RKO, representation previously held by Don Bernardo Glucksmann under his private firm's name.

The heirs of the late owner of the Lux cinema are negotiating with Bernardo Glucksmann for the sale of this property, which will be added to the Glucksmann circuit after improvements.

Chaplin Film Well Received

Never was a picture awaited with more interest than "Tiempos Modernos" ("Modern Times"), presented for the first time in Latin America, in Montevideo, Uruguay is the sixth country in which this Charles Chaplin production has been shown. The picture reached our screen after considerable cuts; many scenes published in newspaper stills were missing, but our public nevertheless received it with unusual enthusiasm. As Montevideo attendance represents the average public of Spanish America, there is no doubt that "Tiempos Modernos" will be one of the greatest hits of the year.

Our public doesn't understand English and was fully satisfied with the superimposed titles and the few scenes dubbed in Spanish.

Guy P. Morgan, general manager of United Artists Corporation of Argentina, who had come from Buenos Aires to assist the Chaplin premiere, told me that "Chaplin has the same power as in his former pictures to conquer the hearts of the South American public."

First Broadcast of Premiere

"Tiempos Modernos" was presented simultaneously in two Glucksmann theatres, the Rex and the Cine Ariel. The front of the Rex theatre was covered up to the second floor with a Chaplin head and figure and enormous inscriptions. A special "Modern Times" lobby display had been built.

For the first time in Montevideo a premiere was broadcast. Nebio Caporale Scelta, publicity manager of the Glucksmann circuit, acted as master of ceremonies and before the microphone installed in the foyer of the Rex theatre representative figures of the press, literature and theatre spoke over CX 14 and CX 16.

Chaplin's picture was presented after an excellent publicity campaign.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

"TRUE PAGES of LIFE"

RARE exemplification of the possibilities for new high attainments by the motion picture in terms of both art and social service is afforded in a new project presented by Mr. Samuel Cummins, who is by way of becoming celebrated for his unwavering devotion to the higher functions of the cinema.

In substance it appears that Mr. Cummins is thinking about a dream masterpiece that might be achieved by casting Miss Mary Astor in a Hollywood made version of that much discussed, censored and bedevilled lily-flower of the camera, made in Czechoslovakia and entitled "Extase".

The concept is to be hailed as one of those masterful inspirations of showmanship, notable for its independent courage, its self-sacrificing devotion to service, to realism, to the true and the beautiful. It is the apogee of something.

With consistent originality Mr. Cummins, ignoring quite the usual channels of announcement in the world of the motion picture, has chosen rather that remarkable tribune of expression, the "Voice of the People" department on the editorial page of The Daily News of New York. His communication, as presented in that paper in the issue of August 6th, reads:

> Manhattan: We have offered Mary Astor a proposition to play the leading part in our motion picture, "Ecstasy". The present picture, which was imported from Europe, seems to be over the head of the average moviegoer. "Ecstasy" is a symbolic picture with very little dialogue, portraying the true pages of life. In view of the fact that we feel that Mary Astor, through the publicity she has been receiving and the diary she has been keeping, knows the meaning of true ecstasy, we are making her this offer and hope she accepts. If Mary Astor accepts our proposition, we will arrange to have Gustav Machaty, the director of "Ecstasy", come to this country and make the picture in Hollywood.
> SAMUEL CUMMINS,
> General Manager, Jewel Productions, Inc.

In the next column is a letter protesting the News' attention to the Mary Astor case in Hollywood, signed "Disgusted", and there's another letter about a naughty daughter signed "God Have Mercy". The three make a nice bouquet.

MISS ASTOR'S reaction to the proposal to appear as the star, in the very title role in fact, of "Ecstasy" has not yet been recorded, but if one may venture a guess at the Hollywood situation it seems just possible that she might not be too busy.

Published excerpts from Miss Astor's diary, read in court and thoughtfully set down for their educational value by the tabloid press, suggest large possibilities of enhancements of the Czechoslovakian "Extase" script. Mr. Cummins, one would surmise, can hardly ignore the indications that if the lady is the perfect heroine for his favorite role she is also apparently a writer of unusual competency in dealing with vibrant themes and motivations.

The high point of drama in "Extase" as it was shown abroad was achieved in a sequence recording the flow of expression over the face of the heroine while, in pursuit of the script, she was biologically engaged. The exquisite subtlety of what may be called the "de Machaty touch" is here evidenced by moving the not quite candid camera up to cover a facial close-up only. That makes a spectator realize the analytical depth of Mr. Cummins' words when he typifies the production as "a symbolic picture with very little dialogue, portraying the true pages of life".

THE picture, which appears to be Mr. Cummins' for his uses in the cause of the "true pages of life" in the United States, has had, in fact is still having, an international career. It was made in Czechoslovakia about 1933.

At the 1934 International Film Exposition in Venice, Italy, which in screen matters is usually acutely critical and conservative, let "Extase" in and it became for the Venetian show what Sally Rand was to the Chicago fair.

The verisimilitude of the sparkling drama of ten reels and three hundred words was such that Mr. Fritz Mandel, munitions magnate of Hirtenberg, having married the star of the piece, Miss Hedy Kiesler, is credited with having since bought up every available print of the production and is said to have encouraged its suppression in all lands.

This suggests a possibility of a most confusing difference of opinion concerning the social values involved, or maybe just the art.

Meanwhile, as Motion Picture Herald has recorded, the first print of "Extase" got into the toils of the U. S. customs office on moral grounds, was inadvertently burned by a U. S. marshal and was in time replaced, during appeal, by a new print, said to be a new version, from Prague, which was admitted to the country. It is probably this second print which

Filming 'Classics'

Increasing use of the classics as source material for motion pictures and the tapping of a new market in connection with their exploitation is brought to attention by the forthcoming release of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," the fifth of the Bard's plays to be produced or scheduled in two years. Producers are turning more and more to literary masterpieces in the effort to raise the standard of production. Intensive campaigning by the organized industry through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America is designed to attract new audiences conservatively estimated at 36,000,000, the majority of whom attend motion pictures once a month at best. Schools, libraries and social and civic groups have been welded into an effective means of reaching these potential patrons.

Lists of titles, classical and semi-classical, and of the number of best sellers which have been made into motion pictures are analyzed and their significance in the general trend of production is shown on page 13.

Distributors Win

Industry attention centered again this week on the fight of exhibitors to obtain "fair practices" in their relations with the major distributing organizations and large competitive circuits. The 10-point program of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America seemed to be making no progress, with sales executives busy on new contracts and Ed Kuykendall not in New York to drive the movement forward. Significance of the Kansas City Federal Court's dismissal of the Emanuel Rolsky anti-trust suit against Fox Midwest Theatres and major distributors was a subject of general discussion.

For details, see the story beginning on page 53.

Negro Theatres

The American negro is fast becoming an important part of the general motion picture audience and during the past decade the number of theatres in the country playing exclusively to the colored has increased until today there are approximately 800 such houses scattered throughout 32 states.

For details see the story on page 27.

Spain and Films

Harry C. Plummer, writing in long-hand from his improvised headquarters in the American consular office at Barcelona, reports to Motion Picture Herald, as its Spanish correspondent, on the full effect to date of the civil war in that country in its relation to the motion picture business.

See page 47.

Pictures and Politics

While newspapers droned an editorial accompaniment and political speakers seized upon the topic as rostrum ammunition, Republicans and Democrats met in wordy battle inspired by the WPA-Pathe News contract to film governmentally-financed projects for theatrical exhibition. From the Republican National Committee came forthright charges that relief funds were being utilized for propaganda purposes. From the WPA came prompt retort that Republicans had established every precedent for Federal production of motion pictures. Meanwhile, work was started on production of the first film to be made under the contract, showing the results of WPA activities in Michigan.

Summarization of the attack and defense, verbal and printed, is presented on page 28.

In British Studios

Final shooting of exteriors was underway for Robert T. Kane's New World all-color "Wings of the Morning," Derby story. Meanwhile, at Shepherd's Bush, six hundred Gaumont-British studio employees were having the customary two weeks' vacation, during which the maintenance staff proceeded upon a complete overhauling of equipment.

That's only a part of the picture of what was going on at the British studios. Further details are on page 45.

Oriental Trend

Likely to be the first of several pictures of Chinese background to reach the screen, Paramount's "The General Died at Dawn" is subject of that widespread attention which Hollywood always accords the picture heralding a trend. With Columbia's "The Lost Horizon" and MGM's "The Good Earth" coming up, not to mention films of lesser evident magnitude scheduled for other lots, the Far East is manifestly in for a thoroughgoing exploration by pen and camera. Gary Cooper and Madeleine Carroll play the principal roles in the Paramount production.

Gus McCarthy's pictorial review of "The General Died at Dawn" is presented on pages 16-17.

Peak Load

Boom days were duplicated in the production colony last week when, for lack of adequate studio space, picture launchings were limited to four, leaving approximately fifty still in work. Nine came off the line, easing somewhat the cramped conditions brought about, dually, by the upswing in production and the general expansion which has increased materially the per-picture space requirements of the producers.

Data pertaining to the pictures finished and started are made available on page 29.

Television Fight

Open warfare threatens in the courts between Philco Radio and RCA over Philco's charges, contained in papers filed this week, that the Radio Corporation used "spies" to socialize with Philco employees in order to obtain trade secrets on Philco's television developments.

Some spicy socializations are accredited to RCA by Philco, as reported on page 38.

4 to 1 Against Doubles

Warner Brothers claims that America stands four to one against double bills, in a poll in which 725,824 theatregoers participated.

Results of the poll appear on page 52.

Directors Wanted

So many directors have become producers, associate producers and so forth, with nobody giving a thought to the matter of successorships, a slightly dazed Hollywood has discovered that it can count on too few fingers the men with box office names available for the direction of its expensively budgeted productions. Even to find competency, foregoing name value, has become enough of a chore to occasion delay in placing several important productions in work.

A summing up of the situation is offered on page 29.

The Doyle Deal

Stuart F. Doyle, head of Greater Union Theatres, Ltd., of Australia completed his business in New York this week and departed for California, whence he will sail for home accompanied by Walter J. Hutchinson of Twentieth Century-Fox. Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Doyle will discuss the renewal of the five-year contract between the two organizations they represent, and other business matters concerning the amalgamation of Mr. Doyle's holdings, the financing of which he recently achieved in London.

For details, see page 48.

Star-Radio Action

Producers are reported to be considering action on the problem of the appearance of film stars on radio programs as exhibitors continue their protests that the appearances are affecting box office receipts. Executives still are in disagreement over what course to take and whether the practice is detrimental to the industry. The Independent Exhibitors Protective Association of Wisconsin has joined the Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California and New York ITO in protesting the continued broadcasting by the stars.

Developments in the situation are related on page 48.

RKO Plan Delayed

A reorganization of RKO appeared destined for new delays as the result of the admission by Federal Judge William Bondy in the United States district court in New York this week that he would require an additional six to eight weeks in which to decide the validity of Rockefeller Center's $9,100,000 claim against RKO, which involves the operation of the Music Hall and Center Theatre, and their leases.

For details, and for other actions against RKO, see page 38.

Mr. Cummins finds "over the head of the average moviegoer." The first one possibly was not. The original or McCoy version from Czechoslovakia appears not to have been over anybody's head unless he was standing on it.

Mr. Cummins' pursuit of "true pages of life" and service of the commonweal by way of the screen began at least as early as his presentation of "Some Wild Oats" in 1922, with many censorship adventures, east and west. He brought forth "The Naked Truth" or "T.N.T." in 1927, accompanied by a lecture of "scientific" color. Other of Mr. Cummins titles have been "Unwed Mothers," "Sex Madness" and "Damaged Souls."

It is maybe a shade difficult to follow Mr. Cummins completely in his comment as to the symbolic aspect of "Ecstasy," but one can agree that the tenseness of the big sequence admits of little dialogue and requires less. As to the realism—"the true pages of life"—only ex-parte, non-participating, clinically minded observers of such events could be competent judges, and none are available.

With the organized motion picture industry having just about now achieved a working degree of social adjustment, with the Production Code Administration and related forces, and with the screen still in the limelight of regulative considerations in state and national legislatures, Mr. Cummins' new project would appear to be especially timely and fraught with tremendous possibilities. Its success could make screen history—as it has never been made before.

Sales Convention

Two regional sales meetings have been scheduled by Grand National Films, Inc., for next week. The eastern and New England staffs will meet in New York on August 17th and 18th and the midwestern, southern and western salesmen will gather in Chicago on August 20th and 21st.

Convention plans and developments in the building of home office, studio and sales personnel are reviewed on page 48.

Roxy Profits

Net earnings of the Roxy Theatre in New York for the year ended June 11, 1936, were $172,254.28, in comparison with $136,066.62 for the year previous, and $54,453.32 for the year ended June 14, 1934, according to Amott, Baker and Company, auditors.

For a detailed report of the theatre's financial condition and a list of its assets, etc., see page 38.

ASCAP Representative

With the return of Warner Brothers Pictures and its affiliated music publishing companies to the fold of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, it was revealed this week that Herman Starr, president of the motion picture company's music firms, has been replaced on the board of governors of the society by Edwin Morris, vice-president of Mr. Starr's organization.

A detailed story appears on page 30.

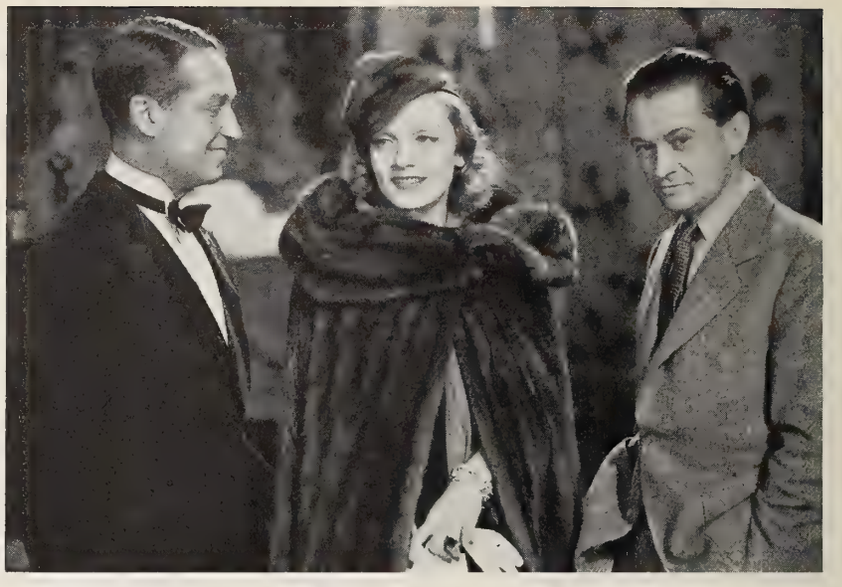
Warner Profit Up

Warner Brothers reported for the 39 weeks ending May 30 a net profit of $7,509,-018 before amortization, depreciation and taxes and a net profit of $2,594,772 after deducting all charges. The net profit compared with a net of $371,591 after similar deductions for the corresponding 39 weeks in 1935. Current assets are $22,304,422, including cash of $3,475,010 against current liabilities totaling $17,579,486.

GB Deal Stands

Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox, arrived in London this week to expedite the deal under which Gaumont British, Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will join forces. Asked what the prospects for consummation of the agreement are in view of the reports that the British Government may take action, Mr. Schenck said, "I know it won't fail." He refused to comment on possible action by the Government.

The American executive's arrival in London is reported on page 18.



Kahane's Post

B. B. Kahane, former president of RKO Studios, Inc., has assumed new office as vice-president of Columbia Pictures. Mr. Kahane no longer will be connected with production.

From there they will visit Niagara Falls and Toronto before sailing from New York on the Normandie on August 17th.

PRODUCERS AIM CLASSICS AT 36,000,000 AUDIENCE

Hollywood Making Increased Use of Field of Literature for Story Material; Trend Is Growing as Merit Is Proved

After years of preparation and many sporadic attempts, producers and exhibitors are at last starting to reap a fruitful harvest from a field fertilized and ploughed by intensive and large scale campaigns of education, research and organization. An increasing demand for better pictures, crystalized in the Legion of Decency movement in 1934, led to the voluntary adoption by the industry of higher standards of production and the resultant success of a group of literary masterpieces, socalled, made into pictures has been so great that today a larger number of the "million dollar" productions than ever before are built around notable literary successes, either old or new.

A by-product of this trend has been the tapping of an entirely new market. The organized industry, principally through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has established facilities for contacting and drawing to the box office an audience of millions who only occasionally, if ever, attend a motion picture theatre. It is to these millions that present campaigns are being directed; it is their support that in great part has made possible the outstanding examples of the new production, and it is through their continued patronage that the organized industry hopes to develop the trend.

Producers and the MPPDA say that through their campaigns for the "classics" they are drawing on an audience of approximately 36,000,000, of whom from 50 to 75 per cent are not film "fans", so-called, 25 per cent of the group seeing a motion picture only once a month, another 25 per cent attending but once a year, while the remainder, "shopping" for their screen fare, go only when a special appeal is presented.

The movement toward production of the classics in this effort to attract new audiences and raise the level of productions designed for the present patronage is best exemplified by the rapidly growing catalogue of Shakespeare's plays which have been or are being interpreted on the screen. Of all the material designated as "classic" by the producers, the work of the Bard of Avon is generally accorded the clearest title to that estate. Producers in recent months have photographed his immortal appeal with such pictures as "Midsummer Night's Dream," made last year and still being roadshown, "Romeo and Juliet," ready for release; "As You Like It," to be completed in September, and "Julius Caesar" and "Hamlet" planned.

While awaiting the verdict of the ages on other literary masterpieces which are considered as likely material for the screen, producers in selecting the "classics" can only follow the majority opinion of literary critics and educational authority. Accepting this basis the 19th century period in English literature has been drawn on heavily with Dickens as the chief contributor. "David Copperfield" and "The Tale of Two Cities," among others, are to be followed by the "Lay of the Last Minstrel," "Ivanhoe" and "Silas Marner." Even "The Charge of the Light Brigade" is being done on a big scale on the theory that millions of persons know the Tennyson poem.

HISTORICAL BOOKS ALSO ON SCREEN

The third classification under the heading of "classic" is the group of subjects chosen from lists of best-sellers of the present and of other years. Chief among subjects of this type are Rudyard Kipling's stories, "Soldiers Three," "Captains Courageous," and "Kim"; Pearl Buck's "The Good Earth"; Hervey Allen's "Anthony Adverse" and Marc Connelly's "The Green Pastures," and other stories which, as books or plays, have been acclaimed by the classes and bought by the masses. Purchase of a successful novel or play by the motion picture industry today is likely to bring the author far more money than he received for his original manuscript. Likewise, it brings to millions, in the most painless form possible, the tales which have been listed as worth knowing.

Apart from the use of actual material of these types, but connected with the general trend of production today, is the use of biographical and historical topics whether screened from originals or from books and plays produced by authors of known worth. Typical of these are "Disraeli," "Louis Pasteur," and "Mary of Scotland."

14 of 16 Best Sellers Filmed

The infusion of "classic" material into the reservoir from which motion picture stories are drawn has reached its greatest proportion in the last two years and gives promise of continuing through the coming season. In a list of 16 best sellers of all time, headed by the Bible and Shakespeare, 14 titles have been made into pictures or are scheduled for the coming season. Of these only seven had been done before 1935.

The Bible itself, topping the list with 675,000,000 copies sold since the first manuscript was reproduced in type about the year 1500, has been the basis of many motion picture plots. "The Ten Commandments," Paramount, 1923; "King of Kings," Pathe and RKO Pathe, 1927; "Queen of Sheba," Fox, 1921; "Noah's Ark," Warner, 1929; "Sign of the Cross," Paramount, 1932, the "Passion Play," Passion Play Committee, 1928, were all of that nature.

Nine Shakespeare Films

Of Shakespeare's plays nine have been selected by producers, five of them since 1935. "A Midsummer Night's Dream" was made by Warner Brothers last year, "Romeo and Juliet" will be released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on August 20th, "As You Like It" is expected by Twentieth Century-Fox

Only Two of List Unfilmed

The best-seller list, which was compiled by the Junior League of New York, includes also dictionaries and technical books such as Roget's "Thesaurus" and the "Care and Feeding of Children" but only those titles suitable for motion picture production were considered in the computations. "Saki" and "Progress and Poverty" were the only ones listed which have not been treated on the screen.

The second part of the Junior League compilation is called "From Mrs. Wiggs to Mr. Chips" and includes the best sellers of each year from 1900 to 1935. Of a total of 127 suitable titles, 81 have been treated on film and of 15 such titles published since 1933, five have been or are being produced last year and this year and one was produced in 1934.

Examination of titles produced in 1935 and in the first six months of this year shows even more clearly the extent to which producers are utilizing popular taste as expressed over many years or the judgment of

by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

STEADILY, surely, the needle of Hollywood's production compass is swinging toward the East, toward China, imponderable, traditionally unfathomable land of cheap life, implacable destiny, high adventure and slow, fantastic death. Columbia's "The Lost Horizon" and MGM's "The Good Earth" are of the time and trend. Paramount's "The General Died at Dawn", which probably will be first among the pictures with Oriental subject matter to reach the screen, depicts warring China as of today, yesterday and always.

The Paramount picture deals with the adventures of its white principals in conflict with China's relentless individualists, the war lords and western freebooters. It deals also, meticulously, with "face", the complex, immutable factor of Chinese civilization that remains forever mysterious, incomprehensible to the Occidental. It is by this psychological mechanism, dimly understandable but constantly manifest in inexorable operation, that the final outcome of a complex, melodramatic story is brought about.

To produce the story, realistically and on an impressive scale, Paramount has invested lavishly in personal and material assets. In order that the dynamic quality and atmosphere of the Charles G. Booth novel might be retained in a setting authentically reproduced, Clifford Odets was engaged to write the screen play. Dubbed "the George Bernard Shaw of the Bronx" (Continued on opposite page)

STORY OF WARRING CHINA

A HERALD PICTORIAL PREVIEW IN ADVANCE STILLS

(Continued from preceding page) when his plays, "Waiting for Lefty" and "Till the Day I Die", won him critical comparison with Eugene O'Neil, he is regarded as an excellent choice for the assignment. To further guarantee authenticity of transition, the company employed Count Andre Tolstoy, lineal descendant of the famous Count Leo Tolstoy and himself formerly a soldier of fortune in China as aide to General Chang Tze Lin. And to obtain the sweep and drive of action, conquest and resistance inevitable in a nation ruled by self-appointed commanders of loot-inspired militia, direction was placed in the hands of Lewis Milestone, winner of an Academy Award for his "All Quiet on the Western Front" and director of other pictures requiring similar talents.

Gary Cooper was chosen for the leading role both because of demonstrated ability in assignments of comparable character and because he rates as one of the most consistently reliable box office draws of the period. The feminine lead is being enacted by Madeleine Carroll, lately seen in the successful "The 39 Steps", "The Case of Mrs. Ames" and "Secret Agent". Selection of the actor to play the general, a difficult and exacting characterization, was left to Messrs. Booth, Odets, Tolstoy, Milestone and the producer, William LeBaron, Akim Tamiroff drawing the assignment.

literary critics, as the criterion for material to be filmed. Among the works having claim to the designation "classics" are:

CRIME AND PUNISHMENT, Dostoievsky, Columbia Pictures, 1935.

PETER IBBETSON, Tolstoy, Paramount, 1935.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, Dickens, MGM, 1935.

SCROOGE, Dickens, Paramount, 1935.

OLIVER TWIST, MGM, 1935.

DAVID COPPERFIELD, MGM, 1935.

CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE, Tennyson, Warner, 1936.

BECKY SHARP, from Thackeray's Vanity Fair, RKO Radio, 1935.

LES MISERABLES, Hugo, United Artists, 1935.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, Bulwer-Lytton, RKO Radio, 1935.

THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS, Cooper, United Artists, 1936.

For the New Season

Promised for the new season is an imposing list which in addition to the Shakespearean plays already mentioned, includes, among others:

THE LIGHT THAT FAILED, Kipling, Paramount.

THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL, Tennyson, United Artists.

CYRANO DE BERGERAC, Rostand, scheduled by United Artists and Fox.

SILAS MARNER, Eliot, MGM.

IVANHOE, Scott, RKO.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME, Universal.

QUO VADIS, Sienkiewicz, MGM.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE, Austen, MGM.

GUNGHA DIN, Kipling, RKO.

TWO YEARS BEFORE THE MAST, Dana, Republic.

Several of these, including "Quo Vadis," "Ivanhoe," "Silas Marner," and "The Hunchback," have been made into films in previous years but they are scheduled for remaking.

Point to Campaigns

That there is a market for such pictures producers claim to have proved, and to substantiate their stand they point to the campaigns being conducted through the MPPDA. Through Better Films Councils, schools, libraries and social and civic groups in almost every city of the country is being carried on the education of the public in the appreciation of the new higher type of production and the instilling of a desire to see such pictures among those not previously counted as regular film patrons.

Warner-First National, for its "A Midsummer Night's Dream," broached a campaign never previously matched in promotion of the classics in films.

An outstanding current campaign is the one underway in support of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer version of "Romeo and Juliet." Through previous contacts with 16 national organizations including such groups as the Federated Church Women, Federation of Women's Clubs, Young Women's Christian Association and Young Men's Christian Association, Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Boy and Girl Scouts, Daughters of the American Revolution and the American Legion Auxiliary, the MPPDA expects to reach millions of potential patrons.

Public Relations Accessories

For the direct approach to the membership of the national groups a number of public relations accessories for "Romeo and Juliet" are being prepared. A study guide has been written by the general editor for the motion picture committee of the Department of Secondary Education of the National Education Association and from experience had with similar study guides on "David Copperfield" and "A Tale of Two Cities" it is expected that "Romeo and Juliet" will be studied in every English class in every high school.

Other phases of the campaign include an adult discussion guide based on the music evolved for the film, to be circulated through the National Federation of Music Clubs; cooperation of libraries, and the publication of special bookmarks. One of the accessories prepared is a series of 50 research exhibits for showing in schools, universities, museums and libraries. They consist of prints of research material evolved from old paintings and literature or collected in Verona and Mantau, of the designs and miniatures developed in preparation for the production, and of action stills from the photoplay showing the influence of the source material on the final product. In each major city, one institution will be responsible for routing these exhibits to the places where they will be of the greatest benefit.

The research exhibit never before has been adapted to this use and officials of the MPPDA are enthusiastic in their expectations. It is believed that similar exhibits will be prepared for future pictures which will lend themselves to this treatment.

Although such campaigns have been planned for the past 10 years, it has taken that long for the machinery to be made ready for full operation and it is expected that the full benefits of the work will be felt increasingly with each picture for which it is utilized.

Schenck in London Denies Report of Snag in GB Deal

Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox, declared on his arrival in London this week that the proposed Gaumont British, Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer transaction will go through. "I know it won't fail," he was reported as saying when asked if the deal might meet with obstacles.

Mr. Schenck, who sailed from New York on the Normandie last week, refused to comment on possible action by the British Government or give any details on the present status of the agreement which was announced by the Schenck brothers and Isidore Ostrer, acting for Gaumont British, in New York several weeks ago.

Before sailing the Fox executive had told reporters that he was going to England to expedite consummation of the deal. When the agreement was first announced all three men said that the details of the arrangement would be worked out by lawyers and Mr. Schenck said that there would be no necessity for either him or his brother to go to England.

Richard Dwight of Hughes, Sherman and Dwight, who went to England several weeks ago to represent Twentieth Century-Fox in the deal, arrived in New York this week. He had no comment to make.

Alexander Korda and London Films again entered discussions of the deal after Mr. Schenck visited the producer at Denham on Tuesday. Mr. Korda was asked if the visit indicated any interest by London films in the transaction or if Mr. Schenck was merely looking over the plant with a view to centering British M-G-M and Twentieth Century-Fox production there. "We have been talking about many things, but I don't think I can say anything about it," was Mr. Korda's reply.

The press conference promised by Mr. Schenck was not held and British newspapermen came to the conclusion, shared by many in the London trade, that some serious snag in the negotiations may have developed.

Anticipating that the tieup between the British company and the two American companies will induce other American distributors to enter the theatre field, A. E. Abrahams of London, is reported prepared to offer some of his theatres to such bidders. He is the landlord or lessee of many West End houses, including the London Pavilion, Aldwych Fortune, Garrick, New Scala and 20 or more theatres in the suburbs operating on a film and vaudeville policy.

Drouth Areas Report Big Cut in Business

Business in Missouri for the Commonwealth Amusement Corporation, which operates a representative group of theatres in Kansas and Missouri, is reported 15 per cent off from a year ago due to the drought. Film salesmen report Missouri in much worse condition than in Kansas, where there has been a good wheat crop at a fair price.

800 Negro Theatres in 32 States Point to Growing Demand

Studio Problem Is Space on Set for Those Who Want to Act without Pay

The Negro Motion Picture Theatre in America, unheralded, has been steadily increasing in number the last few years and now totals approximately 800 houses. Of this number some 620 are individually owned all-colored theatres. They are distributed among 32 states of the Union and the District of Columbia. Several of the more important circuits, heeding the demand for all-colored entertainment centers, also have inaugurated the policy of opening their houses, after the regular shows have been concluded for the day, and running an additional one for the colored folk, thus bringing the total to 800 theatres.

Oddly enough, the largest number of the all-negro houses is not to be found in those deep Southern states where the negro population is densest, with the one exception of Florida. This is shown by the total number of states that have all-colored theatres and their corresponding number of houses, as follows: Alabama, 22; Arkansas, 14; California, 24; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 4; Delaware, 2; District of Columbia, 17; Florida, 55; Georgia, 39; Illinois, 28; Indiana, 26; Iowa, 1; Kansas, 7; Kentucky, 22; Louisiana, 19; Maryland, 15; Massachusetts, 1; Minnesota, 1; Mississippi, 12; Missouri, 18; Nebraska, 3; New Jersey, 7; New York, 34; North Carolina, 64; Ohio, 38; Oklahoma, 17; Pennsylvania, 22; South Carolina, 25; Tennessee, 14; Virginia, 40; Wisconsin, 1, and West Virginia, 27.

The Southern circuits, however, are predominant among those playing several times a week exclusively to negroes. Chief among these are the Sparks circuit in Florida, the Starr group in Louisiana, which recently started all-negro programs at the Palace, former leading vaudeville house in New Orleans along with the Orpheum, and the Publix-Kincey circuit, operating farther north.

Jack Goldberg, of International Roadshows, Inc., New York, who for more years than he cares to admit has been active in the negro entertainment field, and for the past decade has been the largest single producer and distributor of motion pictures, with negro casts, compiled these data. The houses mentioned are all on his list of accounts. Today, as he sits in his office in the Film Center, where his walls are adorned with many-hued one-sheets of past, present and future attractions, Mr. Goldberg personally takes care of the booking of the pictures, usually by mail, and the average cost to the exhibitor is $12.50, plus $7.50 express.

At present, Mr. Goldberg is handling 10 pictures, including "Harlem Is Heaven," starring Bill Robinson; "Siren of the Tropics," with Josephine Baker as the star; "Life Is Real," featuring Nina Mae McKinney; "Scandal," starring Lucky Millinder and his Orchestra; "The Unknown Soldier Speaks," a history of the negro in the World War and for the production of which the United States Government opened its vaults at Washington and gave the producers the film records of the colored man's activities in the struggle, and "The Girl from Chicago," with an "all-star" cast.

Ten other productions are planned for next season. Prominent among Mr. Goldberg's plans for next year, however, are those he has for the series, "The Negro Marches On". This, he says, will be a negro version of what is being done by the publishers of Time Magazine with their "March of Time". In this, Mr. Goldberg plans to present a reenactment of incidents in the history of the American negro, such as the recent "Scottsboro Case" in Alabama. It is planned to produce one issue every month, two reels in length, and it is highly possible, Mr. Goldberg said, that the distribution of the film will not be confined to all-colored theatres alone.

The negro production centers are not New York and Hollywood, as may be expected, or even Memphis—where Beal Street is so well known as the national negro Broadway—but Norfolk, Va., and Philadelphia. With the possible exception of one or two stars chosen for their name value, the casts are made up of unknowns, persons chosen for their resemblances to the characters they are to play, and in most cases there are no salaries. The negro is a born actor, it was pointed out, and he is willing, in most cases, to be allowed to display his talents just for personal satisfaction rather than for monetary gain.

It is a common occurrence for the producers to hire one band for a picture and, when the time comes to start shooting, find four bands present, each trying to outplay the others. Then the four will appear in the picture, only one being paid. A call is sent out for six chorus girls to dance in a cabaret scene. The six will tell their friends they are to appear in a picture and these friends will also spread the word about. The director then finds he may have as many as 60 girls, in a motley set of costumes, all rehearsing with the dance director, and the whole group, or as many as can be included, will appear in the picture. The six originally hired will be paid; the others don't even think of asking for remuneration.

An oldtime Missippippi River Showboat is at Memphis at the moment, and Mr. Goldberg has been requested to come down and make a picture on the boat and along Beal Street. He readily will find a cast waiting for him and the boat is there for his use if he wants it, free of charge.

However, production of negro pictures is not as simple as these incidents would indicate, Mr. Goldberg said. There is the problem of getting a name for advertising purposes that will draw both in the North and in the South. Such wellknown negro entertainers as Mamie Smith and Bessie Smith, the last of the "coon-shoutin'" singers, are bywords among the southern negro, but their appeal is much greater below the Mason-Dixon Line than above, where Bill Robinson, Josephine Baker, Nina Mae McKinney and their types of performer are better known.

The greatest grosser for Mr. Goldberg, which is almost the same as saying the colored theatre, has been, and still is, according to the figures, "Imitation of Life," a Universal picture starring Claudette Colbert. To the negro, however, Miss Colbert is merely the leading supporting player, and Louise Beavers is the star. This film has played three and four return engagements.

The censorship problem, Mr. Goldberg finds, is not as serious with his pictures as it is with product for the general patronage. Practically no deletions are made, he says, but only because the pictures are directed toward colored patronage and are not intended for showing to whites.

The average negro demands real, "low drama", starkly realistic, so that he is capable of grasping its meaning. For comedy, the negro demands slapstick of the style popular on the early day screen. Films featuring music and dancing are always liked.

For advertising purposes, Mr. Goldberg finds that the four leading negro journals, the Afro-American of Baltimore, the Chicago Defender, the Pittsburgh Courier and the New York Amsterdam News reach practically every community in the country. He has some 190 negro colleges and schools on his mailing list.

In the deep South, however, there is still the problem of the old "Jim Crow" law, and negroes are admitted only to balconies of theatres where usually pictures are shown for white audiences, even though the particular performance is being given only for the colored man. In High Point, N. C., recently, a manager arranged for a midnight show after his regular day's run. His total of balcony seats was 653; he found over 2,000 negroes waiting for the doors to open. He filled his balcony with the first ones in line, and at the same time 14 white men and women filed into the orchestra seats. Unable to keep his theatre open all night, the manager immediately arranged with his rival managers to rent their balconies for one performance and he filled four opposition houses' upper floors up the street. He rushed the reels to the other houses and despite the fact that the show started an hour late at the last house, all his patrons were satisfied. Now he arranges beforehand for the balconies of the four houses, obtains two prints from New York, and these are rushed from projection room to projection room as the reels come off the machines.

WPA DEFENDS PATHE NEWSREEL CONTRACT AS CRITICISM RAGES

Charge Flung by Republican National Committee Draws Official Reply; Chairman Hamilton Continues Attack

Caught by no newsreel, but broadcast on a coast-to-coast network of newspaper pages and shouted from a public rostrum in Seattle, denunciation and defense of the Works Progress Administration-Pathe News contract covering production and distribution of WPA films for theatrical exhibition this week became a major subject of controversy in the national political campaign.

While the lay press was engaged in publishing statements handed out by the Republican National Committee and the WPA, a Pathe News unit started work on the first of the films, to be produced in Michigan, and former employees of the Motion Picture Record division of the WPA, their services no longer required, sought jobs elsewhere.

Developments:

On August 6th the Republican National Committee in Washington, D. C., issued a statement charging the WPA with establishment of a "moving picture propaganda bureau" and quoted a report from Sydney MacKean, former director of the motion picture record division of the agency.

On August 8th Deputy WPA Administrator Aubrey Williams replied to the Republican National Committee's accusation, defending the action of the WPA and asserting that "the Republicans set every precedent for Federal motion pictures", specifically citing films made during the Coolidge and Hoover administrations.

On August 10th John D. M. Hamilton, Republican national chairman, reiterated and expanded Republican charges in an address delivered to an audience of 8,000 listeners at the Civic Auditorium in Seattle, Wash.

Across the country, editorial comment and news stories explored the terms of the contract, printed in its entirety in the July 25th issue of Motion Picture Herald, singling out for special attention the clause requiring release of one WPA film each month in a nationally distributed newsreel.

Release of the staff formerly employed by the motion picture record division of the WPA, composed of men experienced in motion picture work and commissioned during their tenure with the filming of WPA projects for permanent record, was regarded by them as a natural consequence of the decision to place the work on a commercial contract basis. Each was given to understand that other berths would be sought for them in the WPA and encouraged to look upon the present period of idleness as a vacation. Nevertheless, most of them were in New York re-establishing contacts with the trade and disposed to consider any reasonable offer.

Selection of Michigan as the subject of the first WPA film to be made by Pathe News is in line with the text of invitations to bid for the contract, distributed to more than 40 film companies, which described in detail, as a specimen of the work to be done, a hypothetical picture showing the governmental agency's activities in that state. It is believed that the film will depict forestry measures taken to prevent fires, construction and equipment supplied to facilitate operations of the Michigan state police, and the building of farm-to-market roads. Synopses of this and seven other subjects of what is described in the contract as state-wide interest had been prepared by members of the motion picture record division staff prior to dismissal.

Issuance of the Republican National Committee's statement followed front page news treatment and editorial comment on the WPA-Pathe contract by the New York Journal, the New York American, the Chicago Tribune and many other newspapers, as well as magazine treatment by The Literary Digest, with frequent reference to the original presentation of facts in the July 25th issue of Motion Picture Herald.

The statement of the Republican National Committee, as released to the press, quoted terms of the Pathe News contract in conjunction with the Sydney MacKean report, asserting that they "show that although the motion picture division of the WPA was abandoned in its original form because private motion picture companies would not accept the propaganda contained in the films, a new effort is now underway to propagandize the country through the medium of newsreels paid for out of relief funds." In support of this allegation the statement quoted liberally from the MacKean report, which reviewed the history of the motion picture record division from its inception and stressed the incident of the Comptroller General's refusal to authorize payment of expenses incurred until he had received a copy of President Roosevelt's letter to Administrator Hopkins confirming verbal authorization previously given and citing legislation investing him with authority to do so.

In response to the Republican attack, Deputy Administrator Williams of the WPA said, "The Republicans set every precedent for Federal motion pictures. The Republican National Committee is like a small boy whistling in the dark. The utter absurdity of its attack is plain when we realize that not a single picture has been produced under the arrangement so bitterly assailed. The Republican National Committee has not the remotest idea whether or not these pictures will contain any propaganda whatever. I know they will not. Yet the committee releases an official attack upon the Works Progress Administration solely on the strength of a statement from the former chief of a WPA section abolished nearly three months ago.

Cites Republican Precedent

"Three successive Republican administrations have produced literally thousands of reels of Federal motion pictures in dozens of bureaus, large and small, over a period of twelve long years. Why, then, the Republican hubbub over a perfectly legitimate and accepted method of presenting public information?

"Can it be that the Republican National Committee is afraid of the truth? Can it be fear that the eye of the camera will reveal a great army of good solid American citizens at work in the construction of good solid American improvements for the benefit of all the people?"

Two days later Republican National Committeeman Chairman Hamilton told his Seattle, Washington, audience, in the course of an address, "The taxpayers are determined, as is Governor Landon, that human suffering shall not go unrelieved in our land. But the taxpayers are also determined they will no longer tolerate a burden for relief swollen by a percentage to political spoilsmen.

"On July 17, 1936, the WPA asked for bids from private motion picture companies for the preparation of films showing certain relief projects in various States. These films are to be distributed in the guise of a newsreel.

"The contracts, according to WPA specifications, will not necessarily be given to the lowest bidder in accordance with the usual government custom, but to the bidder who is best able to aid in distribution, both theatrical and non-theatrical, of this political propaganda disguised as news.

"I would stress that the money for these contracts comes from the taxpayers. It was voted for the relief of human suffering.

"But it is to be paid to private motion picture companies that operate for profit for films that are to be shown in privately owned moving picture houses also operated for profit before audiences who have sufficient funds to pay for their own admission.

"This is not all. John R. McCarl, the Controller General, whose term of office recently expired, refused to approve a similar expenditure in June, 1935, on the ground it was an illegal application of money appropriated by Congress.

"But now, in an election year, the party in power is forcing the taxpayers, without their consent and without the approval of Congress, to make a contribution to a political campaign fund for distribution of propaganda through the motion picture theatres.

"I say this use of public money not only violates the intent of Congress, but the law as well."

DENUNCIATION AND DEFENSE

Said John D. M. Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee in excoriation of the WPA-Pathe News contract:

"I would stress that the money for these contracts comes from the taxpayers. It was for relief of human suffering. This use of public money not only violates the intent of Congress but the law as well."

Said Deputy Administrator Aubrey Williams of the WPA:

"The Republicans set every precedent for Federal motion pictures. The Republican National Committee is like a small boy whistling in the dark. These motion pictures will be a record for posterity of America's ability to meet an economic crisis great enough to destroy almost any other nation and by hard work and common sense to solve it in the American way."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Room at the Top

"There's always room at the top."

"Go West, young man," etc.

Name 10 box office directors in 10 seconds.

Name 10 good directors in 5.

Name 20 directors, any kind, in 30 minutes, without looking 'em up in the MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC, and tell why you remember them.

If your score is 100 for the triple test you're a better man than most who have to answer such questions for a living. Because Hollywood has somewhat suddenly discovered that it's faced with, of all things, a shortage of directors.

Yessir, believe it or not, even major producers have admitted as reason for delaying the start of productions otherwise ready the lack of a genuine, 4-square director to place in charge. Promotions from the ranks have been made, recently, and at a slightly alarming rate, for no better reason than because directors had to be had from somewhere. Fingers are crossed in more instances than is comfortable.

How the condition come about is everybody's business and nobody's. It jes' growed. There was much emphasizing of writers a while back, of course, and again of stars, the while many a competent director was in process of becoming a producer or associate producer with no one paying particular attention to the business of training, building up and readying for market able young men to direct product. Now all that must be caught up with, it appears, and the woods are not exactly full of likely timber.

The situation is not precisely catastrophic. Ways, means and men will be found. They always are. Usually, too, they are better ways, means and men, a circumstance the screen, as always, can well afford to put up with. Meanwhile, the handful of ready-made dependables are busy, prosperous gentlemen, masters of just about all they survey.

PompandCircumstance

Great romances of history are being marshalled for parade across the screens of the world in the coming season. Never before has such an array of colorful and varied background material been announced for one film season.

Warners leads the list with twelve pictures dealing with yesteryear. They are "The Charge of the Light Brigade," "The Sea Hawk," "Danton," "The Story of Beethoven," "The Adventures of Robin Hood," "The Prince and the Pauper," "The White Rajah," "Joan of Arc," "Panama Canal," which deals with difficulties of digging the big ditch, "The Story of John Law," which tells of the wild financial speculation known as the Mississippi Bubble, and "Anthony Adverse," just released.

MGM is a close second with the following nine announced: "Parnell," story of the Irish Rebellion, "Marie Antoinette," "The Georgeous Hussy," "Camille," "Pride and Prejudice," "Maytime," "Countess Walewska," "Mr. and Mrs. Washington" and "Romeo and Juliet."

Radio is preparing "Portrait of a Rebel," "Quality Street," "Daniel Boone," "The Outcasts of Poker Flat," "The Robber Barons," which deals with the days of Jim Fiske, and "Mary of Scotland," already released.

Paramount has "The Plainsman" and "Maid of Salem," both tales of early days in America. Republic is preparing "Two Years Before the Mast," a tale of adventure in sailing ships, Columbia has "Valley Forge" on schedule. Hal Roach's "Colonel Spanky" goes back into the last century.

Universal will break out costumes for "Hippodrome" and "Madame Curie." Walter Wanger will put heavy demands on stocks of Oriental draperies for "The Arabian Knights." Reliance has "The Last of the Mohicans" ready for release.

Sol Lesser's "Rainbow on the River" is based on "'Toinette's Phillip," a tale of civil war days. Selznick International will do "Gone With the Wind," another civil war tale.

Twentieth Century-Fox will contribute "Lloyds of London," "Ramona," and "The Last Slaver" to the colorful company, and then there is, of course, the long list of westerns which every season produces.

What, a showman returning from the no-man's-land of retirement might ask, has become of the theory that the public doesn't like costume pictures? Gone, another showman might tell him, with the premise of even date which held the mean average age of the cinema audience to be 11 years. At which both showmen might tilt a toast to the box office gods in silent, solvent approval of a new and better day.

Production at Peak

With 50 pictures in work and studio space at something like a premium, whatever that means precisely, it was found practicable, expeditious and otherwise advisable to launch only four new pictures last week. Meanwhile nine others were coming off the line, as Henry Ford's 34,500,000th flivver cheered his 73rd birthday, easing somewhat the crowded condition of the stages. (That Ford thought is a stray, outgrowth of a rambling speculation as to what might have happened to the industry if the Michigan manufacturer had stayed in the business that time he tinkered with the idea.)

At Twentieth Century-Fox "Pigskin Parade," a seasonal football picture, went into work. The cast includes Arlene Judge, Dixie Dunbar, Jack Haley, Patsy Kelly, Johnny Downs, Leah Ray, Tony Martin, Judy Garland, The Yacht Club Boys, Betty Grable, Fred Kohler Jr. and Grady Sutton. David Butler is directing.

"Sitting On The Moon" was started at Republic. Roger Pryor and Grace Bradley are starred, supported by Pert Kelton, William Newell, William Janney, June Martell, Henry Kolker and Henry Wadsworth, with Ralph Staub directing.

Under David Selman's direction, Columbia started "Poker Face." The cast includes Mary Brian, George McKay, Thurston Hall, Henry Brandon, Betty Compson, Harry Hayden, Boyd Irwin and Charles Moore.

The first of the new Major Pictures got under way. Proceeding under the working title, "May West Picture Number One," it stars Miss West with Warren William, Randolph Scott, Lyle Talbot, Alice Brady, Isabel Jewell, Margaret Perry, Elizabeth Patterson, Maynord Holmes, Etienne Girardot, Nicodemus and Alice Ardell. Henry Hathaway is director.

Two pictures were finished at Columbia. In "Adventures in Manhattan," Jean Arthur, Joel McCrea, Reginald Owen, Herman Bing, Charles Wilson, Victor Kilian, John Gallaudet, George Cooper and Emmett Vogan will be seen. Edward Ludwig directed. The cast for "Two Minute Alibi," which D. Ross Lederman directed, includes William Gargan, Marguerite Churchill, Gene Raymond, Egon Brecher, Raymond Lawrence, Wade Boteler, George Well and Romaine Callender.

MGM finished "The Good Earth." The most prominent screen names presented are Paul Muni, Luise Rainer, Walter Connoly, Charles Grapewin, Jessie Ralph, Keye Luke and Harold Huber. Sidney Franklin directed.

Paramount accounted for two pictures. In "Murder With Pictures" Lew Ayers, Gail Patrick, Joyce Compton, Paul Kelly, Onslow Stevens, Ernest Cossart, Benny Baker, Joseph Sawyer and Iving Bacon will be seen. Charles Barton directed. "Lady Be Careful" also finished. The cast includes Mary Carlisle, Lew Ayres, Larry Crabbe, Benny Baker, Grant Withers, Jack Chapin, Josephine McKim, Wilma Francis, Nick Lukats, Purnell Pratt, Terry Ray, Louise Stanley, Irene Bennett, Henry Arthur, John Morley, Barbara Koshade, Paul Barrett and Wesley Barry. Ted Reed directed this picture.

At Radio "Swing Time" was finished. Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers are starred, with Victor Moore, Helen Roderic, Eric Blore, Georges Metaxa, Gerald Hamer, Edgar Deering, Harry Bowen and Harry Bernard in a cast directed by George Stevens. The second picture finished at this studio, "Don't Turn 'Em Loose," will present Lewis Stone, James Gleason, Betty Grable, Bruce Cabot, Louise Latimer, Frank M. Thomas, Nella Walker, Grace Bradley, Harry Jans, Frank Jenks, Addison Randall, Gordon Jones, Fern Emmett, John Arledge, Arthur Hoyt and Charles Richman. Ben Stoloff directed.

Republic completed two films. The cast for "Bulldog Edition" includes Ray Walker, Evalyn Knapp, Regis Toomey, Cy Kendall, Billy Newell, Oscar Apfel, Betty Compson, Robert Warwick, Ivan Miller, Matty Fain, George Lloyd, Frank Puglia, Ruth Gilette and Ed LeSaint. Charles Lamond directed. In the secdon picture, "Dangerous Trails," Johnny Mack Brown is featured with Suzanne Kaaren. The support lists Ted Adams, Frank Darien, Lloyd Ingraham, Horace Murphy, Dick Morehead, Edward Cassidy, Margaret Mann and Frank Ball, directed by Albert Ray.

MARY ASTOR from KANSAS to HOLLYWOOD and FAME

Miss Mary Astor of the screen, in private life, as the saying goes, Mrs. Franklyn Thorpe, currently by legal controversy, with her erstwhile husband, contributing to the romantic annals of Hollywood, has been a figure in the making of vivid pages in screen annals for fifteen years.

It all began in 1920, when as Lucille Vasconellos Langhanke, daughter of a music instructor at the University of Kansas at Lawrence, where the sunflowers grow along the banks of the Kaw, she sent a photograph in entry into a "Fame and Fortune" contest in the pages of Shadowland, a fan magazine.

The pretty girl from Kansas was among those winnowed as probable winners in the preliminary selections and she was called to New York for the final selections. Headlong with anticipation the family came along to New York, too, sure that fortune and fame were in store.

Lucille won second place and a few days later she had a contract. She became Mary Astor and started work in Tri-Arts' "The Beggar Maid," based on the Tennyson poem. The picture was a success. Miss Astor attracted attention from critics and the public. She met Harold R. Durant, then story editor for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. That was in 1921.

Durant Her Manager

Mr. Durant had had an interesting career and Miss Astor was destined to play an important role in some of its phases. Born in Waterbury, Conn., he had been a newspaper man and then had studied law and become clerk of the city court and later prosecuting attorney in that city. In 1906 he had become involved in a bitter personal conflict with the late Judge Lucien T. Burpee. The battle started over political differences and ended with departure from the bar and Connecticut by Mr. Durant.

Nothing daunted, the erstwhile lawyer had moved to New York, had done magazine work for a time under the late Frank Munsey, and had become a scenario writer for Famous Players, from which post he had advanced to managing editor of the story department.

Up to this time Miss Astor and her parents had given no thought to the retention of a manager. Her parents, every Saturday, had journeyed out to the Louis Tiffany estate on Long Island where "The Beggar Maid" was filmed, from their home on West Tenth Street, Manhattan, to collect their daughter's $50 a week.

Mr. Durant convinced them of the necessity for his services. Since Miss Astor was a minor, he produced a contract for Mr. Langhanke to sign under which the story editor agreed to furnish "dramatic instruction" for the actress and to supply her with acting assignments. This was to be without recompense, at least until she received a salary of $100 a week, at which time Mr. Durant was to start drawing 25 per cent of her salary until she reached the age of 21. Mr. Langhanke signed.

The following year, 1922, Miss Astor received an offer of a contract at $1,000 a week and, when Mr. Durant reached for his share, the actress, her mother and her father, began to believe that there was something unusual about the managerial contract. They began suit to break the contract and as a result Miss Astor became known to headline readers of the country as the "Slave Girl."

Mary Astor Loses Suit

On October 5, 1922, New York supreme court Justice Philip McCook decided that Miss Astor was the "legally indentured apprentice" of Mr. Durant and in accordance with the antiquated "master and man" statute of the state would have to fulfill the contract made by her parents. It was pointed out that the contract was the first case of indenture brought to light since 1804.

During the action Mr. Durant explained that as an official of Famous Players he would not have been able to act as her manager. From his legal knowledge, he said, he had drawn up a contract under which Miss Astor became his apprentice "to receive dramatic instruction."

Mr. and Mrs. Langhanke began the action for cancellation allegedly believing that the agreement was simply an agency contract with a minor and therefore subject to cancellation. Mr. Langhanke testified that he had signed because he thought it was a standard form of managerial contract. As the suit progressed the character of the document was revealed and the parents further contended that no dramatic instruction had been rendered by Mr. Durant. Mrs. Langhanke testified that the extent of such instruction was compassed by a remark made by Mr. Durant at a showing of "The Beggar Maid." He had said, "Lucille shouldn't twitch her eyebrows."

Sponsored Film Tax

But the contract proved unbreakable. In the light of this incident Mr. Durant's further history is worthy of note. A year later, in 1923, he suddenly quit the motion picture business entirely and retired to his home in Guilford, Conn. He applied himself vigorously to politics and shortly was elected a member of the Connecticut legislature. One of his first acts in that body was to sponsor a film footage tax of $10 per reel to be paid by all exhibitors in the state.

The levy brought loud and vehement protests not only from the exhibitors but from the organized industry. The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America set up a plan under which money from a revolving fund was lent to the theatre owners who were unable to pay the tax from their receipts. The machinery for collection of the tax proved so complicated and the receipts so small that the legislature hastily repealed the measure within a year.

Mr. Durant, in 1926, went to Washington and became actively identified with a group which was sponsoring a campaign for the establishment of a Federal Motion Picture Commission to control the industry. His testimony at a Congressional hearing on the proposal occasioned a bitter retort from C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the MPPDA, in which his motives for leaving the industry and for sponsoring the legislation were questioned. Mr. Durant's response included the announcement that a few days previously he had been readmitted to the Connecticut bar. He introduced in the testimony editorial plaudits written on this occasion and praising him as a leading citizen of Connecticut.

Sued by Parents

After the trial Miss Astor's star brightened rapidly. She played opposite Douglas Fairbanks in "Don Q, Son of Zorro," and in 1923 she was cast with John Barrymore in "Don Juan." Other pictures which followed rapidly were "Beau Brummel," "Rough Riders," "Two Arabian Knights," and "Dressed to Kill."

In the spring of 1928 she married Kenneth Hawkes, a director, and 18 months later she was left a widow when he was killed in an airplane crash over the Pacific. Her screen popularity continued unabated and she appeared in "Holiday" for Pathe; "The Steel Highway," for Warner Brothers; "The Lost Squadron," and "Men of Chance" for Radio; "Red Dust," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; and "The Little Giant," and "Convention City," for First National, among others.

In 1934 she reached newspaper headlines again when her parents filed suit to compel her to support them. In her answer she claimed that she had given them more than $500,000 in five years and that they had dissipated it in "wildcat investments and extravagance." The court ordered her to pay her parents $100 a month until the case was brought to trial but an out of court settlement was made.

The newspaper treatments of the current case, growing out of the differences between Miss Astor and her husband over the terms of a divorce, have been addressed chiefly at efforts to bring into the story names of importance in the Hollywood community, giving rise in turn to defensive endeavours to keep the Astor case an Astor story. Reports, not too well documented, have alleged a $100,000 fund offered to get the case settled. One venturesome paper has published a list of descriptions of ten screen personages, without their names, that they apparently hope to include in the story eventually.

Morris Replaces Starr in ASCAP

Edwin Morris, vice-president of the Warner music subsidiaries, will replace Herman Starr, president, on the board of governors of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers at the monthly meeting in September, it was revealed in New York this week.

Mr. Starr has been off the ASCAP board since the Warner affiliates withdrew from the music organization last January and his return follows last week's settlement of the difficulties between Warners and ASCAP over fees, a dispute which caused the withdrawal of the Warner controlled music from the more prominent of the radio stations of the country. (See MOTION PICTURE HERALD's issue of August 1.)

Stipulations for the withdrawal of about 225 suits filed by the Warner companies against various broadcasting companies for alleged infringement of copyrights are now being drawn up by lawyers.

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

Ladies in Love

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy-Romance

Name power looms as a compelling asset in this forthcoming picture. Not one but four leading women are featured. The group includes Janet Gaynor and Loretta Young, whose popularity is long standing; Constance Bennett, absent from the screen for some time, and Simone Simon who in her screen debut, "Girl's Dormatory," recently previewed, won general acclaim. Additionally the feminine contingent of the cast includes another young lady, Virginia Fields, who undoubtedly before this production is released will be seen in "Thank You, Jeeves" with Arthur Treacher. On the masculine side, the picture will feature Don Ameche, remembered for his work in "Sins of Man" and soon to be seen with Miss Young in "Ramona"; Paul Lukas, Brian Donlevy, Tyrone Power, Jr., and Egon Brecher. All except Brecher are principals.

The production is based on a Continental stage play by the noted Hungarian dramatist, Fekete, and the screen play is by Melville Baker. Direction is by Edward H. Griffith, maker of "Next Time We Love," "No More Ladies," "Another Language," "Animal Kingdom" and many others.

The story, locaied in Budapest, is modern and sophisticated, yet it is interpersed with intriguing love interest, gay smart comedy and appealing character delineations. It concerns four girls, a chorus girl (Young) a mannequin (Bennett), a gent's furnishings hawker (Gaynor), and a girl from the country (Simon). All have one objective—marriage.

Out of that situation, with much of the action taking place backstage in a theatre and other intriguing and glamorous locales in Budapest, the producers are spinning a screen story that promises to be novel not alone for the unusual cast assignments, but also from the standpoint of providing up-to-date gay and frothy entertainment.

Sing Me a Love Song

(First National)

Comedy, Romance, Music

Probably one of the most attractive potential showmanship features accruing to this production is the fact it returns James Melton to the screen. Popular and noted as a radio entertainer and stage performer, his initial screen appearance in "Stars over Broadway," released by this company last fall, won acclaim from both public and critics. While absent from the screen in the interim, his radio and other work have kept him continually in the news of the day.

The story chosen for his second picture is a comedy romance with music. Melton, ardently pursued by Ann Sheridan and her match making mother, Georgia Caine, is ordered to assume management of his father's department store. Attracted by song plugger Patricia Ellis, he goes to work incognito in the music department and through association with elevator man Allen Jenkins, who likes to make the rest of the help believe that he is a particular pal of the boss, he is whirled into a hectic romance, gets involved with a lot of crooked sharpshooters, has a terrible time straightening things out for a preferred but kleptomaniac customer and finally wins the girl, not as the boss but as just one of the help.

The story is an original by Harry Sauber, with a screen play by Sig Herzig and Jerry Wald. Direction is by Raymond Enright, whose adaptability to comedy material is demonstrated by his success with several Joe E. Brown pictures. Lyrics and music are by Harry Warren and Al Dubin, a team that has contributed effectively to many of the musical shows of Warner-First National.

Denoting the comedy character of the film is the presence of Hugh Herbert, Hobart Cavanaugh, Zasu Pitts, Nat Pendleton, as the store detective, and Walter Catlett in prominent parts in the supporting cast. Melton has about half a dozen song numbers, and locales of the production are Palm Beach and New York.

Lady Be Careful

(Paramount)

Comedy

The title might cause one to assume that this is a sophisticated romance drama. The reverse is true, however. It's comedy and romance. Sailors of the U. S. battle fleet rollicking ashore and aboard ship in San Diego and Panama are the characters. The angle that the story takes to provide its entertainment is unique and promises to provide gayly refreshing entertainment and consequent showmanship availability. Two gobs, one a heart breaker, the other a bashful boy, make a bet that the bashful one cannot woo and win the fascinating but man hating pride of Panama. The whole fleet takes sides.

The production is based on a stage play by Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson. The screen play is by Dorothy Parker, from whom much sparkling dialogue and many cleverly contrived situations can be expected, Alan Campbell and Harry Ruskin. Direction is by Theodore Reed.

The central combination in the story consists of Lew Ayres, Mary Carlisle and Larry Crabbe, with Benny Baker figuring prominently in all that goes on. Ayres is the bashful boy always, a dud until he turns dynamite in his wooing of Mary Carlisle, and Larry Crabbe is the girl thrilling opponent who thinks that none of the fair sex can resist him. Providing the principal comedy relief, Benny Baker is Ayers' pal who inspires the bet, keeps his romance with Miss Carlisle working at top speed, and eventually confounds Crabbe. The entire supporting cast, in line with the youthful character of the story, is made up of younger players, Grant Withers, Irving Bacon, Barbara Baronde, Josephine McKim, Jennifer Gray, Irene Bennet, Terry Ray, Louise Stanley, Nick Lukats, Wesley Barry and Jack Adair.

Second Wife

(Radio)

Drama

With several variations to give it more modern character this production is adapted from the stage show "All The King's Men," presented on Broadway a few years ago. As the title denotes, it is based on the dramatic theme of a second marriage and the mental and physical sufferings to which the wife falls heir when she tries to create a new home for her husband and young son-in-law. It vividly but in human fashion portrays the domestic adjustments that must be made. As the treatment for screen purposes approaches the subject in sympathetic, emotion stirring fashion, making particular use of the many crises that enter into the life of the husband, wife and young son, it seems to be of that character with particular appeal to feminine patronage.

The story is laid in New York, Switzerland and Connecticut. For a smash showmanship outlet, one of the story's sequences depicts a transatlantic journey aboard the new German sky liner, the Hindenburg. Essentially, however, dialogue and situations carry the plot; action as commonly expected is at a minimum.

In the principal roles, the story presents personalities who have been prominent in several recent pictures. Walter Abel, currently in "Fury" and "We Went to College," and Gertrude Michael, last seen in "The Return of Sophie Lang," "Forgotten Faces," and "Woman Trap," are teamed in the leads. There is one exception, however. The part of the boy is played by Lee Van Atta, a youngster previously seen in small parts in "Fury" and "Too Many Parents," who is featured for the first time. As it is necessary that there should be a dramatic triangle contrast to the romantic theme, Eric Rhodes will be seen as a character who endeavors to bring some sort of happiness into the leading woman's disillusioned life. Though the supporting cast is small, practically all interest centering in the aforementioned group, two established character actresses will be seen, Emma Dunn, remembered for "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and the last "George White Scandals," and Ann Shoemaker, featured in several Warner films, together with Maxine Jennings.

Bulldog Edition

(Republic)

Drama

Keyed by the title as a newspaper story, this takes a different theme for its motivation. While the drama and excitement of getting the news is an important factor in delineation, the real force of the story is bound up in the circulation war of two rival newspapers. Backgrounding that basic idea, there also is included an exciting story of gangster-politician crime and complicity, a three cornered romance and a melodramatic climax that is the height of stirring thrill action. Through these elements runs a vein of light comedy.

Prospective exploitation value is not confined solely to story character. Intelligence demonstrated in cast assignments provides names which, while not of top rank in comparison with many of the more highly publicized screen personalities, are more than adequate for a production of this character and the production budget that has been allotted it.

Ray Walker is presented as the circulation manager of the Daily News, Regis Toomey its managing editor and Evalyn Knapp its cartoonist. Both are rivals for the hand of the girl, but her penchant for lampooning the city's public enemy number one precipitates a situation wherein the News and its rival, the Post, indulge in a wild and woolly circulation war.

In addition to names mentioned, with Cy Kendall appearing as the gangster czar, the following players will be seen in the production: William Newell, Oscar Apfel, Betty Compson, Robert Warwick, Matty Fain, Frank Puglia, Ruth Gillette and Ed Le Saint.

RCA Denies Spy Charges in Suit Filed by Philco

David Sarnoff's Radio Corporation of America stands charged in the courts with being over-zealous in trying to round that proverbial corner to commercial television by wining and dining some young ladies of Philco Radio and Television Corporation, RCA's potential television competitor, in order to obtain trade secrets from Philco's closely guarded laboratories in Philadelphia. RCA denies the charges unequivocally.

Philco, in a summons and complaint that is spiced with some choice passages on the alleged social life of RCA's sleuths, does not specifically mention television as the subject of the reputed invasion, but refers to "new developments" which are said to be "important" to the Philadelphia manufacturing firm.

Agents of RCA—which owns NBC in radio and has large holdings in RKO in films—are accused by Philco with having ingratiated themselves with young women employed by Philco, entertaining them lavishly at Philadelphia hotels, providing them with intoxicating liquors, seeking to involve them in compromising situations and "thereupon did induce, incite and bribe said employees."

The defendants are:

Radio Corporation of America, of 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York.

Radio Corporation of America Manufacturing Company, of 153 East Twenty-fourth Street and 411 Fifth Avenue.

John S. Harley, Inc., a private detective agency, of 122 East Forty-second Street.

Charles A. Hahne, a vice-president and director of the detective agency.

Lawrence Kestler, Jr., an agent of the detective agency.

Manton Davis, vice-president and general counsel for RCA, issued the following statement to the press in reply to the accusations of Philco:

"We intend to answer this complaint and vigorously deny its allegations. There is no foundation whatsoever to the charge that Radio Corporation of America has by espionage or any improper means attempted to obtain information as to the laboratory research, designs, distribution policies or any other trade secrets of Philco."

Television Demonstrated

Philco Radio and Television Corporation at Philadelphia, which has been quietly conducting field tests since December, to show the present stage of their experimentation with television before they entered a new phase, which, they hoped, would produce screen images of even sharper definition, this week staged demonstrations both indoor and outdoors. The broadcasts were over a distance of seven miles, and were put on for an audience of some 60 guests in a home at suburban Rydal.

The audience gathered at the home of William H. Grimditch, the company's chief engineer, where images about seven by eight inches were seen. Mr. Grimditch, in commenting on the experiment, said, however, that picture quality equal to that of home movies was the goal being sought, and that greater perfection would be achieved before an attempt would be made to enter the commercial television field. He predicted that commercial television would "not come this year nor next."

FROM READERS

CALLS STARS' RADIO WORK INGRATITUDE

To the Editor of the Herald:

The exhibitors of the country must stand on their hind-legs and protest vigorously the encroachment upon their business by the appearance of motion picture stars on radio programs.

Film producing companies and motion picture theatres have developed motion picture personalities, exploited them to the public to the benefit of the stars and the industry. It is gross ingratitude, treason and a short-sighted policy for such stars to try and avail themselves of some easy money through radio appearances. Their tenure of popularity will be shortened and motion picture investments in such personalities destroyed.

Such ingratitude and shortsighted stars will only reap the reward of an early decadency. Motion picture star values should be conserved and hoarded by the producers and exhibitors as valuable assets and not wasted.

Even the mythical goose that laid the golden eggs was killed and then there were no more golden eggs!—H. E. Huffman, General Theatres, Inc., Denver, Col.

Delay in RKO Reorganizing

Announcement by Federal Judge William Bondy in the United States district court in New York Tuesday that he would require an additional six to eight weeks in which to decide the validity of Rockefeller Center's claim of $9,100,000 against RKO indicated the reorganization of RKO again would be delayed.

Discussions between Atlas Corporation and Rockefeller Center officials, for a basis of settlement, are being continued. Atlas owns one-half of RCA's holding in RKO and has an option on the remainder.

Petitions for interim allowances totaling $148,308 for services in the RKO reorganization for the first half year were reduced to a total of $88,308 and allowed in that amount by Judge Bondy prior to his leaving on Wednesday for a European vacation. The petition of Irving Trust company, RKO trustee, for a fee of $60,000, was allowed at $35,000. That of Donovan, Newton, Leisure and Lumbard, counsel of the trustee, for $85,000, was allowed at $50,000, and a final petition for $3,308 by Price, Waterhouse and company, accountants, was allowed in full. In addition, Judge Bondy reduced his previous allowance of $231,500 on a claim of the late S. L. Rothafel to $179,271, allowing it in that amount.

Arguments were also heard Tuesday before Federal Judge Liebell in the $500,000 suit filed against RKO by Claire H. Davis. The action seeks an injunction to enjoin further showing of "Bunker Bean" and $500,000 damages, half of which is sought under a separate cause of action in a complaint which alleges libel.

B. B. Kahane at Columbia Pictures As Vice-President

B. B. Kahane has assumed a newly created vice-presidency with Columbia Pictures. His resignation as president of RKO Studios, Inc., and a settlement of his contract which had until October to run has been arranged, he announced last week-end.

Mr. Kahane had not been actively in charge of production with RKO since the advent of Samuel Briskin several months ago. He has been associated with the film business since 1919 when he came to New York from Chicago to help reorganize the Orpheum circuit. He is a lawyer and has been general counsel, secretary, treasurer and member of the board of Orpheum.

When the Orpheum circuit became a part of Keith-Albee-Orpheum he was elected secretary and made a director. When RKO was formed late in 1928 he was made secretary and treasurer, a member of the board and chairman of the executive committee. In April, 1932 he went to Hollywood and took charge of the RKO Radio and RKO Pathe Studios.

Harry Cohn, president of Columbia, announced this week that William Perlberg will handle all production for the company.

Mr. Kahane, it is assumed, will concentrate on administrative's problems.

Roxy Net is Up To $172,254.28

Net earnings of the Roxy Theatre in New York for the year ended June 11, 1936, were $172,254.28, in comparison with $136,066.62 for the year previous and $54,453.32 for the year ended June 14, 1934, according to Amott, Baker and Company. This report will be sent to the bondholders of the Roxy in addition to a plan of reorganization which provides for a management contract with Howard S. Cullman and Harry C. Arthur for a number of years.

Included in the Amott, Baker report of July 7 are the figures for the assessed valuation of the property for the last four years. Each year the value has decreased, the 1936 figure being $3,500,000; for 1935, $3,650,000; for 1934, $3,850,000; for 1933, $4,300,000.

Income, which comprises admissions and miscellaneous items, for the 12 months ended June 11, 1936, was $1,529,859.91. This compares with $1,334,888.54 for the year previous. Expenses of $1,357,605.63 are listed for the June 11 period, as compared with $1,198,821.89 for the prior year.

Interest requirements for the 52 weeks ended June 11 last were $225,046.88, the same as those for the 1935 and 1934 periods. Disbursements for the first half of the current year out of income in payment of real estate taxes were $47,250. Real estate tax and penalties paid in the last four and a half years total $635,521. Funds at hand as of May 28, 1936, with the fiscal agent, amounted to $19,218.75. With the trustee there is approximately $60,000.

One of the humorous tidbits of the week comes from Douglas Churchill in Hollywood and concerns the Marx Brothers. After pondering over it for some time Harpo shouted, "Throw it out." "But it cost several thousand dollars," protested the Metro property man. "We can't throw it away." Groucho stepped into the argument. "No, Harpo, you can't waste money like that in Hollywood," he admonished. "Have it silver-plated and then throw it out."

Harold Eugene (Hal) Roach is making much of the fact that Stanley Jefferson (Stan) Laurel and Oliver Norvelle Hardy, his two pet comedians, are today on their tenth anniversary under the Roach banner. Mr. Roach, in a publicity announcement laden with old historical facts, calls attention to the day in 1914 when he introduced Harold Lloyd to the screen. There is no mention, however, of a little incident of $3,000 which had just been inherited by Hal Roach, then a Universal stock cowpuncher, and which enabled him to "plunge" into production on his own. To Hal Roach, Harold Lloyd owes a great debt, for it was Roach who satisfied Lloyd's ambitions in those day to make a lot of money to indulge his fancy for loud and widely striped silk shirts of the style worn by burly truck drivers when they socialized Saturday evenings at beer parlors.

Art and Blind Selling

Exhibitors occasionally complain of the vagueness of the advance information on forthcoming product and production personalities, which they contract for at the beginning of each season, and which are pictorially described in the distributors' annual product announcements. The home office advertising departments each year work strenuously to outdo each other in arriving at the most distinctive appearance in their announcement book. This year that ambition has resulted in probably the most unique twist ever given to this form of blind selling, in the instance of United Artists' product announcement, which, along with photographs of its stars and production personalities, tries to pan off on unsuspecting exhibitor prospects the pictures below of their two outstanding producer leaders:

Radio's "Mary of Scotland" opened at the New York Music Hall theatre the other week, and immediately the Rockefeller Center Weekly—Radio's City's community magazine—rushed into print with a highly commendatory review of the production which had just opened in its midst. "Katharine Hepburn, without doubt," they said, "does the best work of her career as Mary Tudor." Will some person please awaken the editors of Mr. Rockefeller's weekly to the fact that Mary, Queen of Scots, the part portrayed by Miss Hepburn, was a proud Stuart, and that the Tudors were her poisonous enemies, Elizabeth Tudor causing her to be beheaded.

Motion picture producers contemplating the filming of spy stories might consider the observations of William Philip Simms that the unromantic truth about spies—movies and best-sellers to the contrary—is that spies seldom if ever find out anything of great value, and that spying — successful spying — is tremendously overrated. Even the now celebrated Mata Hari, heroine of a Metro-Goldwyn movie in 1931, never turned in a single worthwhile secret, a French intelligence officer who helped shoot her told Mr. Simms.

MGM had the blonde Greta Garbo reenact a Mata Hari who danced exotically and captivated men the while she supposedly gathered "valuable information" in Paris as a German spy. True, she did meet a French firing squad in the cold dawn of a winter morning in 1917, but further than that the movie scenario was considerably fictionized, said Mr. Simms.

We have yet to see a spy motion picture depict spying as Mr. Simms, Scripps-Howard foreign editor, describes the "profession":

"Practically everything any foreign government needs to know about the American navy, for example, can be had by following debates

CHICAGO OPERATORS ASK SCALE INCREASE

Both Theatre Organizations Are Against Raise; Contract Is Up for Renewal October 1

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

A salary increase of twenty-five per cent will be sought by the Chicago Motion Picture Operator's Union when parleys for the arranging of a new yearly contract take place here during the next two weeks.

According to Frank Clifford, business manager of the union, no radical changes will be asked in the new contract.

Both the Chicago Exhibitor's Association and the Allied Theatre group are understood to be firmly opposed to any raise in operator's salaries. Last winter a salary increase of twenty per cent was asked by the union but a change in the termination of the contract to September 1, 1936, halted negotiations and the salaries of operators remained the same.

Again the possibility of Banknight entering Balaban & Katz loop theatres comes up for consideration. This time credence is given to the report because of the results Jones, Linick and Schaeffer, operators of the State-Lake theatre, have had from Prosperity Night, a plan similar to Banknight and incidentally owned by the same concern. Starting with a heavy advance campaign to secure registrations and with $150 as the weekly cash award, the State-Lake has, through the cumulative process, built up a jackpot of $1350. This cash award has been instrumental in increasing the Friday's business to the highest figure for that day the house has known for years. Friday is the last day of the week's engagement and business is usually dull.

With this opposition house showing a nice profit through the use of the giveaway game, B&K are understood to be on the verge of putting the attraction into all of their loop houses, the 4,000 seat Chicago included. With 14,000 seats to sell in the loop B&K could easily accommodate huge crowds, especially with the use of the All-Day Banknight plan, which makes everyone attending the theatre during the day of the drawing eligible for the award.

Attendance Is Up, Says Jack Warner

Theatre attendance in the last three months has increased one-third over similar periods for the previous two years, "the low ebb," Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of Warner production, declared Tuesday upon his arrival in New York from Hollywood on his way to London and Salzburg on a vacation and business trip.

The increase, noted throughout the world, is due primarily to the improved quality of product, Mr. Warner said.

With 14 productions in work, Mr. Warner said this was an all-time high for the studio on the coast. The company is four months ahead of schedule. "Charge of the Light Brigade," just completed, will run two hours and 15 minutes on the screen, he said. Victor Moore has been added to the long cast of "Gold Diggers of 1937."

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Kane Color Film

New World's all-color "Wings of the Morning" has been practically completed as a studio production, but several exteriors remain to be shot for the Robert T. Kane picture which will have 50 per cent of outdoor scenes when it is finished.

Closeup racing shots of "Steve" Donoghue, crowd effects for the Derby sequences, London hotel scenes on Derby night and singing shots of Count John McCormack were among the items on the Denham floor this week, with a romantic sequence between Annabella and Henry Fonda in a hayloft somewhere on the Irish coast.

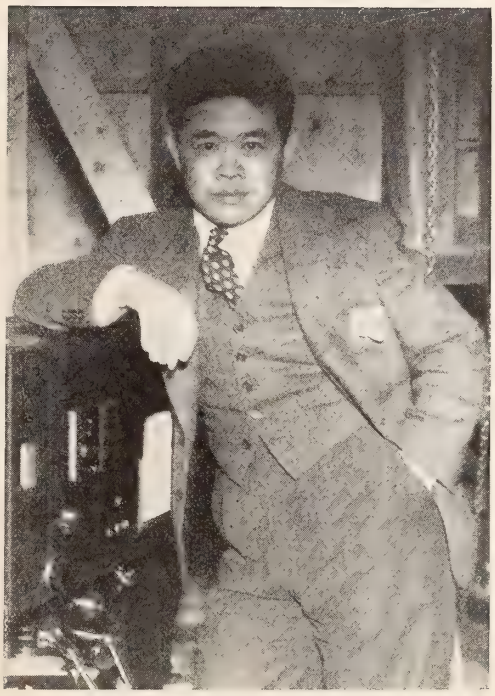
Irene Vanbrugh is the latest big name to go on the cast list. The English stage star plays the part of Mira, old gypsy owner of the wonder horse about which the story is built.

Harold Schuster, cameraman, thinks the English summer will begin in time for his final exteriors.

GB Studio Holiday

Six hundred employees of the Gaumont-British studio at Shepherd's Bush on Saturday started their summer vacation, the plant closing down completely for two weeks. This is a regular G-B practice, the shutdown permitting a complete overhaul of equipment by the maintenance staff.

The George Arliss feature, "The Nelson Touch," was the last off the floor. Arliss had been sick, but came back to the studio on July 27th, with just two weeks shooting still to be done on his first dual role picture. Herbert Mason, director, meanwhile had completed sequences, actually the opening of the film, of an Arabian palace in which Basil Gill plays the part of an Emir murdered by his treacherous ministers.



For the Alfred Hitchcock "Sabotage" current settings have shown the Aquarium of the London "Zoo" and interiors of one of those bird and beast stores for which the Tottenham Court Road, London, is famous. Practically everything in the way of livestock, from parrot to 'possum, from trout to turtle, has been used in these scenes, background for conspiratorial work in which Oscar Homolka has the big say.

Jessie Matthews, for "Head over Heels," recorded the big musical number, "May I Have the Next Romance," written for her by Gordon and Revel. Sonnie Hale, directing, put it on in a big open air Parisian cafe setting, with a forty-piece orchestra. Between shots, Jessie sat for her picture to James Montgomery Flagg, with American magazine covers in view.

Down at Aldershot, Raoul Walsh has added to the cast of "O. H. M. S." the Second Battalion of the East Kent Regiment (The Buffs) in physical drill sequences and three hundred troopers selected from the Scots Greys, the Queen's Bays and the Royal Hussars in a spectacular cavalry charge. Col. E. D. Fanshawe, crack polo player, led the onslaught. The unit next went to Tidworth for Artillery sequences.

Lee Directs Harding

Rowland V. Lee, arrived on the Europa, is scheduled to direct the Ann Harding vehicle for Max Schach, "Love from a Stranger," beginning interiors at Denham on August 15th. This Trafalgar production is for United Artists world release. The male lead is still to be chosen, with probability pointing to Frank Vosper, author and star of the stage version of the Agatha Christie thriller.

James Wong Howe, Hollywood camerman who has made or collaborated on many of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's productions, is busy at the Denham studios photographing Erich Pommer's "Fire Over England" for London Films.

Twickenham's Four

Illustrating the advance of the Twickenham concern controlled by Julius Hagen is the fact that four productions are at the present moment on the floor, all for release by Twickenham Film Distributors. Two of these are at the original studio at St. Margaret's, "Beauty and the Barge" and "Underneath the Arches." Two are at the J. H. Studios, Elstree, "Spy of Napoleon" and "The Man in the Mirror."

"Beauy and the Barge," temporarily held up by the illness of Gordon Harker, is on location at Weybridge, with an authentic Thames barge supplying backgrounds. "Underneath the Arches," the Flanagan and Allen comedy, is using a set of a ship's deck, with the leading duo as stowaways. Gibson Gowland and Andrea Melandrinos are additions to the cast.

"Spy of Napoleon" is in its last scenes and is scheduled for a September 9th London trade show. The Orczy adaptation has Dolly Haas and Richard Bathelmess as stars. "The Man in the Mirror," with Genevieve Tobin and Edward Everett Horton is in its third week.

"Rock City"

The Joe Rock "Edge of the World" unit, with Michael Powell as director, is located on the island of Foula in the Shetland Islands in a hut camp which has been titled "Rock City." One of the huts, equipped with a projector for the purpose of showing rushes, has given the islanders, the chief actors in the film, their first sight of a motion picture.

"Rembrandt" Repainted

Alexander Korda is in his eight week of personal direction of Charles Laughton in "Rembrandt" at Denham. A recent scene is a reconstruction of the convivial party in the Bodega Tavern at Amsterdam which provided the painter with his models for "The Night Watch." Another set, of the interior of the Town Hall of Amsterdam, has employed the best part of one of the large Denham stages, the scene calling for a ceiling height of fifty feet. Korda has another week of shooting to do, including a few exteriors in Holland. To follow "Rembrandt" on the London floor will be the Marlene Dietrich-Robert Donat vehicle, "Knight without Armour."

Alexander Korda said this week that "I Claudius," also a Laughton vehicle, will be the next, and also the last picture which he personally will direct.

Soskin-Columbia

Paul Soskin has closed a deal in London whereby he will produce eight pictures for world release by Columbia. Three of the eight, in the class of specials, will be budgeted at £80,000 ($400,000) each. while the remaining five will cost £40,000 each.

Columbia will lend players, directors and technicians from the Hollywood studio. Production will be at the Amalgamated Studios here.

Itemized

Jack Raymond has completed the direction of "Chick," Sydney Howard's British & Dominions production for United Artists release. . . . Steffi Duna is to have the role of Nedda in "Pagliacci," opposite Tauber, which begins at Denham in mid-August, as a Schach Trafalgar production for United Artists release. . . . Song and dance number "The Wrong Rumba," for Elsie Randolph, and a Sigler, Goodhart and Hoffman song for Jack Buchanan, "The Wrong Rhythm," were recorded for Herbert Wilcox Productions' "This'll Make You Whistle" at Elstree. . . . Ivar Campbell finished "Grand Finale" for Paramount at Sound City. . . . Patric Knowles, discovered by Irving Asher here and sent to Hollywood, has been reloaned to Teddington for "The Duchess," opposite Margaret Lockwood.

Harry Ross To Survey European Situation

Harry A. Ross, president of Ross Federal Service, Inc., sails August 19th on the Aquitania for England, where he will make a survey of motion picture checking and market research potentialities. He also will visit France, Belgium, Italy, Holland, Norway and Sweden before his return in October.

Several answers to Section A have been selected for publication. R. D. Summers says: "Naturally a circuit of large wire costs more than does one of smaller wire. Watts are the measurement of power. They are the product of volts times amperes. Glancing at Table No. 1, page 63, of the Bluebook, we see that a No. 8 wire with rubber-covered insulation is rated at 35 amperes. Now that wire will not be overloaded with 35 amperes under either 110 or 5,000 volts pressure. Loaded thus at 110 volts pressure, it represents 35x110 = 3,850 watts, or 3,850 ÷ 746 = 5.16 + horsepower; whereas 35 amperes at 5,000 volts would represent 5,000 x35 = 175,000 watts, or a trifle more than 234.5 horsepower. From this it is evident that circuit installation expense would be very much less to transport any given amount of power at high tension (voltage) than at low tension.

J. R. Prater answers, "Electric power may be transported more cheaply at high than at low voltage, because carrying capacity of wires is governed wholly by amperage and not by voltage. Any wire will carry its rated amperes at any voltages for which it is insulated. Therefore, since power (watts) is a value equal to volts times amperes, we see that a wire rated at 50 amperes can only carry 50x100 or 5,000 watts of power at 100 volts; whereas it can carry 10,000x50, or 500,000 watts at 10,000 volts. It then follows that it is much more economical where power is to be transported long distances to do so at high than at low voltage."

P. and L. Felt say, "Power may be transported more cheaply at high than at low voltage due to the fact that voltage has nothing to do with wire diameters. A small current at high voltage may be transported over a small wire and still represent power that would require a large wire to carry were the voltage low and the amperage high.

C. L. Davis and H. T. Plumb answer, "Basically the question deals with what constitutes electrical power. As in the case of water, power is found in two things, namely pressure and quantity, in this case voltage and amperes. One volt moving ten amperes means ten watts of power. Ten volts moving one ampere also means ten watts of power. We may move one ampere over a wire not much larger than a horse hair. To move ten amperes would require a much larger carrier, regardless of what the voltage might be, therefore high voltage and low amperage means ability to transport a given quantity of power over smaller wires than would be necessary were the voltage low and the amperage high.

(B) D. H. Danielson says, "I call my inspection forms 'routine sheets' and consider them as exceedingly important tools for the projectionist. [To which I must add a fervent amen—F. H. R.] They are very necessary reminders of those many chores and inspections, the regular performance of which means so much in theatre projection room. So numerous and varied are the items that must have regular attention if the best results are to be had, that it is very easy to overlook some of them unless an inspection form is used and consulted each day.

W. C. Brown says, "Inspection forms are both necessary and valuable in keeping a systematic check upon all equipments, and to enable the projectionist to keep the management advised of the condition of equipments.

G. Thompson replies, "The Bluebook instruction regarding an inspection sheet (page 631) impressed me as plain good sense, so I made one and have remade it several times, adding things overlooked the first time.

"Every morning after the daily clean-up and oiling, I step to the wall, consult the inspection sheet and attend to the various things thereon shown as requiring attention. And, Dad, I attend to them, permitting myself no shirking.

A. L. Cooper says, "Inspection forms are necessary to prevent accidental neglect of equipments. The projectionist should keep separate forms daily for inspection and lubrication as well as on items requiring bi-weekly, monthly and semi-annual attention. If such records are kept and faithfully observed, they will help both in servicing equipments and as a time-saving guide for the projectionist."

H. B. Smith puts it this way: "Inspection forms are necessary to insure the making of necessary repairs, replacements and adjustments before serious trouble occurs

THEATRES EMERGE FROM SPAIN'S CHAOS, DISTRIBUTION PARALYZED

Flat 15 Per Cent Pay Increase Decreed for All Industries; Salaries Must Be Paid for Strike Period; Americans Safe

by HARRY C. PLUMMER
in Barcelona, Spain

While motion picture exhibition is slowly emerging from the chaos of modern Spain's savage civil war, distribution is at the point of complete paralysis. The cinemas of capital Madrid have reopened within the week. The next few days may find the legitimate houses in operation. Barcelona again has film entertainment.

As previously reported by cable to MOTION PICTURE HERALD the plants and personnel of the American, British and European distributors have suffered no physical molestation and, except in the case of Jacques Edelstein, director general of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Iberica, who is understood to be in Palma de Mallorca, capital of the Balearic Islands, which is now under bombardment, all executives of the Spanish affiliates of the American companies here, and their staffs, are fully accounted for. Americans and foreigners of every nationality are being accorded the utmost consideration by the Regional Catalan and Spanish national governments and by the Communist, Socialist and Labor syndicates now jointly cooperating with the authorities in reestablishment of law and order, while the Americans, British and other consulates general are working day and night to safeguard and protect their nationals and property.

Present indications are that, beyond the prosecution of radical labor measures to which it was committed by the national elections creating the Fronte Popular (People's Front) several months preceding the violent civil and military disorders, the constituted authority in Catalunya and elsewhere throughout Spain will not unduly restrict the operations of foreign film interests. What measures are to be taken for the regulation of the Spanish national picture industry and what effect, competitively or otherwise, those measures may have upon the American group remains to be seen.

For the present the authorities are concerning themselves with the taking over of industries in the fields of alimentation, public utilities, building materials and others more closely related to the civil exigencies and military objectives of the hour.

Group To Fix Rentals

Rene J. Huett, general manager for Warners in Spain, and L. Echeverria, chief accountant for M-G-M here, have been named to the committee of four which, with the Syndicate, is to fix the basis of film rental for the socialized film theatres.

All film houses in Barcelona opened last Sunday, playing 90 per cent of American films, with their programs as of July 19th. With regard to American film interests, Espinart Mestres of the Syndicate and Jose Carner Ribalt, newly appointed Commissioner of Public Spectacles for Catalonia, representing the Generalidad, assured distributors that in the employee-operation of the theatres, the houses will take over the distributor contracts from the date of reopening.

The American distributors' rights will be fully respected as foreigners, both of the officials declared.

The situation here is clearing rapidly, and an official of Mutua, the distributor organization here, is acting as liaison between the two factors.

Affiliates' Status Defined

However, the state of "inspection" continues in varied degrees. The Generalitat de Catalunya and the Sindicato de Empleados de Espectaculos Publicos had notified the distributors in Spain, both American and foreign, that delegates would take over their plants and proceed to "inspect" them. At the urgent suggestion of the QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS correspondent, the American distribution managers conducted a legal investigation at once to determine the technical positions of the American corporations' Spanish affiliates—Metro, Fox, United Artists, Universal and the rest—in respect to the status of their assets and property legitimately entitled to the protection of the American Consulate General here.

The result was that they found their subsidiaries to be definitely Spanish corporate entities and, as such, their properties, including every piece of furniture, typewriters, accounting machines, and even Metro's costly and elaborate dubbing plant, can not be placed under the protection of the United States Government, except for their film stock on hand, and this is the property, until paid for, of an American supply company which is a subsidiary of the parent MGM company in America.

Display Certificate Posted

The other distributing companies are similarly situated, some of their film-supply affiliates being French or British subsidiaries. The result was that American Consulate General Lynn W. Franklin forthwith had a display certificate posted on the front of the Metro premises stating in effect that "American interests are represented in this establishment by a stock of films, which must be respected." The certificate was signed both by Consul Daniel M. Braddock and by an official of the Spanish Generalitat de Catalunya. By this means, temporarily, at least, the film stocks will be protected against looting and, from what is equally as bad, against ignition by the numerous bands of quasi-guerrilla delegates of labor syndicates who are racing through the city in stolen cars.

Sindicato Unico Espectaculos, the government organization in charge of theatricals and the Sindicato Economicos de Casas Distribudoras, the new distributors' organization which was evolved out of Mutua, on Wednesday effected a new credit arrangement between distributors and theatres the basis of which is for distributors to collect film rentals at 70 per cent in cash and the remaining 30 per cent in deferred credit for two months.

Banks Reopened but Only for Cashing Pay Checks; 40-Hour Week Decreed; Film Stocks Are Protected from Looting

All theatre receipts are to be deposited in Banco Espana and the books of the theatres are to be constantly available for inspection by the distributors.

The government on Monday was understood to have seized Metro's Capitol theatre in Madrid, defending the seizure with the explanation that the action was legal because the theatre is registered as a Spanish company even though it is operated by American interests. The Americans on the staff were replaced by Spaniards.

Decrees just issued definitely establish the 40-hour week and a flat 15 per cent pay increase in all industries and the fixing of "the vital salary minimums" for varied industrial groupings. Also decreed are the automatic settlement of all strikes pending at the moment of the outbreak, "a measure . . . indispensable to the restoration of normal community life"; the payment of all wages and salaries accrued during the general strike declared over the period of the uprising and the compensating of the "citizen militia" drafted from the labor forces of Catalunya and the holding open of their places of employment during absence therefrom in the line of duty.

While the banks were opened, by government edict, their operations were strictly limited to the cashing of paychecks.

Theatres Commandeered

The major American distributor-controlled cinema theatres in Barcelona, the Coliseum, Femina and Astoria, as likewise the huge Kursaal, one of a private syndicate, have been commandeered by the military authorities for enlistment of citizen militia units, but except for some lobby disarrangements and a few broken windows none of these houses have suffered damage to an extent that would seriously delay their reopening.

The cinema operators, grouped in the Espectaculos Publicos Syndicate, have been active throughout the week in the filming of violent disorders, under the direction of the Bureau of Information and Propaganda of the Generalitat de Catalunya. The reels they have shot will show the burning of all but a few of the city's many churches. (The Cathedral, the Sagrada Familia, an architectural monument, the famous mountain top monastery of Monserrat, the locale of Wagner's "Parsifal" and a very few others have been spared by edict of the Consejera de Cultura, as artistic treasures.

All motor-cars belonging to foreigners as well as those of Spanish and Catalan ownerships were commandeered at the outset of the revolt for military and syndicalist forces.

Radio Appearances Likely To Evoke Producers' Action

Continued exhibitor protests that the appearance of motion picture stars on radio programs is hurting box office receipts may bring action from the Producers Association. It is understood that the subject was discussed at a meeting of the association in Hollywood and that a committee was named to study the problem.

Producers are disagreed on whether a ban should be placed on the radio appearances. Some executives are of the opinion that such programs are aids to the box office value of the stars and that they also serve as effective publicizing of forthcoming pictures.

The Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York on Wednesday voted to petition the Hays organization in condemnation of the broadcasts.

To resolutions of protest passed by the Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut and the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California are now added two from the Independent Exhibitors Protective Association of Wisconsin and from Allied of New Jersey.

The Connecticut group has been particularly active in opposing the practice. In a letter to Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pitures, who has declared himself in opposition to film stars performing on the air during hours that conflict with theatre attendance, J. A. Davis, executive secretary of the group advocates sending telegrams of protest directly to the stars.

The Independent MPTOA of Connecticut again figured in the news when Mr. Davis announced that the group had passed a unanimous resolution congratulating Mrs. George Temple, mother of Shirley Temple, on her recent refusal of a substantial offer for the personal appearance of her daughter on a radio program and at the Texas Exposition.

Theatre Deal In Australia Hanging Fire

"Final determination of the future of General Theatres in Australia is not likely to be arrived at immediately," Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of Greater Union Theatres and associated companies, which are combined with Fox-Hoyt's, said in New York this week prior to his departure for Los Angeles, whence he will sail on August 19 on the Monterey for Australia. On the same boat and headed for Australia also will be Walter J. Hutchinson, head of the Twentieth Century-Fox foreign department.

The executive added he had completed details for refinancing his group of companies on the London market. Several of his companies will be merged into one unit. The extent of the financing will be £750,000 ($3,750,000), which he said will supply adequate capital for the purposes required.

Mr. Doyle also revealed there has been a change in the chairmanship of the board of Greater Union Theatres, H. Y. Russell having retired and Norman Rydge having been appointed in his place.

Mr. Leserman will announce 52 features to be handled in three divisions, the first to be known as 36 Grand National Winners; the second, eight melodramas, and the third, eight westerns. There will be no shorts. Several additional producers are expected to be made known by Mr. Leserman at the sales sessions.

With the appointment of six branch managers, the Grand National set-up for the midwest is now complete. Tom Tobin, formerly of RKO, has been assigned to St. Louis; Carl Reese, recently with Twentieth Century-Fox, is in Omaha; Russell Borg, who has resigned from Gaumont British, is manager in Kansas City; Lou Patz, who has been with Universal, is in Milwaukee; Lou Levy, formerly with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is at Des Moines, and Don Woods, until recently with Paramount, is Minneapolis branch manager.

H. Bradley Fish has been named local manager for the Grand National exchange in San Francisco into which Far West Film Exchange will be merged. Joseph M. Shea, formerly with Twentieth Century-Fox and Paramount, will be west coast publicity director. Sidney M. Bidell has joined as eastern story editor, Joseph Sullivan is to head the press book department, and Ralph Kinsler, formerly city salesman for RKO-Radio in Cincinnati, will manage the GN exchange which will open in that city shortly.

Charles Bickford has been signed to make a series of four pictures, the first of which will be "The Wild Man." "The Great Guy" has been set as the tentative title of the first film James Cagney will make for the company. W. B. Frank is reported to be dickering to make a picture for distribution through GN.

In addition the company will cooperate with Metropolis Pictures Corporation in release of six features and two musical shorts.

The French Company is planning American distribution of "France Actualities Gaumont," French newsreel.

WARNERS CLAIM 4-TO-1 VOTE AGAINST DOUBLES

Company Says 725,824 Replied to Questionnaire Addressed Directly to the Public

America stands four to one against the widely prevalent practice of showing two feature motion pictures on one theatre program, preferring a single feature with diversified short subject entertainment, says Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., reporting the results of a poll. The question was directed last May to a reputed 80,000,000 theatregoers to determine the public's pleasure on the motion picture's most perplexing trade problem of a quarter-century. The survey registered the views of 725,824 persons, and these, Warner believes, represent the viewpoint of the American public, inasmuch as the opinions are of a cross-section.

But what to do about it is something else again. The courts already have told the distributors, in the test case of Perelman vs. distributors, in Philadelphia, last year, that they cannot prohibit exhibitors, contractually or otherwise, from showing one of their features on the same program with another. And exhibitors apparently will not budge from their position on the ground that they cannot refrain from indulging in duals because their competitors refuse to do likewise. So the stalemate continues, and from all appearances it will continue for a long time.

Warner evidently refrained completely from soliciting exhibitors' viewpoints in the matter—and there are some 8,000 theatres dualing features out of the 14,000 and odd houses operating.

The immediate reason for Warner Brothers' interest in the matter appears to be the company's trend toward the production of extra-long features:—"Anthony Adverse," 150 minutes; "Green Pastures," 135 minutes; "Midsummer Night's Dream," 132 minutes, et all.

"Every interested person" was invited to present an opinion—except, as mentioned, the exhibitor who buys the pictures. Motion picture editors of more than 2,000 daily newspapers were asked to report the attitude of their readers and to invite "frank" expressions from them. Many papers conducted polls in their columns, each of the country's papers in cities of 5,000 or more inhabitants having been contacted directly by the company. So were radio commentators too, representatives of high school and collegiate publications were polled, and the cooperation was sought of some 1,000 social and civic organizations and schools.

Following is the vote from all of the 725,824 participants:

	NO. OF VOTES	PERCENTAGE
For double bills	157,073	22
For single bills	568,751	78
	725,824	100

"There was almost unanimous agreement that important productions which exceed usual length should not be cut to make them fit double-bills," said Warner, adding: "The general theme of the letters and statements protesting the cutting of such pictures was that there is now a scarcity of really fine films, and that when one is produced it should not be marred by excessive trimming. Even 'double bill' advocates urged that such productions be presented in their original, undeleted form."

Scores of arguments for and against the double-bill policy were said to have been offered. Seven leading arguments for double-bills were recorded in the survey. Listed in the order of the number of times each was presented they included:

1. The double feature program lends diversity to the entertainment.
2. There is a better chance that one of the two pictures will be enjoyable.
3. It gives us more for our money.
4. We like long programs.
5. A second feature is better than shorts.
6. One feature would be too little for the admission charged. We have learned to expect a lot for our money.
7. A second feature is better than vaudeville.

Following are the eight leading arguments claimed by Warners to have been advanced in favor of single bills, and listed in the order of times each was presented:

1. A good picture invariably is coupled with a poor one. Thus we sit through the poor one to see the good one.
2. The double-bill four-hour or more show is too long for pleasure.
3. We like more shorts.
4. The pleasure of seeing a good picture is marred by the second one, which wipes out the memory of the first.
5. We dislike the manner in which pictures are billed together.
6. The long double-bill show causes eye strain, headaches and fatigue.
7. To make pictures fit double-bill programs they often are cut so much that they become jerky and lose their entertainment value.
8. If one picture is suitable for children, the second picture generally is not.

The first two reasons above—"dislike of the usually inferior second picture and the length of the show"—drew a total almost exceeding those for all other reasons combined.

Following are percentage reports on opinions from various sources.

School teachers and principals:
For double features—27 per cent.
For single features—73 per cent.
Replies to polls conducted by newspapers:
For double features—28 per cent.
For single features—72 per cent.
Replies to polls conducted by radio commentators:
For double features—33 per cent.
For single features—67 per cent.

"Probably the most striking feature of the survey was the interest shown by the public in its motion picture entertainment, as evidenced by its eagerness to argue for what it thought right and to condemn what it opposed," Warners said.

Nicholas De Angelis Dead

Nicholas De Angelis, long associated with his brother, Phil De Angelis, in the De Angelis Outdoor Advertising Company, is dead in New York. The De Angelis company cooperates in the outdoor publicity work of most of the major distributors in New York.

MANY VOICES ON DUAL BILLS

Independent of Warner Brothers' national poll on the question of the public's attitude toward the widely prevalent double bill policy, developments within the trade indicate that the problem continues to provoke considerable controversy, as witness the following:

Exhibitors in New Orleans were informed of the passage by the Louisiana Council for Motion Pictures of a resolution opposing dual feature programs, and of another resolution approving programs consisting of a single feature, a short comedy, a newsreel and travelogue.

Indianapolis theatre owners are hearing expressions of dissatisfaction over duals from neighborhood patrons who are reported to be getting tired of the long programs, especially for their children. Too, the feeling is growing there that inevitably one of the double features will be a "quickie".

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Pictures, and for years one of dual bills' strongest antagonists, stood firm on his assertion that doubles cause exhibitors to lose at least one show's gross daily, and that the policy threatens considerable losses to all distributors in reduced revenue.

The Perelman dual bill case in Philadelphia against distributors still is awaiting appeal from the decision which prohibited distributors from compelling exhibitors to discontinue dualing.

Keith's Memorial, in Boston, is but one of many important runs which in recent weeks adopted a dual policy.

The St. Louis MPTO still aims to end duals by local agreement.

The Fox National Theatres Circuit is extending duals to a number of theatres, principally in the West.

Duals finally invaded Minneapolis, one of the last of the few remaining single bill strongholds.

Akron, Ohio, exhibitors attempted to enforce a citywide dual ban.

One of the biggest double bills of all time was that held at Kansas City's Lindbergh theatre — and it was free, Warner Brothers previewing "Green Pastures" and "Anthony Adverse".

Probably the worst defeat suffered to date by single bills threatens in Chicago, where, after strict adherence for years, exhibitors are getting ready to abandon a citywide dual bill ban in September. Balaban & Katz, dominant circuit factor in Chicago, is taking the lead and independents will follow. John Balaban confirmed the decision to change in a statement to the trade press on Tuesday, thus ending a single feature policy that has prevailed throughout the city since October 12, 1932.

Meanwhile the sales divisions of virtually every large distributor still stand in vigorous opposition to the dual practice.

DISTRIBUTORS WIN FOUR TESTS OF DISPUTE ON TRADE PRACTICES

Kansas City Court Decision Called Final Affirmation of Legality of Sales System of Prior and Exclusive Runs

Industry attention centered again this week on the persistent fight of exhibitors for "fair trade practices" in their relations with the large distributing organizations and circuits. Kansas City, Milwaukee and New York and Newark were the hubs of action, but in the four towns the results were all in favor of the distributor.

Affirmation by a federal court of the legality of the principle of clearance was seen as the factor of paramount importance which came out of the decision of Federal Judge Merrill E. Otis in Kansas City in dismissing the action of Emanuel Rolsky against Fox Midwest Theatres and major distributors.

Federal Court Judge Clark in Newark on Monday ordered dismissal of anti-trust suits, charging monopolistic practices in distribution, against Vitaphone Distributing Corp., First National Productions, Inc., First National Pictures Distributing Corp., and RKO Pathe Distributing Corp. The suits were ordered dismissed with consent on grounds these companies were not active when the action was instituted by Ledirk Amusement Co. and Strand Operating Corp., operators of theatres in the Oranges.

Applications of several other companies and executives for dismissal of similar action against them were denied. Among these were Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Harry M. Warner, Albert Warner and Joseph Bernhard, executives; First National Pictures, Inc., the Vitaphone Corp., Vitagraph, Inc., Fox Film Corp., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corp., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., RKO-Pathe Pictures, Inc., and RKO Distributing Corp. These concerns objected to jurisdiction of the New Jersey federal court in the suits on the ground they were not doing business in this district.

MPTOA Plan Waits

At the same time, in New York it was considered unlikely that there would be any action for at least another month by distributors toward conceding any part of the 10 point program of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, although representatives of the organization were still hopeful of obtaining some concessions in time for the majority of the new season contracts. In Milwaukee, results of a product questionnaire conducted by R. A. Tesch, business manager of the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, indicated that no one company has a standard sales policy, national, state or local.

Priority Established as Legal

That the principle of prior and exclusive runs and clearance is legal was quite definitely stated by Judge Merrill E. Otis at Kansas City.

The point was made by W. E. Kemp and Edward C. Raftery for the distributors that if the principle of selling first-run theatres priority of run is legal, then it is lawful to sell a 15 cent house a prior run over another 15 cent house.

Judge Otis assumed that interstate commerce was involved. On the second of the two issues he saw involved, that of whether there was a conspiracy among distributor defendants, or concerted action, or agreement, he said, "The conspiracy charged is of the character that, if it existed, might have been proved by facts and circumstances. But if from the facts it is as reasonable to draw a conclusion consistent with innocence as one that imputed illegality, then the former must be adopted. The explanation which is consistent with innocence is so much more reasonable than the explanation which imputed illegality.

"So, I have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that there was no conspiracy between the distributor defendants."

Says Question Is Settled

Commenting on the Kansas City ruling Gabriel L. Hess, general attorney for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., said:

"The decision of Judge Otis has upheld what distributors long have contended to be their right in the distribution of films. The decision settles the much disputed question of law."

All Sales Policies Vary

Results of the product questionnaire conducted by Mr. Tesch among the independent exhibitors of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, indicated that no one company has a standard sales policy.

The questionnaire sought information from exhibitors on product bought, companies assessing score charges, on percentage pictures, preferred play dates, obligation to purchase shorts, trailers or news to get features and companies specifying block buying.

In addition to showing wide variations in the sales policies of the eight large companies considered in the questionnaire—MGM, Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount, RKO, Columbia Warner, United Artists and Universal—the survey indicated that every company makes some selective deals and that some exhibitors are given special cancellation privileges.

Doubt Early Action on Practices

No action by distributors on conceding any part of the MPTOA's 10-point trade practice program is viewed in New York as likely for another month, although representatives of the national exhibitor organization are still hopeful of obtaining some concessions in time to take effect concurrently with most of the new season contracts.

A number of sales executives whose individual interest would be capable of breathing new life into the program at this time will be occupied during the next few weeks with the closing of circuit contracts and several plan to leave on their annual vacations immediately afterward.

A further indication lies in the fact that Ed Kuykendall, president of the exhibitor organization, has no plans at this time for coming to New York before Labor Day. Observers also believe that distributor action, if there is to be any, must be urged again by the exhibitor organization's leaders.

In a recent bulletin to MPTOA members Mr. Kuykendall indicated that if the trade practice program failed the organization might be impelled to abandon its policy of round table discussions for one of litigation and the sponsoring of industry legislation. Spokesmen believe, however, that an appeal would first be made directly to company heads.

DOUBT REOPENING OF LINCOLN SUIT

There is little probability that the Independent Theatres, Inc., Lincoln, Neb., federal court action for $1,353,000, recently dismissed, will be reopened, according to reports following a conference of the board of directors of the corporation this week. The action was on the court docket for more than a year. It charged restraint of trade, an existing collusion and conspiracy among Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, RKO, Warners, Universal, United Artists, Twentieth Century-Fox and Paramount distributors with J. H. Cooper, New York; Lincoln Theatres Corporation and Robert Livingston, and was dismissed without prejudice in June.

Differing opinions of the directors was the reported cause the case would not be reopened. The same defendants had won a dismissal in April on the State Theatres, Inc., suit for $444,000, on the same charges.

The Last of the Mohicans

(United Artists—Reliance)

Melodrama

Thrill action melodrama, heart touching romance, courageous adventure, savage passion, stark tragedy and pulse tingling danger are the elements of which this picture is woven. Elaborately produced, panoramic vistas of natural scenic beauty constituting the principal backgrounds, the show completely translates James Fenimore Cooper's semi-historical literary classic to screen entertainment.

Preserving and embellishing the full essences of the original, quality acting endows the film with an impressive and believable appeal to both class and mass patronage. Though the picture's time is the immediate pre-Revolutionary War period and it naturally is in costume, the entertainment it provides is based on those enduring fundamentals that are always uptodate. Consequently there is logical basis for modern showmanship marketing to arouse maximum public interest.

Affording an opportunity that is rare in current production, the show can be sold in two ways. For the intelligentsia, where that class dominates patronage, it can be publicized as a faithful picturization of Cooper's classic of romance, drama and tragedy told against the background of Colonial British-French Indian warfare. To the masses, those who go for pulsating thrill action melodrama, it can, frankly, be presented as a vivid gangster attraction. In that phase, instead of a swarthy tommy gun toting menace to hate and fear there is a treacherous savage Indian (a character vividly portrayed by Bruce Cabot) to cause cold shivers to run up and down spines. Likewise there's a hero to cheer for, and there are two girls, hurled into a turmoil of peril and hardship, one finding love, the other death, with whom to sympathize.

The theme of "The Last of the Mohicans" should be familiar to most persons, what with the prestige of its worth as a literary effort. It's the story of two English girls betrayed into peril by the treacherous Huron, Magua.

That situation premising all ensuing action, the film proceeds to illustrate their rescue by Hawkeye, Uncas and Chingaghook and, following a hair-raising canoe chase over swirling river rapids in scenes that are pictorially beautiful as well as packed to the hilt with dramatic thrill action, their deliverance at Fort William Henry. Follows the vividly produced siege of the Fort, the Colonial-British capitulation to General Montcalm's French and the desertion of the Colonials to protect their families and homes from the depredations of savage Indian warfare. Again Cora and Alice are captured by Magua in a wild raid on the fort and the situation builds to the memorable battle on the cliff in which Magua kills Uncas, Cora chooses death, and Magua and Chingaghook fight, with Chingaghook emerging as the last of the Mohicans.

A skilful application and blending of the primary requisites of desirable entertainment, the picture automatically recommends itself to exhibitors and patrons who appreciate the value of quality screen merchandise. Attractive to any kind of audience, highbrow or ordinary folk, adults, adolescents and youngsters, it calls for an aggressive campaign that approaches the vigorous character of the show. Readily lending itself to contacts with schools, pioneer, historic or literary societies, the picture's merit as entertainment places in exhibitors' hands many opportunities to demonstrate exploitation ability.

Previewed in the Alexander Theatre, Glendale. The audience, appreciative of the film in its entirety, also evidenced pleasure at seeing the Indians back on the screen as melodramatic menaces.

Follow Your Heart

(Republic)

Musical

"Follow Your Heart" emphatically demonstrates that the production of elaborately mounted musicals is not an exclusive major studio prerogative. Centering upon the presentation of operatic, classical, topical and folk song music, in which Marion Talley, making her screen debut, and Michael Bartlett score personal triumphs, and Clarence Muse and the Hal Johnson Choir register impressively, the picture also is an intelligent blending of tried and proved comedy, romantic and light dramatic entertainment fundamentals. Although the substantiating story is rather thin, smart direction, together with the application of eye and ear thrilling production values, causes it to serve as a sound basis for the show's chief entertainment quality—the musical content.

Initially the picture is a domestic comedy drama. This phase concerns itself with the antics of the Forrester family, an at-liberty and stranded troupe living in the old family mansion. As Luis Alberni, Nigel Bruce, Mickey Rentschler contribute to the hectic gayety, Bruce prevails upon the only sane member of the menage, Marion Talley, to finance a tour. She, convinced that all are batty, furnishes the money, but absolutely refuses to join them. With the return of the flopping troubadors, to whom have been added Michael Bartlett, Vivienne Osborne, Henrietta Crossman and Ben Blue, the show really gets under way as a musical.

Hearing a voice, Bartlett knows that at last they have the prima donna necessary to make the troupe a big league attraction. In his enthusiasm, not knowing that Miss Talley is singing, he makes a mistake and sends for glad hand promoter Walter Catlett to come and listen. That worthy takes one listen-and-look at Margaret Irving and departs in a hurry. Later, Bartlett hears Miss Talley singing to Rentschler's French horn accompaniment and then begins the battle to get her to join the show. Complicated by her adamant refusal plus her romantic attraction to staid John Eldredge, Bartlett has to resort to daring tactics.

Miss Talley's singing of several operatic, classical, thematic and specially prepared numbers is an artistic treat. Similarly the singing of Bartlett is of high artistic caliber. The production, in settings, costumes, backgrounds, all enhanced greatly by excellent photography, compare favorably with the most pretentious offerings of any company. While there are several slow spots in the picture as previewed, its sponsors, undoubtedly tremendously impressed by audience reaction, can be depended upon to eliminate them

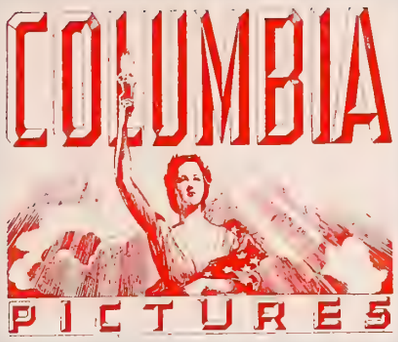
Sing, Baby, Sing



(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy

As sheer nonsensical farce, "Sing, Baby, Sing" is so different from any recent or current comedy picture that possibility of comparison is precluded. A merry, mad piece of film merchandise, it's one round of foolishness. For ninety minutes, with one ridiculous situation serving as a basis for the tomfoolery, the film rings in a succession of nutty interludes and specialties.

Whatever happens, whether it's musical or supposed to be dramatic, the air of high or low comedy never is forgotten. It may be the Ritz Brothers presenting their insanely conceived specialties, particularly their burlesquing of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, with Frankenstein thrown in for good measure, that are permitted to go wild on the screen. It may be Ted Healy's frantic attempts to prove that he's a magician, or it may permit Patsy Kelly to be the object of interest for the moment. But when they and the many others have had their fling—while even Michael Whelan tries to promote his romance with Alice Faye and at the same time keep her on an even keel as she mixes up with Adolphe Menjou, definitely and grandly recreating the addle-brained Shakesperean trooper—the picture goes mad again.

There's no rhyme or reason to all that happens. Laugh provocation is the film's sole objective and no matter what ridiculous angles have to be attacked, they are approached with zip and zest. Still, everything is done with the utmost good taste to establish "Sing, Baby, Sing" as the kind of attraction one can safely put his endorsement on as one of the funniest pictures of the season. A whirlwind of silliness that is always desirable entertainment, it's the kind of picture that permits exhibitors to enjoy high carnival of ridiculous ballyhoo.

Stage Struck

(First National)

Comedy Romance Drama

Produced by an organization specializing in the presentation of girl glamoured, music embellished, lavishly mounted backstage shows, this is a tuneful comedy romance drama of rather different variety. Not unique but, nevertheless, refreshing motivating story quality vies for entertainment supremacy with colorfully mounted spectacle features, songs and specialty numbers.

The cast, headed by Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Warren William and Frank McHugh, is backed up by a long list of familiar names, while one newcomer, Jeanne Madden, makes an impressive debut. Compared to earlier pictures made by this company and considering future films of the same classification, "Stage Struck" seems to have the qualities that please patrons of song studded comedy.

Not discounting the importance which inserted production effects exert upon narrative, the plot, in line with title significance, carries audiences into a full backstage atmosphere. The theme is written around a stage struck girl, Peggy Revere, who wants to be a leading lady and is willing to finance production if only given the opportunity. Continually played in the atmosphere of comedy, with dance director George Randall driven to distraction by Harris' demands that Peggy be given a part, the result is that Peggy walks out on Harris, who fires Randall. As affairs in Peggy's private life add to the comedy and light drama of the offering, another stagestruck damsel, Ruth Williams, fresh from the country, asks jobless Randall for a job.

The picture can be sold as a comedy, musical or girl glamour feature. Though seemingly long in running time, action is fast paced, music and dance numbers are included in the right spots, while the humorous contrast to the romantic and light dramatic situations accounts for plenty of laughs.

A Son Comes Home

(Paramount)

Character Drama

Although this picture has not been the beneficiary of any great advance ballyhoo, it seems to be one that, under skillful showmanship handling, can make a profound impression upon those who see it. It's an off the beaten path type of picture; the kind which in comparison with the current run of entertainment took considerable courage to produce. Mainly it is a character drama. It tells the story of a woman who put her sense of justice and fair play above that of mother love. In doing so it glows with a warm, human tenderness, with pathos and drama that play upon the emotions. As Mary Boland, essaying her first dramatic screen role, performs in a manner that calls for the use of superlatives, the story is honestly presented, directed with precision that eschews any artificiality and acted by the entire cast in a manner to match the strides of Miss Boland.

As a kind-hearted proprietor of a San Francisco waterfront chowder house, Mary Grady's great heartache is concern for her runaway son. Legitimately, reporter Steve publicizes her as the angel of the waterfront. A gas station attendant is killed and an innocent accomplice in the act, Denny, is arrested. Reading the papers, he gets the idea of palming himself off as Mary's son. The sympathetic woman, however, detects the ruse, but her heart goes out to a homeless boy in trouble. In Mary's home, Denny sees a picture of her deceased husband and recognizes in it a resemblance to the killer. Calling upon Steve for assistance, a transient sailor named Brennan is brought face to face with Mary. Mutual recognition is immediate, and though Mary's son makes a brutally desperate plea for motherly help, Mary demands that the boy acknowledge his crime that an innocent boy may be saved. Frantic, Brennan tries to escape, only to be mowed down by the police, and Mary goes home to take Denny as her son.

So played that it is compelling in its emotional dramatic quality, with never a trace of sloppy sentimentality, the straight from the shoulder character of the show has appeal for patrons who understand and appreciate sincerely presented serious entertainment. As the preview audience recognized its merit by watching in silence, it is evident that if the film's substance is made known to the theatre going public they will support it in a manner worthy of its value and importance as sympathy stirring screen merchandise.

Piccadilly Jim

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Comedy

A comedy, this is the kind of picture that pleases any kind of audience of any age or taste. In story content, prestige of stars and supporting players, substantiating production values and quality of entertainment provided, it is running over with showmanship availability.

From first to last, in dialogue, situations and action, the film is light, gay and airy. While it is that type of picture that permits many things to be said about it to pique patron interest, one of its outstanding features is that it presents Robert Montgomery in the type of character that won him legions of admirers. Likewise the work of the other cast members, especially Cora Witherspoon, Frank Morgan, Eric Blore, Billie Burke, Robert Benchley, Tommy Bupp, Ralph Forbes, is of the caliber that makes for much happiness for all who see the attraction.

Early London-localed sequences smartly establish identities and hint at the ensuing theme. Carnoonist Jim Crocker's particular activity in life is exercising of filial control over his playboy ham actor father. At the moment, Crocker, Sr., is all agog over Eugenia Pett, but he gets nothing but the cold shoulder and bum's rush from social climber Cora Pett, who keeps husband Herbert and daughter Eugenia under her thumb, though she can't do much with the family razzing brat Ogden. In the meantime, Jim has become all excited over Ann Chester, a young lady who always manages to elude him. To avenge his father's shoddy treatment at the hands of Cora, Jim, with the nom de plume Piccadilly Jim, starts a cartoon series lampooing the Petts.

Star for a Night

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy Drama Spectacle

Here's a show that looks like money in the bank. It's made up of things people like to see. It runs the range of entertainment showmanship from domestic comedy drama, through which runs a vein of appealing pathos, to an action packed spectacle of on-stage life. Based on a gay deception idea, it moves to the tune of drama, comedy, romance, conspiracy, music and hokum atmosphered melodrama. The human interest manner in which all the elements are blended elevates the film to a status of screen merchandise of above average values.

Though much ground is covered, the plot is simple and appealing. Living in Austria, Mrs. Lind, afflicted with blindness, believes her three children in America are great personalities. As they have scrimped and saved to provide surgical attention for her, they likewise have deluded her into thinking they are doing all right for themselves. But in New York, stage star Nina is only a chorus girl; Anna, rather than being a concert pianist, is a dime store song plugger, and Fritz is not an auto magnate but drives a taxi.

Without warning, Mrs. Lind arrives to live with her famous brood. Then the fun begins. Inspired by Nina, the family are to continue the deception rather than break their mother's heart. It's pathos tinged fun when Fritz rides her home in his taxi. It is continued in the Third Avenue walk-up flat which the unseeing mother is made to believe is a veritable palace. The story turns hilariously comic when Nina, along with show girl pals Mamie and Mildred, convinces golddigger chorine Ellen that she should send her boy friend on a vacation and permit the menage to move into her gaudy apartment. A dramatic twist is taken when Dr. Spellmeyer, romantically inclined toward Anna, and sympathetic to the deception, starts to treat Mrs. Lind's eyes and panic stricken Nina decides something must be done if she is to continue the illusion that she's a star.

Where the picture is supposed to be dramatic, it is so. Emotion stirring quality, rather than being ladled on, is applied intelligently and believably. When it's comedy, it's novel, gay and refreshing fun. There's a combination of elements for any taste.

China Clipper

(Warner)

Drama

"China Clipper" is really two stories. In stirring dramatic fashion one phase traces the history of American commercial aviation development. The other tells the human interest story of a man, an idea and an ideal. As it depicts the progress of aviation from the period immediately following the war to its present status, the film literally is a scientific education. As it tells the story of the man who sacrificed everything, family, home and friends on the altar of his vision, dreaming that one day he would see his hopes realized, it is human interest entertainment of high caliber.

Paying tribute to the ingenuity and courage of the men, who in the face of insurmountable obstacles made possible the present status of commercial aviation, Pat O'Brien, inspired by Lindbergh's conquest of the Atlantic, plans a trans-Pacific line. With flying buddy Ross Alexander, designer H. B. Walthall and backer Addison Richards, O'Brien starts a Washington-Philadelphia line which shortly succumbs to financial troubles. Still pursuing his dream, O'Brien, despite the pleas of his wife, Beverly Roberts, to devote his efforts otherwise, but joined by another buddy, Humphrey Bogart, prevails upon Alexander and Walthall to experiment with him on the first clipper ships flying the Caribbean. Success of the line, a matter of record, intensifies O'Brien's dream to span the Pacific. His devotion to his ideal causing his wife to leave him and Bogart to be fired, O'Brien drives Walthall to his death working on plans for the China Clipper. Mortgaging his South American line holdings to finance the flight, O'Brien's sacrifices bring ace flyer Bogart back to him. Against the most tremendous hazards the big ship takes off. Suspense is rigid as the world and O'Brien await news of the ship. When it lands safely in China and word is flashed back, O'Brien and Miss Roberts happily discuss a second honeymoon on the China Clipper.

An exploitation show if there ever was one.

Mickey's Circus

(U.A.-Disney)

Color Cartoon

Star performer in Mickey's circus is Donald Duck, whose star performers, in turn, are trained seals, big and little and unanimously hungry, whose alternate defiance and obedience of their maestro impart to the subject its humor. The tempo is well maintained and there are at least two laughs that start at the waistline, quite a number of lesser ones.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Listen To Freezin'

(RKO Radio)

Fair Comedy

Billed as a burlesque on high-pressure salesmanship with story by Al Boasberg, this short subject is only fair comedy. A newly married couple await the arrival of the bride's mother. When she does appear she complains about the house, so the husband obligingly moves to a bungalow. The mother then kicks about the old-fashioned ice-box, so husband and wife set out to buy a refrigerator. They meet a super-salesman, who talks them into buying one of every model in the store. Players are Lew Kelly, Ruth Hiatt, Elsie Newell and Edward Keane. Running time, 15 minutes.

Hill Tillies

(MGM)

Good Comedy

A good comedy featuring the team of Patsy Kelly and Lyda Roberti. The two girls, desirous of some publicity, migrate to the woods for a 10-day stay. They become lost and their agent sends two Indians in the woods to find them. After their experience with the Indians and a crazy man, the girls are ready to call it a day. Running time, 18 minutes.

Pathe Topics, No. 7

(RKO Radio)

Timely

A timely and interesting picturization of Harvard University, which this year is celebrating its 300th anniversary. The oldest University in this country, Harvard has buildings dating back to pre-revolutionary days which the camera depicts from various angles. Other points of historical interest covered include the Harvard Yard and the chapel built to commemorate the University's World War dead. Running time, 9 minutes.

Going Places, No. 25

Historic Nova Scotia

Comprehensive scenes of the land of the Acadians are here depicted, with narrative by Lowell Thomas. Apple trees brought by the French settlers are now thriving orchards, producing cider. In the Bay of Fundy a 7,000-ton steamer enters the Avon river at high tide and a few hours later is resting high and dry on the bottom, waiting for the high tide to continue on its journey. Shots of trapping fish in the low tide and lobster fishing complete the short. Running time, 10 minutes.

Lulu's Love

(Paramount)

Puppet Show

This is a puppet show. The puppets are called plastic puppets. That seems to mean that they are flexible instead of, or as well as, articulated. Most of the puppets are in canine image. They are endowed with human attributes. They portray a rudimentary love story. The figures are peculiarly unprepossessing and the comedy is of lean and meagre kind. It is all very dull. —Running time, 10 minutes.

Mickey's Rival

(U.A.-Disney)

Color Cartoon

A pleasantly pastoral interlude is afforded by the triumph of Mickey over a bull and a smart-aleck rival, reminiscent of the Max Hare seen in other Disney subjects, who interrupt, singly and together, his picnic with the fair Minnie. The subject is less complex than many of the recent Disney fabrications but wholly entertaining.—Running time, 8¼ minutes.

Play, Don

(Paramount)

Orchestral Short

Don Bestor, heard on a popular radio program a while back, puts his band through its paces in front of a studio audience that looks and acts a little too much like a studio audience to do the band or soloists much good. They could have used help, too. The highlight is a vibra-harp solo by Bestor, who uses the surefire "Star Dust" for the purpose. Otherwise the subject is pretty placid.—Running time, 11 minutes.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Of course this is old, but it clicked nicely at the box office and gave complete satisfaction.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S SQUADRON, THE: Richard Dix, Karen Morley—Played this with "Broadway Handicap" and it pleased the Handicap audience. Ideal action picture. Played July 17.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—Grace Moore failed to hold her former fans in this one. Business about one-half as much as we expected. Just another picture in Hopewell. The patrons stayed at home. Played July 20-21.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—Opened to fair business on Sunday and held up better than average for Monday and Tuesday. It seemed hard to sell before opening, but is one of those pictures that people tell their friends about. The sanity trial in this is one of the best things ever put on the screen. I had quite a bit of repeat business. Played July 19-21.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ROAMING LADY: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—This is a refreshing bit of entertainment. Good story and dandy lines. Well liked by our patrons. Played August 1.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

WESTERN COURAGE: Ken Maynard, Geneva Mitchell—More than the usual amount of music in this makes it one of Ken's best. I do wish some producer would give this star better stories and direction because he is so popular in the small town.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence. Ky. Small town patronage.

First National

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—Robinson is not a favorite here. Did fair, only fair, first night, then dropped to almost nothing the next. Played July 15-16.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—Good picture; the type that the men will go for and the women, too. It is packed with action and good drama runs through the whole picture. Not much comedy relief. Not as great as "Little Caesar," but Robinson was good in this hard-boiled role. It has a good title to start with and that means a lot when you are selling a picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Played this one rather old; substituted for "The Singing Kid" and still took a drubbing. Opened to fair business, but second day was poor. First time these stars had played Hopewell in three years, so maybe the people here have just forgotten them. Played July 27-28.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

EARTHWORM TRACTORS: Joe E. Brown—Very good Joe Brown picture. Plenty of laughs, thrills and good clean fun. Did not so much business on this one, but it was no fault of the picture. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 27-29.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—A poor picture and a poor follow-up for Bette Davis' fine performance in her prize winner of last year. Another one like this and we'll need to team her with Bank Night to get 'em in. Played July 1-2. —Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER: Kay Francis, George Brent—A good picture, but lacks in drawing power.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. General patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—First Davies picture to play here in three years and the natives didn't get excited. Out of sight, out of mind, I guess. Picture was only fair at best. Got version with happy ending, so that helped with the few who attended. Played July 29-30.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Your patrons will never miss this if you never show it. Marion Davies is getting old and hard looking. Dick is miscast, although he sings one good song. Charlie Ruggles, Edward Everett Horton and Arthur Treacher struggle hard to put over a few laughs, but Claude Rains makes the best Napoleon we've seen in ages. Summing it up, this has a good story and a grand cast, but it surely does not draw people to the theatre.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—A fair picture, but not the sort of thing the public want to see Davies and Powell in. Picture will do no more than average program business. No special by a long ways. Better use for short run. Running time, 69 minutes. Played July 20-22.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Dick Powell, Marion Davies—This was not up to Powell's standard; with very little singing. Claude Rains played the Napoleon part very well. Ruggles, Horton and Treacher carried the comedy angle very well. Drew good big Sunday and fair Monday. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 19-20.—Jerry Waller, Elroy Theatre, Elroy, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

SINGING KID, THE: Al Jolson, Sybil Jason, Edward Everett Horton—A very disappointing "special." No story, too much Al Jolson and too much review of his other pictures. Sybil Jason and Allen Jenkins are the highlights of this one. Did not please and took an awful nosedive at the box office. Running time, 94 minutes. Played July 24-26.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SINGING KID, THE: Al Jolson—Really was surprised. Had a lot of favorable comments on this, but to my estimation it's the ——'s.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

SONG OF THE SADDLE: Dick Foran, Alma Lloyd —Good western.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Avenue, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

SONS OF THE SADDLE: Dick Foran, Alma Lloyd —If you play westerns, this is O. K. for you. Better than the average. Does well at the box office. Played July 24-25.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. General patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—As a companion piece to "Louis Pasteur," this is a weak sister. It has the elements that will attract and please the older and conservative patron, but the younger element will find it rather on the dull side. There is no "sock" to it—no tension to grab your attention. Florence Nightingale, as Miss Francis portrays her, never seemed quite human. Played July 30-31.—G. E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis—This picture was the biggest disappointment I have had this year. Excellent dramatic picture, but will not draw any crowd. Do not think this picture will get over in the smaller towns. Running time, 91 minutes. Played July 6-8.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ABSOLUTE QUIET: Irene Hervey, Lionel Atwill—We were afraid to play this one after reading some of the reviews on it, but it was not such a terrible picture after all; nevertheless, I can't see why a company like Metro bothered to release it, or to make it at all. Running time, 77 minutes. Played July 28.—Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—Not so hot. Will get by on an off night, or on a Bargain Night.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Madge Evans, Franchot Tone, Stuart Erwin—Good Friday-Saturday action picture. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

FURY: Sylvia Sidney, Spencer Tracy—This one gets away from the usual run of pictures and with good success; excellent. Running time, 94 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—They gave Bob Montgomery a nice spanking with "Petticoat Fever." The public just didn't go for this one. Played June 10-11.—Elmer Brent, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—This picture is just plain silly in spots and also it is all dialogue. While the cast drew them, that is, Myrna Loy was the draw, and not Montgomery, it had its percentage of walkouts. Our sons of toil did not appreciate the mush that went with the love scenes, also Montgomery borrowed a little of the old Bill Haines stuff, and we all know what happened to Bill.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—This did not do average business for us. Although the dialogue was clever, it was too "talky" and the few who came the first night evidently didn't have a good word for it, for we had a very few the second night.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, K. Small town patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Quite rough in spots, but on the whole a good picture. Jean Harlow very good. Running time, 94 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy, Jack Holt—This has just what it takes for the box office. It is outstanding entertainment and reaches a terrific and breathtaking climax in the earthquake scenes that is a masterpiece of realism. Jeanette MacDonald really hands the customers a thrill when she sings "Jerusalem." The audience goes out talking about this one and sending their friends to see it. Played July 26-28.—G. E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Robert Taylor, Janet Gaynor—Used to like them from the big cities, but this "Small Town Girl" made a hit with me. Socko box office. Gaynor regained her lost prestige and Taylor added to his following. Made a payment on the back taxes after running this one. Played June 8-9.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

SPEED: Wendy Barrie, James Stewart—This fit in nicely for our Friday patronage. They liked it and it did better than we usually do on one day pictures. Good entertainment. Played July 31.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

UNGUARDED HOUR, THE: Loretta Young, Franchot Tone—Good mystery picture. Running time, 87 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

UNGUARDED HOUR, THE: Loretta Young, Franchot Tone—A good cast and interesting story makes this a very satisfactory evening's entertainment. And don't forget the very good little bad baby that cried so long, loud and well during the christening. This one pleased. Running time, 88 minutes. Played July 8-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clarke Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow—A cast that is popular and a very good story. Pleased everyone, I think, but weather was so hot, attendance was very small. However, that was not the fault of the picture. May Robson is great. Wish they would give her more and better parts. Running time, 89 minutes. Played July 18-19.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CASE AGAINST MRS. AMES, THE: George Brent, Madeleine Carroll—As good a picture as any company has made this year. Not a special, but far better than average program run. Business satisfactory. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 19.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

FLORIDA SPECIAL: Jack Oakie, Sally Eilers—Another murder mystery aboard a Florida Special train. Oakie is quite humorous as a nosey reporter. Double-billed this with "The Story of Louis Pasteur." Both features pleased customers as well as manager. Better than average biz. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 22-23.—Jerry Waller, Elroy Theatre, Elroy, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL OF THE OZARKS: Virginia Weidler, Henrietta Crosman—Little Virginia comes through in first-class rate fashion in this, and she carries the whole load at that, except for Henrietta Crosman, whose "Granny" role was excellent also. It drew a little better than I expected and gave lots of satisfaction. This child is really an actress and I hope the producers can find the right kind of stories for her and then give her competent support.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY, JULY 10, 1936

Two Films That Flourish Even In Midsummer

Thoughts on "San Francisco" And "Cloistered" as They Continue on the Screen

By Edwin F. Melvin

There used to be an adage in the theater that good plays do good business regardless of the weather. According to this school of thought, handicaps which wreak havoc on less successful entertainments are largely alibis for weaknesses which really lie elsewhere. There is a considerable measure of truth in such a theory, not only on the stage but in the movies.

First opportunity since civilization revealing the mysteries of lives of women in a strictly cloistered convent never before filmed.

KLONDIKE ANNIE: Mae West, Victor McLaglen—We played this late because afraid of smut. Everybody very much pleased. Mae has a positive, not a negative, personality and is a fascinating, talented human who doesn't need blah to draw crowds. She sent 'em away feeling they'd had a something of mental virility as well as darn good entertainment. —Mary Hayes Davis, La Belle and Clewiston Theatres, La Belle and Clewiston, Fla. Small town patronage.

POPPY: W. C. Fields, Rochelle Hudson—Being a Fields fan, I naturally liked this feature, as did all the customers. The carnival scenes were good. A carnival picture such as this is perfect for Fields. He can sure run the old shell game and sell bad medicine. Just average biz. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Jerry Waller, Elroy Theatre, Elroy, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bing Crosby, Frances Farmer—An excellent western that pleased all and did business. Crosby, Bob Burns and Martha Raye excellent. Should be played Sunday.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SKY PARADE: Jimmy Allen, Katherine DeMille—Very good program picture. Expected this to only please children, but it went over big with the adults. Used it on Bargain Night and did excellent business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 23.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—Another trans-continental trip via plane with plenty of excitement and attempted murder en route. Zasu Pitts has an awful time as nurse to Bennie Bartlett (the little brat), who comes through with flying colors in the climax. Better than average biz. Running time, 76 minutes. Played July 29-30.—Jerry Waller, Elroy Theatre, Elroy, Wis. Small town and rural patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE: Henry Fonda, Sylvia Sidney—Added prestige to the house and money in the bank. A beautiful production and incidentally the only picture Paramount has delivered in this, the worst in their career. Played July 18-19. —Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fred MacMurray—Exceptional. We had two audiences to above average business and we heard no complaints whatever. Played July 22-23. —C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Puritan

BULLDOG COURAGE: Tim McCoy, Lois January—Here's a western that will please and draw them in. Get it and play it. Played July 24-25.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwycke, Preston Foster—A dandy Friday and Saturday program that makes a fellow feel proud to be in show business. Too bad we can't get enough business to enjoy it. Step on this one, boys, and play it Friday and Saturday, but it is good for any night in the week or Sunday. It will please customers 100 per cent and that is something nowadays. Running time, nine reels. Played July 31-August 1.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

BRIDE WALKS OUT, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—From audience reaction, this went over big. With 115 hot weather on Sunday slowed up the receipts. Running time nine reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—One of the best mystery dramas we have played for a long while. Interesting from start to finish. William Powell at his best. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

FARMER IN THE DELL: Fred Stone, Jean Parker —We small town ruralites, who know the real thing in simplicity, liked Fred Stone immensely in this. Several remarked that he reminded them of Will Rogers. Give him more good pictures and he will have a worthwhile following. Played July 29-30.— Mary Hayes Davis, La Belle and Clewiston Theatres, La Belle and Clewiston, Fla. Small town patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Wonderful picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MURDER ON THE BRIDLE PATH: James Gleason, Helen Broderick—Just another picture. Do for double bills. Will not stand alone. Story improbable and weak.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

YELLOW DUST: Richard Dix, Leila Hyams—Fine western. Dix very popular here in westerns. Wish we could get more with him.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET: Wagner Oland—Good picture, suitable for Friday and Saturday. All Chan pictures are entertaining. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Very good show over which we were very much surprised upon the very poor business that we did with it. Hot weather must be the cause. Play it, boys, and do little extra advertising; it will pay you, because the picture will please most of them that see it. Running time, 10 reels. Played July 19-20.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—This picture was a very pleasant surprise. Grossed the most of any picture in the last three months and so far as I know it pleased everyone. Good story and a mighty fine cast. Jean Hersholt, the Quints, Dorothy Peterson, Slim Summerville, in fact, the entire cast is good. Think I can say this one pleased 100 per cent. Just a small town natural. Running time, 94 minutes. Played July 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CRIME OF DR. FORBES, THE: Gloria Stuart, Robert Kent—Good mystery story based on mercy killing. Picture gave very good satisfaction. Good for short run. Running time, 76 minutes. Played July 31.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irwin S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson—Very good show and no business. Drought responsible and 114° in shade. O. K. for any house. Story good, excellent acting. Running time, nine reels. Played July 24-25.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

FIRST BABY, THE: Shirley Deane, Johnny Downs —Unknowns in the cast; a rather trite story. Had it not been for a couple of others that were in the cast that added a few bright moments, as the henpecked husband, and the mother that backed up the son against the other mother-in-law, it would not have amounted to much. All right for a tag end of a double bill, but we don't double bill.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FIRST BABY, THE: Shirley Deane, Johnny Downs —It hasn't been many weeks since I was in a role similar to that played by Young Mr. Downs! Naturally, I went for this picture in a big way. It is full of those human touches that make pictures outstanding for the "family trade." There are no names that drag 'em in, but there is satisfying entertainment after you get them there. Played July 26-27.— G. E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers, Tom Brown—Very satisfactory to normal business. Played July 18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HALF ANGEL: Frances Dee, Brian Donlevy—This picture would have to come along to spoil Twentieth Century's record for producing splendid pictures. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 1-2.—Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

HIGH TENSION: Brian Donlevy, Glenda Farrell—Just a fair program picture. Good for Bargain Night or double feature bill. Running time, 62 minutes. Played July 30.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

HUMAN CARGO: Claire Trevor, Brian Donlevy—Good gangster type picture. Good twists and suspense to the story. Running time, seven reels.— E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—We were disappointed in the attendance, but the show pleased all who saw it. We believe the title kept many of our women patrons away. Played July 29-30.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY: Jane Withers, Ralph Morgan—Somewhat better than average at the box office because of the Withers personality. Jane certainly deserves a better break than she has been getting from the production department. Played July 28-30.—G. E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple—First Temple for a long time. A man's a chump to pass her up. She's the one and only darling on the screen who has box office.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—This gave satisfaction to a little better than normal business. Played July 25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien,

Irene Ware—A very good western, but has been changed from the silent picture and I did not think the change was an improvement. However, it is a very good picture and pleased the western fans. Running time, 59 minutes. Played July 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PRISONER OF SHARK ISLAND, THE: Warner Baxter—History, drama of very good interest, somewhat gruesome, but the story was that way, I suppose, so it's O. K. Men should like it very much and ladies will get a lot of enjoyment out of it, too. Business poor. Running time, 10 reels. Played July 26-27.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE NUMBER: Loretta Young, Robert Taylor—Good average entertainment to normal Sunday business. Running time, 75 minuets. Played July 12-13.—Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

SINS OF MAN: Jean Hersholt, Don Ameche—A splendid picture, well acted, but nil at the box office. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 8-9.—Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Claudette Colbert, Rosalind Russell, Victor McLaglen—It took four stars and oodles of money to make this an ordinary picture. By the time it got to our town the word was out and they passed it by. Played June 17-18.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

United Artists

DARK ANGEL, THE: Merle Oberon, Fredric March, Herbert Marshall—A very good production worthy of your best playing time. Pleased everyone. —A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY: Freddie Bartholomew, Dolores Costello Barrymore—Played this one rather old and the edge was taken off the box office. Deserved better patronage. An excellent picture. Everybody liked it. Played July 6-7.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

MODERN TIMES: Charlie Chaplin—What a nose-dive this one took. Didn't take in film rental. They don't want this kind of entertainment at this day and age.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor—This one evidently made while Samuel Goldwyn was on his vacation. Certainly not up to the Goldwyn standard. Missed in audience appeal and missed still more at the box office. In the red a-plenty. Played June 3-4. —Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

Universal

AFFAIR OF SUSAN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—Played this on double bill with a Ken Maynard western and it made a splendid program. There's plenty of laughs in this and as most of the action takes place at Coney Island, there's plenty of excitement and thrills also. Our folks were glad to see Walter Catlett back again. He is one of our favorite comedians.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CRASH DONOVAN: Jack Holt, Nan Gray—Here's a little inconsequential picture that surely went right out and did business on a Friday-Saturday. The kids and men ate it up. Running time, six reels. —E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor.—Wonderful picture. Business not as good as expected.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—We had more requests for this picture than for any other we can remember. Then extremely hot weather spoiled box office receipts. But it is a grand picture in every way and every exhibitor should give his patrons an opportunity to see it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—Good program picture. Will please.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

COLLEEN: Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Jack Oakie, Dick Powell—Another disappointing picture from Warner Bros. They can make such wonderful musicals; I do not see why they fell down on this one. Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler are—or have been—two favorites here, but they seem to be slipping. There is altogether too much time given to the world's most tiresome actor, if he is an actor, Hugh Herbert. Joan Blondell was very good and so was Jack Oakie, but it did not please generally. Running time, 89 minutes. Played July 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien—Very good. Right up a small town's alley. It will please everyone.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM: All Star—Never again will I play a picture on terms I played this on. Lost money. No business, no good comments.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SATAN MET A LADY: Bette Davis, Warren William—About the poorest Warners have ever turned out. Expected big things from Bette Davis, but was sadly disappointed. Good cast but no real plot. Eliminate this if possible. Did the poorest Sunday business I have done this year. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 2.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

SONS O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown—Not up to the Joe Brown standard and it missed decidedly. Joe doesn't mean anything in this town. Played June 29-30.—Elmer Brient, Beacon Theatre, Hopewell, Va. General patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

ALI BABA: Comicolor Cartoons—A good colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

HOT PAPRIKA: Andy Clyde—A great comedy by Andy Clyde. The kids will eat it and also the grown-ups. Slapstick.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

"PATCH MAH BRITCHES": Barney Google—Nice color cartoon.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Educational

HOT SPELL: Terry-Toons—A very good black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

JUST PLAIN FOLKS: Tim and Irene—It is a laugh getter and that is what the customers want when they come in. The funniest pictures please the most patrons. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

LIGHT FANTASTIC, THE: Star Personality Comedies—Good comedy all the way through. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

OFF TO CHINA: Paul Terry-Toons—Fair cartoon. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RAIL BIRDS: Tom Howard, George Shelton—Another poor attempt at comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LOVE IN SEPTEMBER: Young Romance Series—This comedy is a two-reel drama about many incidents in Jack Coogan's life and a midget car race that Jackie walks away with. Very good. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre. Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SOUTHERN HORSE-PITALITY: Terry-Toon—These Terry-Toon cartoons are not near as good as they used to be.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AUDIOSCOPIKS: Special—Having paid more for this than an ordinary short, also the extra cost of the glasses, it was up to me to get back of this. I advertised on the screen that this was a sensational novelty (which it is), that the red and green glasses which were necessary to see this would be furnished free to all patrons. The results were a decidedly above average attendance on this. I believe it was the offer of free red and green glasses that did the trick. Very few were found on the floor after the show, so most patrons took them home as souvenirs. J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

AUDIOSCOPIKS: Not much to it, just another scheme to get a big rental for a fair one-reel subject.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

BOTTLES: Harman-Ising—One of the cleverest of the Harman-Ising Series and they are all good.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HIT AND RUN DRIVER: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—A powerful preachment on this subject. My people will not forget it soon, as a little four-year-old girl was killed in the street on the next corner while her brothers were watching this picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOW TO BEHAVE: MGM Miniatures—"How to Sleep" was such a riot that we used "How to Behave" on top spot, but it failed miserably. Not in same class with first subject. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

HOW TO BEHAVE: Miniatures—A good novelty reel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HOW TO SLEEP: Robert Benchley—Good.—P. G. Held New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

LITTLE BOY BLUE: Charles "Chic" Sale—Very good short from the poem by Eugene Field. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

OLD PLANTATION, THE: Happy Harmonies—Good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

RURAL MEXICO: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—The last one or two of these travel talks have not been so good. The announcer's voice gets very monotonous when there is so little music to break the talk. On the whole, I do not believe this year's series have been as entertaining as last year's series. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THRILL FOR THELMA, A: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Another splendid number in this series. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

POPULAR SCIENCE, NO. 6—These reels in a class by themselves. Color, educational, interesting.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

WEDTIME STORY, A: Headliner Series—A good comedy of the higher class. Not slapstick.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

WHERE THERE'S A WILL: Radio Flash Comedies—A fair comedy that we had a return booking on through fault of the booker. Everybody told us so. Plenty of nonsense. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

FOX NEWS: Still the best news on the market.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

Universal

AMATEUR BROADCAST: Oswald Cartoons—Just fair.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BRONCO BUSTER: Oswald Cartoons—Had to play this back a second time. If you have not played this do so. One of the best of the black and white cartoons.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Vitaphone

CARL HOFF AND ORCHESTRA: An excellent band act.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CHANGING OF THE GUARD: Sybil Jason—One of the best shorts I ever ran. Sybil Jason is great. Clever story, good music and beautiful color. More entertainment than a lot of features. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HALF WIT-NESS: Radio Ramblers—Again these boys deliver good entertainment. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HALF WIT-NESS: Radio Ramblers—Radio Ramblers, in 10 minutes of excellent entertainment.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

I'M MUCH OBLIGED: Vera Van, George Dobbs—Another excellent two-reel musical. Nearly one reel of cowboy singing and nonsense.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LUCKY SWEDE, THE: El Brendel—Not my idea of a good short, but it got a lot of laughs and seemed to please the cash customers. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NATURE'S HANDIWORK: Our Own United States Series—A wonderful travel talk except that the talking is very poor. With a better announcer this would be excellent. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SLIDE, NELLIE, SLIDE: Herman Bing, Paula Stone—Amusing short, featuring a girl's baseball nine. Pleased. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SLIDE, NELLIE, SLIDE: Big V Comedies—This did not prove a good weekend comedy for us. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

VITAPHONE ENTERTAINERS: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—This series is the tops. Peps up any show. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VINCENT LOPEZ AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—One of the finest band acts of the year.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

HIGHLIGHTS OF TEXAS CENTENNIAL: A tip to Texas exhibitors; get this from Jamieson; get the stills and one-sheets and watch yourself get some extra business. This is a dandy reel; gives you an idea of what to see in Dallas, and where to start seeing it; good entertainment, too; and watch out for the Apple Dancer; she's in there. A well-made local that will take care of itself. Running time, one reel.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

RED CROSS: An excellent reel, entertaining and a worthy subject. Every exhibitor should show it and be proud to do it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

FLASH GORDON: Buster Crabbe—This started out pretty good, but too much impossible stuff in it to keep up the interest. So far we have run 10 chapters and I wish it was over with. I have a number of adults that won't sit through it and it seems as if the kids are afraid of it. The great trouble with all of the serials is there is too much sameness and not much story.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

FLASH GORDON: Buster Crabbe—The biggest money serial ever released. Pleases and draws.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

FLASH GORDON: Buster Crabbe, Jean Rogers—Just finished this serial. Everyone liked and we consider it one of the best.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

THOSE EXTRA DOLLARS

Able theatre practitioners are of course, through their own initiative, expected to bring in extra dollars to the box-office. But just how much in actual figures this extra portion should come to is a moot point. Based on local conditions and circumstances over which one may have little control, one figure can be quoted with as much authority as another.

The advertising chieftain of a western circuit sets it as 25 per cent and says it as follows atop the managers' home office activity report blank:

"Twenty-five per cent of your grosses comes from your original efforts. Detail below your activities for the week, showing what was done by your own efforts to increase the gross business for the week. . . . List your contacts . . . also benefits obtained or arranged . . . and the results of such work."

Because it has to do with these same activities, it is not out of line to quote also from a letter to a home office executive who in turn passed the message along to this desk. It was penned by a branch manager around for a long stretch and who decries present-day lack of old-time exploitation. Sez he:

" . . . The average theatre manager today is not allowed to show any great initiative, due to limited budgets, plus the fact that the majority of his publicity comes from a central depot. Then again, the average house manager is so busy making out reports, etc., for his home office that he neither has the time nor inclination to run around dressing windows, getting tieups, etc.

" . . . It has been so long since I have been stopped by a window display or anything unusual except the gaudy front that I have forgotten when. I might add that the biggest part of the money now seems to go into those fronts and I have always contended that a person must pass by the theatre in order to see them, so they are not reaching any more people than actually pass by. . . . "

Well, we dunno. What the gentleman from the field has to say might well sock the nail smack on the beanno in his sector and then again might not exactly bisect the bull's-eye. Granted that there are men who could do a whole lot better for the boxoffice were they shed of home office shackles, but in many spots the old-time irons that chained initiative have been cast away and the managers turned loose to handle the reins themselves.

Where the laddies are allowed to use their savvy, are not discouraged by over-zealous home office interference, it is to be expected that determined and skilled showmanship will bring in added grosses well above the minimum an attraction is ordinarily figured to return.

In such situations, and such situations only, there may be justification for setting up an arbitrary figure to represent those extra dollars created solely by the manager's individual and unique efforts.

IN TIMES OF STRESS

The ever-cheerful note in the entire scheme of exhibition is that whatever the occasion, your theatreman is right there to take a prominent part. Go into any live community and find the local showmen conspicuously spotted in most every movement, campaign, drive or what have you.

F'rinstance, to augment the facilities for preventative treatments in a recent statewide paralysis outbreak, Louis Rosenbaum, general manager, Muscle Shoals Theatres, Inc., announced in a quarter-page ad that further free treatments would be given at the circuit's houses in two of the afflicted cities. The cost of trained nurses, equipment and serum was borne entirely by the theatres.

Gratifying it is but not at all unexpected to find theatremen in the very front lines and especially so in times of the greatest stress and danger.

LET THEATREMEN DANCE

Whether or not it is to be, as the St. Louisans have it, "the biggest exploitation stunt in the history of this country", the September drive for business in the Mound City, described in last week's issue and sponsored by Harry C. Arthur, Jr., of Fanchon & Marco, with the Loew and Ansull Brothers interests, has all the earmarks of a campaign that other cities might find well worth adapting. In cooperation with important local organizations a series of projects has been arranged, not the least of which is to be public dancing on the streets.

It is to be hoped that when the celebration is over, the theatremen concerned will have sufficient boxoffice reason to do some dancing on their own.

Bob Burns Personal Tops "Range" Opening

The "local boy makes good" angle was put to work on the premiere of "Rhythm On the Range" at the Pulaski, Little Rock, Ark., by Manager Ralph Noble, who was able to promote the appearance on opening night of Bob Burns, native of nearby community. There was much of a to-do of course with tieins with merchants and welcome by Governor Futrelle.

Feature of the campaign was giant street parade in which the star chose to ride in an old-model Ford for laughs and cheers. Ticker tape and the other accessories in vogue at such occasions were much in evidence.

Papers contributed a fine publicity share by interviews and photos. Further activities were created by Kraft-Phenix, Burns' radio sponsors with store tieups and bannered trucks in the parade. Delegation from the star's home town came over to the opening, for which the house was reserved.

AUGUST DEADLINE; AUGUST JUDGES

Midnight of Saturday, September 5, is the deadline date for entries in the Quigley August Awards. So, please, have those campaigns at headquarters by that time.

The August judges are as follows: Neil F. Agnew, Paramount Pictures Corp., Irving Lesser, Roxy Theatre, and Si Seadler, M-G-M.

Bring Grasshoppers To See Free Show

Among the favorite devices employed to aid in civic cleanup campaigns, the tin can, old tire and similar matinee ideas have long been effective. To the list now add the grasshopper free show, put on by Manager Glenn M. Detter, Royal, Hoisington, Kansas, one of the sections afflicted by the recent plague of the insects.

To stimulate the elimination of the pests and also to build up his date on "The Big Noise," Deeter advertised that every youngster under 12 bringing a pint of 'hopper-laden and as soon as the show started, the "admissions" were taken to the town dumping grounds for disposal. Theatre as to be expected received a lot of publicity for the civic-minded stunt which Glenn reports reacted favorably at the box-office, the matinee grosses being far above the average Saturday.

House Given Away From Prass' Theatre

When the Chamber of Commerce of Moline, Ill., recently celebrated its "home buying week" by offering a house gratis to person drawing the lucky numbered stub, Bill Prass stepped up and offered the stage of the Le Claire Theatre for the drawing. Stubs were given with each 25-cent purchase of goods from cooperating merchants and Bill cashed in on all the advertising, which mentioned the giveaway on the stage of the theatre.

Lettered Street Car "Sudden Death" Aid

Theatremen are getting a lot of excellent civic cooperation on "And Sudden Death" to emphasize safety drives and a recent "topper" for a Pennsylvania date was Manager Paul J. Harvey's tieup in York for the date at the Capitol Theatre.

Harvey first promoted transportation company to donate a car and then promoted the York County Safety League to paint the car white with red letters (see photo) at no cost to the theatre. Car was put into regular daily service a week ahead making runs on all routes.

Other tieins had safety committee at special screening after which the members conducted extensive mailing campaign. Goodyear Tires also got aboard with two full page co-op ads and herald distribution. Wrecked cars in prominent spots, properly bannered, and signs on light poles for two miles on new highway, the latter strung up by light company, were other standouts in Harvey's drive.

Recommends Street Cars For Herald Distribution

To insure the most effective distribution for his heralds and to guard against the placing of this material in spots where it will not be read, Manager S. G. Cardas, Loew's State, Los Angeles, used the local street cars as follows for herald advertising on "Suzy."

Two boys, each with a street car pass, boarded different cars and passed heralds to all riders, continuing the distribution on as many cars as possible from four until six thirty, the height of the rush hours. In some instances, conductors would not allow the boys to do their stuff, but on the whole the percentage of effectiveness was high, reports Cardas, with sufficient reader interest indicated.

Those Studios Are Handy

Theatremen operating in Los Angeles from time to time manage to promote original props from the studios for exploitation purposes and making good use of this slant recently, Al Haynie, at the Fox West Coast-Belmont borrowed a robot outfit filmed in "The Under Sea Power" for street bally. Usher dressed up in the costume paraded the neighborhood passing out heralds.

40-Foot Worm Gag Makes Smart Teaser

Not having seen anything like it locally in the line of theatre exploitation, the folks out in San Bernardino, Cal., were properly curious about Howard Ralston's recent worm street stunt on "Earthworm Tractor" at the Ritz Theatre. It was a teaser idea, starting two days ahead.

Accompanying photo illustrates the stunt in completed form, but for the first flash Ralston used only two boys carrying individual sections, one reading "Worm," and the other "Joe E." Next days, two boys were added with other sections, reading "Earth" and "Tractors," respectively. Boys appeared in different sections of the town and had to duck a lot of questions from the folks who wanted to know.

On opening day, the completed "worm," about 40 feet long, was assembled and carried about town by eight boys, serpentining through the shopping districts, in and out stores and other prominent spots. Howard says it went over very well for him with the cost a minor item.

Davis Distributes Herbs For "Dracula's Daughter"

Envelopes bearing the caption "This may save your life" were distributed to the townsfolk of Mt. Vernon, Ind., when Louie Davis played "Dracula's Daughter" at the Vernon Theatre. Other directions printed on the envelope were "This envelope contains Wolfbane, the herb that Vampires fear," etc. The magic herb in each envelope consisted of a half-teaspoon of green tea.

Davis topped his ads with copy reading: "Are you a sissy? Can you take it? If you are a coward at heart, if you fear, then don't dare see," etc.

HOLLAND AND NELSON VOTED JULY PLAQUES

Indianan Is First to Win Two Silver Plaques in One Year; Ohio Manager Takes Bronze

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Turn on the spotlight, give rousing cheers and forward your congratulations to Round Tabler Sid Holland. For with the majority vote of the Judging Committee in the Quigley July Awards, the Elkhart Amusement Co., city manager, of Elkhart, Ind., becomes the first entrant in the Competitions to be honored with a second Silver Plaque in one year. His campaign was on MGM's "San Francisco" for the date at the Elco Theatre.

Newcomer in the Plaque division but not to the Awards is Glenn H. Nelson, manager, Warner's Harris Theatre, Findlay, Ohio, who did a right smart job on Paramount's "And Sudden Death," for which he was awarded the July Bronze.

Holland was also voted the Silver in March and with the Bronze he won in 1935 is one of the only two theatremen to have taken down three plaques during the entire course of the Competitions. The other is Bill Hendricks, of the Warner Theatre, in Memphis, who still stands alone as the winner of three Silver plaques, one for each year of the Awards.

In the Bronze classification, Chuck Shannon, manager, Warner's Belmar Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., is the single entrant to have won two of these awards in one year, both of his honors coming in 1935. Chuck is again represented this month with an Honorable Mention.

July "Firsts" go to three entrants, to W. H. MacDonald, of Great Falls, Mont.; to John Tucker, of Roselle, N. J., and L. C. Worley, Peoria, Ill. Names, positions and pictures covered, are set down in next column, alphabetically arranged, as are the July "Honorables." And the selection of the latter, kind friends, was far from the easiest of jobs.

Perhaps because the 1936 Awards are now in the last half of this year's competitions and the finishing line begins to loom on the horizon, theatremen everywhere it seems are more intent on the Grand Awards with the result that the entries for July came in thick and fast. They represented many different operations, first and subsequent run, de luxe and neighborhood, and were forwarded by previous winners and men new to the Competitions. The calibre of entry also was generally high, which necessitated the awarding of 19 Honorable Mention Sheepskin Certificates. Eight names are added to the first-time winners with the rest having taken honors previously. All in all, it was a grand showing for this time of the year.

At this writing, arrangements are going forward for the 1936 Grand Awards presentations and every effort will be made to make the ceremonies "bigger 'n better." Suffice to say, that the prizes will certainly be worth winning.

Oklahoma City Theatremen Favor Lavish Front Display

Local Merchants Said to Be Exploitation-Minded Only on Circuitwide Tieups

by ROBERT P. WITT
from Oklahoma City

The Southwest metropolis covered in the current stop of the Round Table's Showman's Travelog series has many claims to distinction, not the least of which is that this community is the first to have installed curb parking meters allowing an hour's parking for five cents. Oklahoma City may be set apart for being one of the few, if not the only, key situation controlled by one company, which however has not caused the Standard Theatres' managers to slack off, as is proven by their many excellent exploitations reported in these pages.

—A-MIKE VOGEL

Imagine, if you can, a town of some 200-000 population nestled down in the midst of a huge oil field, surrounded on three sides by towering oil derricks. The nearest is in sight from the main thoroughfare of this large western city. That is Oklahoma City.

The downtown theatres are all on three city blocks, three in one block and four in the next two blocks. The theatre section is the same as it has been for the past twenty-five years, with one exception; the addition of a new house built in 1930.

All the film exchanges of this locality are located here, making this the film center of Oklahoma. Offices of the three major theatre circuits of Oklahoma are also located here. As in all large cities there has sprung up in the suburbs small community centers. In each of the largest of these there is a neighborhood theatre.

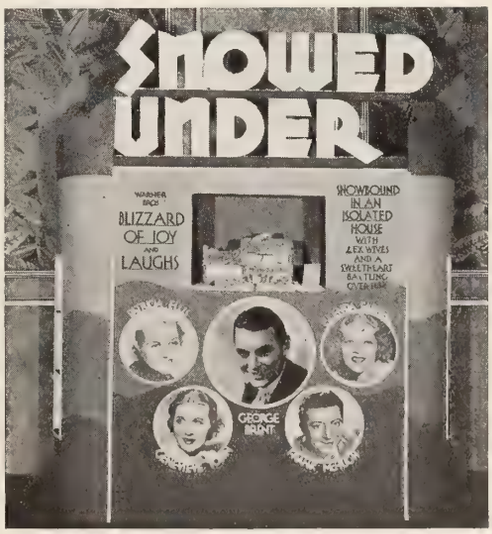
Oklahoma City is considered an industrial center because of the vast amount of oil in and around it, but it is equally as much an agricultural center. According to Chamber of Commerce statistics, there are as many people engaged in farming as in industrial work. The population is principally American, two per cent of it being foreign. Eight per cent of the people are white collar workers, three per cent intellectuals, while the balance comprise the skilled and unskilled class. "Spendable money" income is rated at seven hundred twenty-nine dollars per capita annually.

College Towns Nearby

The area of Oklahoma City is approximately 28 square miles, but there are seven small towns within 20 miles distance from which the theatres can draw for some of their business. Norman is to the south with a population of about 10,000, and Edmond to the north with a population of about 7,000. These two are college towns, the University of Oklahoma being located at Norman and Central State Teachers College at Edmond. The Oklahoma City University is in Oklahoma City.

The parking situation here is probably different than that of any other city in the United States. This was the first municipality to install parking meters. To use these meters one drops a nickel in them and is entitled to one hour's unmolested parking. George Henger, city manager for Standard Theatres, maintains these meters are a help to show business, because it makes finding a parking place easier. However, these meters are not in use after 6:00 P.M. or on Sunday.

The streets are broad and straight and there is always plenty of parking space in the evenings. If one cannot find a parking place as close to the theatre as they wish there are plenty of ten cent and fifteen cent parking lots handy. Of course, there is always plenty of parking space at the suburban houses.



One could not desire a better transportation situation. Street cars and buses run on regular and timely schedules. The last run leaves the downtown area at twelve o'clock. There are also several fleets of ten cent taxi cabs ready to serve. In the several fleets there is a total of two hundred fifty cabs. These cabs operate for ten cents within ten blocks of the downtown area; but, one can ride from the outskirts of the city for twenty-five cents, the city being zoned, with a different price for each zone. For those who live in the small towns surrounding the city there is a good interurban system as well as buses.

The town is faced with an unusual theatre situation. The whole town is controlled by one company. All of the theatres with the exception of five small ones are owned by the Standard Theatres, Inc. Of this group of five, only two are independents.

Standard theatre managers are given plenty of freedom in the operation of their houses with one exception. They do not book any of their pictures. This is done by Pat McGee, general manager for Standard Theatres. They are permitted to offer suggestions on the pictures they want. All of the managers belong to the Chamber of Commerce, this membership being paid for by the company. Some of them belong to other clubs and organizations also.

Conditions of theatres vary. There are the "shotgun" houses, which are dirty and unkempt, but the downtown houses owned by Standard are in the best of condition in every way, including projection, sound, ventilation and cleanliness. They hire an expert sound and projection man who does nothing but check the projection equipment and keep it in first class condition. Before Regal Theatres and Warner Bros. formed the Standard Theatres, Inc., Warner had completely remodeled the Warner at a cost of approximately fifty thousand dollars and the Liberty at an expenditure of about thirty thousand. In 1935 seventy thousand dollars was put into the remodeling of the Criterion.

City Is Well Exploited

An average of seven thousand eight hundred dollars is spent annually by Oklahoma City theatres for advertising. Generally, Standard concentrates on lavish lobby displays and showy fronts. There is not a great deal done in the way of ballyhoo because it is a waste of money and effort in this city. Such things do not materially increase grosses here. However, the city is well exploited in so far as it is profitable. Theatres do not often use merchant tieups. There is an occasional window tieup or a contest done in a small way which as a rule does not attract much attention. When the whole circuit concentrates its efforts, there is a big merchant tieup which always produces. This is rare, as the merchants here are quick to tire of these things. Standard is in back of big Movie Mardi Gras which includes everything from a bathing beauty contest to a stage wedding. Pat McGee is more or less personally back of this, and when McGee starts something like this it is usually done in a big way and always goes over in the same big way. About the only time local merchants will really kick in and give their all is for some stunt of this nature.

Juvenile Unit Show Found Successful

by ARTHUR J. SPENCER
Manager, Lonsdale Theatre, North Vancouver, B. C.

In discussing the presentation of juvenile shows for children in North Vancouver, attention is first drawn to the fact that everyone interested in children, whether parent, teacher, or organization, etc., has his own idea as to the type of screen fare best suited for juvenile entertainment. Only the exhibitor who contacts his patrons fully realizes the wide range of opinions that exist on this subject. In this locality these special children's shows have reached out to satisfy a greater majority than any other type of entertainment hitherto presented.

Saturday matinee business was inconsistent, despite birthday clubs, serial pictures or give-aways. After a good opening, interest lagged. A change of policy was therefore indicated. The only answer to the problem seemed to be a separate performance, designed especially for children. A show in which there was a variety of action, comedy and instructive subjects, presented in such a way that interest could not lag.

Four Weeks' Program Arranged

First a schedule of programs for four weeks was drawn up, consisting of cartoons, travel-talks, novelties, subjects on animal and bird life, and a feature picture, such as "Stormy," "Ginger," "The Camels Are Coming." With the exception of the features, these subjects were culled from previous bookings, during the past year or more, preference being given those subjects that had not played week-end dates. Playing them for the second time, matinees only, kept the price within the budget allowed for this enlarged program. Some subjects were bought first-run, matinee only.

This series of four programs was laid out on a skeleton leaflet, so arranged that each program provided a constant change of interest, by alternating cartoons with other subjects and climaxing the show with the feature picture. Pictures were numbered on this leaflet, allotting 10 subjects to each program; the total running time averaging out the same on all shows. Beside the number and the title a brief description of the subject followed.

On completion of the layout, the next step was to secure the approval of such authorities as school principals, parent-teacher groups, service clubs, etc. After an explanation of the idea, they were ready and willing to cooperate by indorsing these shows. They were invited to attend the first program, and two of the school principals have been regular matinee patrons ever since.

Upon receipt of written indorsements, the leaflet was printed, the front page being set in large type with the title, "Children's Shows for Children." The series of programs occupied the two inside pages, the indorsements being displayed on the back.

This folder, with the cooperation of school teachers was placed on the desks of all the pupils. Screen advertising was presented in the form of a direct message to parents. The idea was explained to matinee patrons from the stage. Private schools were contacted with the result that they attended in a body.

The local paper wrote it up each week; the paid advertisement following out the idea of contacting the children through the parents; using such captions as "Important to Parents," "You Owe It to the Kiddies," etc. As the first four programs came to a close, requests poured in for more programs of this nature; in the form of letters from teachers, parents and the children themselves, and in verbal requests to the management for a continuance of these shows.

Having proved the idea successful, a second series was arranged and presented, on the same lines as the first, and these went over with the public even better. Matinees jumped to capacity houses, with adult patrons asking for a similar show at night.

Royster Plugs "Earthworm" Through Tractor Dealer

H. Royster, Liberty, Lewiston, Idaho, took advantage of the Caterpillar Tractor tie-up for his "Earthworm Tractors" engagement and arranged for pipe organ music to be broadcast daily from theatre interspersed with plugs for the picture. Announcements of the opening were also broadcast over the regular news hour of the station and the tractor company bought extra time plugging product and tying into the picture.

Cash prizes and tickets were given to winners of a contest writing best essay on "Why I prefer a Caterpillar tractor to any other," 50 watch fobs with small bronze tractor attached were given to first 50 kids at opening show and motion pictures of babies on tractors were taken at local baby contest. Throughout engagement the p. a. system of the theatre broadcast the laughter of the patrons watching the picture.

Weatherman Visits Theatre for Foster

G. H. Foster, Kenton Theatre, Kenton, Ohio, garnered a little extra publicity for himself when he invited the head of the government weather station to attend the theatre to inspect the cooling system. Papers came through with front page story and Foster carried a line in his ads calling attention to the stunt.

Papers Cooperative In Oklahoma City

Oklahoman and the Oklahoma City Times, which are both published by the same firm, and the Oklahoma News, a Scripps-Howard paper. All of these papers are very cooperative and will do everything in their power to help the theatres. There have been many profitable tieups with these newspapers. They publish regular reviews and devote a two-page spread to theatres in their Sunday editions. A syndicated column is used in the Sunday paper, but the local columnist is the feature.

Opposition of Many Kinds

There are many kinds of opposition. In winter there is everything from ice hockey to cooking schools, and in the summer the great outdoors takes its toll on theatre grosses. Legitimate shows are opposition to the picture houses, but they do not hurt like other things because there is not a big demand for stage shows. The only legitimate competition theatres have is the Shrine Auditorium. This auditorium is owned by the Masons and leased by an independent who brings in all the big road show attractions.

This is considered a good show town, but as Pat McGee says, it is an average town, and although the attendance is regular it must be encouraged.

Bell Advertises for Men Who Served Under Two Flags

A newspaper contest that proved very successful was run by Ray Bell, Loew publicist at the Palace, Washington, D. C., on which cash prizes and tickets were awarded to those correctly casting the picture. Paper ran names of cast and their titles in the picture; it was then up to contestants to team the proper names together.

Ray ran stories in papers asking for men who had served Under Two Flags, these men were guested at the theatres and each day papers ran stories on the experiences of the applicants. Department stores cooperated, featuring merchandise that was in vogue "under any flag." Accompanying photo shows how Bell treated his front with replicas of fortresses and various book stores about town devoted window displays to the book, plus art work and playdates.

Manuel Builds Attractive "White Fang" Display

Accompanying photo shows how Johnny Manuel, Palace Theatre, Oneonta, N. Y., treated his "White Fang" lobby by using two basswood logs stripped of their bark and mounted on a wood frame and then built in around an illuminated recess shadow box. Skis, snow shoes, guns and other paraphernalia were mounted on the bark and the entire display dotted with artificial snow. Amber lights were used in the shadow box and blue and green floodlights trained over the whole thing.

Display was moved to local department store tying up with their outdoor sports supplies and accessories. Johnny also used the gag of a block of ice with display frozen in it which he reports is still a natural for him.

Down in Hot Springs, Ark., Clyde Smith at the Paramount for "The King Steps Out," secured a full-page co-op ad page with flyer across top informing all that "The king steps out with $15 in cash for you." Each merchant ad carried copy giving time of day that "the king" would be at their particular store handing out crisp new dollar bills.

Caldwell Plants Display At Industrial Exposition

Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio for "Small Town Girl," mounted 28 x 44 James Montgomery Flagg drawing with picture, theatre and playdate credits on easels and displayed them at the Toledo News Bee booth at the Industrial Progress Exposition four weeks ahead. Atmospheric compo display entirely surrounded front of theatre and illuminated letters announcing stars and title were mounted atop marquee.

Several stories together with art work were planted in newspapers, together with photos in roto section, Flagg drawings displayed in department store windows and bookmarks were distributed at circulating libraries.

Lane's "Harvester" Display

Grant Lane, assistant, Royal Theatre, Hoisington, Kan., for their "Harvester" date, contacted local implement company and secured from them a small combine and wheat wagon which was used for lobby display, surrounded by wheat stacks with baby spot playing on it. Directly in back of display was oversized copy of the book and Grant reports many favorable comments on the display.

Costa Celebrates Theatre Anniversary

An example of goodwill enjoyed by a manager was evidenced recently at the Warner, Ridgewood, N. J., when Frank Costa put over a campaign in celebration of the theatre's fourth anniversary, accompanying photo shows cake donated by local baker with Costa's name inscribed as part of the confection decoration. Plenty of free space was received in the newspapers, florist sent baskets of blooms, wires were received from prominent civic leaders and personal letter from the mayor.

Frame in lobby contained management's message of thanks for patronage, short trailer was run showing shots of opening four years ago and outside of theatre was decorated with bunting pennants and colored streamer lights.

Tschauder Uses Caravan To Plug "Show Boat"

Tying up with local bus lines, Max Tschauder, Fox Illinois, Jacksonville, Ill. for "Show Boat" promoted a bus and driver, borrowed a truck from local car dealer and a large caliope which was put on the truck to represent a band wagon. The caravan went on a two day tour of surrounding towns, boys distributing heralds from house to house in each spot. P.A. system on bus permitted swell broadcast of the picture.

Entire staff was dressed in old Southern costumes during entire run (see photo), large blowups were used for lobby displays and five and ten featured a "Show Boat" sundae.

Merchant Sells Tickets For "Great Ziegfeld"

An ingenious idea was used in connection with the advance sale of "Great Ziegfeld" tickets by Bill Connor, Temple Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., with proprietor of art shop located near theatre devoting space to the sale of tickets. Two girls were on duty all day, tickets were racked and telephone in store was used for incoming reservations. Merchant also permitted the girls to call list of musical patrons advising them of opening date and reservation booth at store.

24 sheets were spotted at strategic points about town, transcription was used over radio with six plugs daily and two beautiful cut pieces were used in lobby week ahead of opening.

Melniker Brodacasts "Ziegfeld" in Lobby

Ed Melniker of Loew's Grand Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., arranged for a fifteen-minute broadcast from the lobby of his house following the initial showing of "The Great Ziegfeld" there. Eddie interviewed local celebrities as they left the theatre, the comments, unanimously enthusiastic, being heard over the city's CBS station.

Heralds, folders, blotters and rulers were distributed throughout the business district week ahead and special screening was held for film critics and unique front in modernistic design was constructed for the theatre.

A bally truck was put out by Vern Austin, Rialto Theatre, Sterling, Col., to plug his Schmeling-Lewis fight pictures. Boys covered entire city with loudspeakers going full blast.

Gag Window Stunt Used By Pollock for "Suzy"

Accompanying photo shows empty store window closed up with just a peephole, reading "Don't look in this window." Needless to say, there were plenty of lookers and inside the hole they found large question mark with copy "Suzy is coming to town."

Les also distributed date books, entirely blank except for the first page, which said "This note book will give you your first date with Suzy, Friday." Theatre telephone number was added.

Alabaman Broadcasts Saturdays From Basement Studios; Local Musicians Entertain for Passes

by CHARLES H. EDWARDS

Manager, Capitol Theatre, Decatur, Ala.

What I am using every Saturday is a broadcasting idea. The broadcast coming from our homemade studio through speakers in our outside lobby. This has created a good deal of interest, especially among our Saturday patrons.

We have accumulated through promotion and a small amount of cash a two stage amplifier (for screen service), and had this amplifier converted into a three stage amplifier with a special input for a mike (for ducats). We already had a couple of speakers and an electric turntable and we picked up a good mike for five dollars. Our mike floor stand is made from a discarded dress stand that was formerly used in a store window which a merchant gave me in order to get rid of it. I think that about covers the material that we used.

We made a studio that is soundproof and the only cost of it was a few two by fours, and if any one is interested in building a small basement studio I will be glad to give full descriptions upon request.

Describes Construction

We built this small studio in our basement, in which we installed our amplifier, turntable, and mike. We wired all this on a small bench in one end of the studio making all our panel connections on a panel suspended below the table, close to the amplifier, so that the mike, turntable, and switches can be operated by one man. From this we put in wires to our outside lobby, to a hidden connection box. We have our speakers mounted in a padded wooden box with outlets on it, making them easy to disconnect so that they can be removed from the lobby in a minute's time. We broadcast from this studio each Saturday from 10 to 11 A.M., which is the first hour that we open, and again in the afternoon from 3:30 to 4:30, and at night from 8:30 to 10. However, anybody can run the hours to suit themselves. The Ben Franklin Store here is interested enough in our station to lend us phonograph records, for a few spot announcements through the day.

Cashier Relays Requests

The main feature of our broadcasts consists of music played by three groups of boys every Saturday for five passes apiece. We call one group "Fiddling Shorty and His Rio Grande Cowboys," made up of three guitars, a violin, and a French harp. Another group is called "The Two Texas Hoboes," which is composed of a mandolin and a guitar and one boy who sings and yodels mountain music. The third group is called "The Crooning Troubadours" which explains itself. After every piece we plug our feature, serial, and comedy that we are showing, and occasionally throughout the day we give plugs on our Sunday show and also our Monday and Tuesday show.

During our broadcast we announce that anyone in our lobby having a request number, to tell the cashier and we will be glad to play it for them. We have two house phones connected, one in the boxoffice and the other in the studio. This request idea will make them stand in front of the theatre long enough to hear their number played at which time they naturally see and read our lobby displays. The boys also play over the local radio station and during their program it is announced that they can be heard from the lobby of the Capitol Theatre at the different hours that they appear. This is also free to us.

This has proved to be a good advertisement and it only costs us, on an average, of thirty passes a week. If there is any part of this that is not fully understood, we will be glad to answer any questions regarding it upon request.

Keep Selling "Cool" Says Dick Wright

Summer is by no means over, says Warner Theatres Cleveland district manager Dick Wright, in urging his managers to stress "cool theatre" copy in ads and publicity. He refers to the importance of keep refrigeration trailers convincing, cheerful, brief and also details what some of the boys are doing to cash in on summer ideas found effective by brother-theatremen in the district.

Among these was a contest put on by Doc Elliot, at the Ohio, Canton, Ohio, in which he obtained cooperation from local market and five-and-ten for prize-winning "cool" slogans. These two establishments, both air-cooled, paid for contest blanks distributed at both stores and theatre. Idea was backed up with newspaper publicity, lobby display, etc. Elliot also hooked up a tea company for free distribution of iced drinks served in lobby by Chinese girl in costume copy tied in coolness of tea and also the theatre.

Another was a "cool" menu contest inaugurated by Frank Harpster, of the Ohio, in Mansfield, Ohio, with the NEWS-JOURNAL. This broke with a full-page splash carrying an eight-column box at bottom plugging "Cool Comfort at the Ohio." Each merchant ad on the tiein included a box with some selling slant for the theatre's cool plant.

Then Frank Savage, of the Warner, in Youngstown, Ohio, just concluded a highly effective color page "cool" tieup with the Youngstown VINDICATOR, in which theatre shared the space with four local air-cooled stores. Color was a solid pleasing blue background, with a large "Cool" in reverse across the top and the co-ops mortised in. It's a first-time, says Wright, and certainly an impressive job of selling.

Six-Month Ticket Tops "Month" Prize

Theatremen seeking about for ways and means to give the new season a running start are referred to last year's campaign put on by Russ Hardwick to build up his September dates at the Lyceum and Mesa Theatres, in Clovis, New Mexico, on which tiein was made with the local daily. Drive was labelled "Go to the Movies Month."

Starting early in September and continuing right through the month, readers were invited to take part in a contest in which questions as follows were published and prizes awarded for the best answers in 60 words or less:

"Why should people attend the theatre regularly?"

"Why do you like to attend the theatre?"

The new season drive was inaugurated by a two-column, ten-inch ad reproduced below with a series of one-column follow-ups which included some of the answers received and other ads during the campaign again carried the prizes, 45 given in all.

First was a pass good for six months, second and third, three months, fourth and fifth, one month, and so on, with the last 20 awarded single passes. All prizes were good only at the house designated.

In exchange for the guest tickets, the paper cooperated with page one stories, follow-up publicity during the contest and even editorial mention. Figure of traffic cop indicating "go" to emphasize that word in the advertising, was the emblem of the campaign and used in all publicity.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Now we are all muddled up. We thought we had the right of way and were running in high, but we read an article in the paper written by a supposedly eminent doctor in which he said that during the hot weather people should drink water with salt in it because the perspiration carried the salt out of the system. In the same paper we read another article by another supposedly eminent doctor in which he said that during the hot weather people should use no salt at all because it thinned the blood. And now what's the common herd going to do? Doctors should get together and agree on something.

We know what one maverick is going to do, he is going to take salt when the system craves salt and he isn't going to take salt when the system don't crave salt, regardless of all the doctors this side of Hoboken. You call a doctor to treat you and he will feel of your pulse, look at your tongue, ask what you ate and what you drink and how you slept, etc., etc., etc., and look wise. (Looking wise is one of the arts of the profession.) Then he will write you a prescription in Chinese and soak you five dollars. You will have it taken to the druggist and he will fill it and charge you $1.50 and the directions tell you to take one powder in a half of a glass of water every hour. You later on find out that the powder consisted only of powdered chalk. If you live the doctor saved you. If you die he was called too late. You remember what Barnum said, don't you?

We had an eminent oculist examine our eyes and fit us with a pair of glasses to read by. He found that we had the most peculiar eyes he had ever seen (he most likely tells all of his customers the same thing). He found that we had astigmatism (whatever that is) in each eye. According to his findings one astigmatism pointed toward Phoenix, Arizona, and the other one pointed toward Ypsilanti, Michigan. Gosh, we never knew we had astigmatism until this oculist told us we had, and yet we had used the same pair of lamps ever since Paul Revere rode old Fan that time.

He charged from six to nine bucks for each "fit" and he fitted us three times, and each "fit" is lying around the house somewhere now, and we are wearing a pair of glasses that we got in a drug store for two bucks, and we fitted ourself.

But then, that isn't what we wanted to say. We wanted to ask you this: Has the purchasing price of the dollar been deflated or has the price of the commodities we have to buy been inflated?

If the reduce the laboring man's day by one hour and increase the price of the things he has to buy by 50 per cent, is prosperity flirting around the doors of his wigwam? We are so doggone dumb we can't figure it.

We recently saw Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur in "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town." We are not a critic of pictures in any sense, we are not supposed to be, but it is our judgment (if that is worth anything) that this picture will rank well up at the top of the 1936 best. It just shows what Hollywood can do with a good cast, a good story and a good director.

There is another thing we had on our mind that we think we ought to mention, and that is that you exhibitors are getting entirely too negligent (maybe we ought to say lazy, but we won't), but the fact is that there are not nearly as many of you writing to "What the Picture Did for Me" as should. That is a department created entirely for you boys to report on pictures you have played. It was created especially for your benefit and you ought to make use of it. The other fellow would like to know how the picture was received by your audience; it might help him a whole lot. Grab that typewriter and fill out those blanks and send them in, right now, Charlie.

A report in the paper says that according to Einstein "the empirical quantum of the gravitation equation bridges the corpuscles of the material eschantology by subliminal energy evolved counter-clockwise out of analogous infinities." There, by gosh, we supposed it was the heat. The trouble is that too many of us common folks have not been eating enough spinach and looking at the moon long enough. Anyhow, Willie, you better go out and blow your nose.

This is a picture trade journal and we are supposed to write about exhibitors, but how in thunder is a man to write about exhibitors when he is in the basement of his tepee all the while during this hot weather? Come on, Ezra, tell us how.

The teacher explained to her class that a collision was where two bodies came together unexpectedly. Little Johnny got up and said, "Well, teacher, we had a collision at our house" and the teacher inquired how that was, and Johnnie said, "Mother has just had twins."

Then, there's another thing, as Andy said to Min. Astronomers tell us that it is 55 millions of miles to the sun. Well, maybe it is, but we know of nobody in our neighborhood who has gas enough to take them there, and there are no filling stations on the way. Scientists tell us that we travel in cycles, that we will have about seven years of drought and seven years of wet weather. Listen, brother, the reason it doesn't rain is because the moisture doesn't come in contact with the cool air currents to condense it.

A certain society predicts the end of the world on a certain day. They put on their ascension robes and go up on a hill and get ready to go, but they are still here.

In the olden days there were witches. Someone would complain that some old lady bewitched them. She was hauled up to the public whipping post and flogged. Later on a board of officials were elected who had some sense and they published an edict that anyone who claimed to be bewitched should be flogged. After that there have been no witches.

Some guy with a mortar board on his head will tell the farmer how to grow corn. He never grew any, but he knows all about it (on paper) and probably wouldn't know a cornfield from a bullthistle patch. Some people used to sow flaxseed on a certain day before sunrise and in their shirttails and carry a peach sprout in their mouths the length they wanted the flax to grow. Some people are just as crazy today. Suppose we all try and use a little common horse sense.

There, we'll betcha Ernie said "Well, you are just as crazy as any of 'em if you don't stop this rambling around."

All right, we'll plead guilty, for we are still in the basement.

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 7.—Here is Republic's most lavish offering to date The real showmanship employed in its production makes it a clas attraction that will hold its own with all but the most elaborate special The story, cast and presentation are all of the big league variety, wh the musical numbers, logically introduced, include both operatic a popular selections generously delivered by Marion Talley, late of Metropolitan Opera Co.; Michael Bartlett and others. Addition there is splendid choral work contributed by the Hall Johnson Cho

The plot concerns the adventures of a mad theatrical family. Bruce is the father, Luis Alberni the uncle and Margaret Irvir aunt of the children, Miss Talley, Vivienne Osborne and Mickey schler. Of this group, Miss Talley seems to be the only pers proaching normalcy. Betrothed to John Eldredge, she has diffi carrying on her romance because of frequent demands made o her kinfolk.

When Alberni returns home with a stranded show troupe Bartlett, manager of the company, literally drafts the girl fo performance given to raise funds. Eventually he wins her persuades her to continue with the company as prima donna

Nat Levine and his associates, Albert Levoy and Leo have utilized their production expenditure to maximum a the film should show a profitable return on the investment tion of Aubrey H. Scotto keeps the story moving swiftly after the elements have been established. The screen play is the joint work of Lester Cole, Nathaniel West and Samuel Ornitz from the idea of Dana Burnet. The new songs are by Victor Schertzinger and the dance numbers by Larry Ceballos. Endowed with both mass and class appeal, the picture should click generally.

The most ambitious effort ever recorded by an independent producer has been rung up by Republic with its production of "Follow Your Heart." It is the tops of class entertainment from an independent and should bring to Republic plenty of shekels for its effort and satisfy exhibitors that big pictures can be made by the little fellows if they have the desire (and the money) to go after them.

Splendidly Sung

This splendidly-sung musical with its combination of operetta, operatic numbers and production displays that would be a credit to a big major effort, is one grand outburst of song. Marion Talley in her screen debut and Michael Bartlett sing their way to brilliant success in both solos and duets and their musical support is of high quality. Both received big rounds of applause from the preview audience after each number, beginning with Miss Talley's aria from "Mignon" and continuing with the duet from "Les Huguenots." There was also a spirited and amusing rendition of the sextette from "Lucia" sung by Bartlett and a group as they busily prepared a banquet in the kitchen of the southern mansion where all of the action is laid.

It is on the lawn of this mansion with the old house as background that a singing and dancing show, with its handsome succession of production numbers is given and this brings the picture to a spectacular musical climax. The chief song numbers here are the duets, "Follow Your Heart" and "Magnolias in the Moonlight," both undoubted hits. There is also "Who Minds About Me" for Clarence Muse and the Hall Johnson Choir. This admirable band of singers makes several contributions that delightfully strengthen the musical fabric.

An outstanding feature of this show is a lovely Dance of the Magnolias, with Eunice Healey making her picture debut as the premiere dansеuse. She also does a tap dance in a colored number and in both proves herself a winning asset.

Another entertainer who makes a hit appearance here is Ben Blue, bringing from vaudeville his own brand of eccentric dance comicalities for a battery of good laughs.

The story, based on an idea by Dana Burnett and developed into a screenplay by Lester Cole, Nathaniel West, Samuel Ornitz and Olive Cooper, recites in short and rather scatтered episodes the tribulations of an eratic and impoverished family of showfolk of which Miss Talley, the most gifted, is the one set against a professional career and determined to marry an ordinary, sane mortal in the person of John Eldredge. Then Bartlett comes along and the rest of the story is his battle to make her sing and to win her.

Of the supporting players Luis Alberni is outstanding as a temperamental conductor, Walter Catlett as a gladhand producer and Nigel Bruce as the singing-teacher daddy of the family. Josephine Whittell scores as a pupil who sings so badly that she is good. Henrietta Crosman has a choice bit as an old trouper, Vivienne Ossister, and Mickey Rentschler as her small horn-playing brother. There is also good playing by Margaret Irving and Si Jenks.

Excellent Direction

Aubrey Scotto's direction excellently displays his knowledge of music and musical atmosphere and his flair for telling bits of character and comedy. Victor Schertzinger, contributing the ballads, again proves a gifted composer of lilting melody. Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld delivers a score finely blending the popular with the musically sound. Larry Ceballos deserves special mention for his direction of the dances, which were beautifully photographed. John Mescall and Allyn C. Jones on the camera deliver with distinction throughout.

The assembling of all elements and the good looks and technical excellence of the whole production win plaudits for Leonard Fields on this, his first assignment as associate producer

Vol. 124, No. 8 — August 22, 1936

The Mary Astor case and what not to do about it

THE public press, or in this instance perhaps we should say the lay press, has gone into a mid-summer dither about Miss Mary Astor and what she wrote, also what she is surmised to have written, in a diary that has been teased around the edges of a litigation with her former husband.

Much of the discussion, published and unpublished, has been around and about the fact that it chances that the charming lady is a motion picture star, and a member of the Hollywood community.

The fact remains, however, that Miss Astor's conduct at home, off-stage and elsewhere, including those gaily fanciful moments when she has her diary pencil in hand, is none of Hollywood's business, also none of the public's business.

The motion picture and its audience are properly interested about what Miss Astor may do upon the screen for those hours when she is engaged in public appearance, for hire. Up to this time and after many screen appearances, she has borne good repute and has won high esteem and stardom, from an obscure beginning and sheerly by her own abilities and efforts.

IT is both interesting and encouraging to discover that the motion picture industry, sensitive as it is and always has been, has been able to view the case and its wide publicity without extraordinary alarms. Naturally enough there has been a desire, and some effort, on the part of the organized industry and its interested principals, to prevent the spreading of tales of a domestic mishap involving one of its people. But there have been no such manifestations as those which made the industry conspicuous by its protests, denials and defenses of a decade and a half ago. There is evidence that the motion picture business is growing up.

It is also to be observed that the general status of the motion picture community in terms of the conventions, in the public mind, is given emphasis by the degree in which the Mary Astor case seems to be taken as news. Hollywood is no longer the world capital of whoopee, etc., when one little diary can make an international impression.

What may happen about the screen career of Miss Astor from this point on is, and should be, a matter for the decision of the screen public. It is just possible that a producer with her in the cast of a product in the making might have some moments of bepuzzlement, but the answer is with the audience. If it appears now or subsequently that the public is minded to see Miss Astor upon the screen, she will be on the screen.

THE only grave mistake that could be made by the actress or a producer would be to endeavour in any, even remote and slight, degree to capitalize publicity pertaining to her private life and its adventures, be they few or many.

It is to be anticipated that there will be discussion among reviewing and semi-regulative organizations and boards of censorship about what to do about Mary Astor. Their answer, if sane, will be "nothing".

The Mary Astor before the motion picture public is the Mary Astor of and on the screen. She is for the screen public what she plays on the studio stage.

Adult minded persons will know that revelations of Miss Astor's diary to the public mean hardly more than the reflection of a set of reveries, the projection in words of a sequence of day dreams. Diaries are books of wishing, more often than not laden with romantic speculations and adventures of fancy rather than fact. Self-censorships of convention protect the most of us, sometimes before the conscious thought, usually before the spoken word or act, and almost always, not quite always it seems, before making it of written record.

Miss Astor it would appear has been a-dreaming quite a bit, and alas on paper. It is most unfortunate. It is perhaps a bit embarrassing—like, for instance, taking six drinks too many and telling a producer the truth—but it is not of cosmic importance.

This sort of thing will happen from time to time no doubt. And what of it?

REACTIONS!

JUST when we thought everything was again under control in Hollywood, it is to be discovered, in connection with exploitation of "Romeo and Juliet", that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is proclaiming in the display space of the daily press that "Jim Tully had an orgiastic affair with his typewriter . . . ", that "Anita Loos . . . cried out", that Robert Benchley succumbed . . . ". Wonder what happened to Shakespeare?

THE katydids are singing in the twilights of the valley of the Silvermine, and that, in the opinion of the sage hill folk of Connecticut, means it's only five weeks to the first frost. The pumpkin crop will have to hurry. Now is the time to edit the schedule of "things to be done this summer".

Classroom Films

Alliance of the motion picture with education, delayed somewhat by decreased budgets during the depression, is being closely knitted through the efforts of national groups of educators who are realizing the possibilities of visual instruction as an invaluable aid in the classroom. Developments in the field have proceeded in two directions. Preparation of film libraries and catalogues and purchase and installation of projection equipment in the schools are being advocated by the National Council of English Teachers and furthered by such groups as the American Council on Education and the national Y.M.C.A. Many cities are establishing Bureaus of Visual Education and buying suitable equipment for schools. In addition many supervisors and boards are preparing syllabi for the addition of motion picture appreciation courses to the English departments of high schools.

A review of recent developments in the field appears on page 13.

Electric Storm

The competitive contest that has been waged between RCA and Erpi for sound business is now being extended to exhibition, RCA taking away 300 Fox-Skouras theatres from Erpi for servicing, while Erpi acquires 74 Schine theatres from RCA for the same purposes.

The engagement between the two big electrics already has many ramifications, reported on page 18.

French Restrictions

Two plans for development of France's own film industry are being promoted, one by the trades unions and calling for nationalizing all phases of the business, the other by a national economy association. In both plans, a fundamental preachment is that the number of imported pictures must be reduced.

Details of both plans are presented in the article starting on page 71.

Reorganization

Reorganization proceedings affecting three major Chicago neighborhood theatres were completed this week and leases were given to the present holders, Balaban and Katz. The houses are the Granada, Broadway Strand and Marbro, on each of which new bond issues are called for under the reorganization plan approved.

William F. Crouch's account of this and other trade developments in the Chicago area is published on page 100.

ASCAP Trial

If attorneys for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and for the United States attorney general's office are unable to agree on stipulations of fact to be included in the evidence in the Government's monopoly action against the society, the case may be returned to trial this winter, it was indicated this week. At the same time music publishers in New York pointed out that ASCAP's threatened withdrawal from Canada need cause little fear on the part of exhibitors in that country because prosecutions for unlicensed performances would be unlikely.

Developments in the monopoly action and the publishers' views on the Canadian situation are detailed on page 73.

New Stage Financing

The return of motion picture interests to the financing of Broadway legitimate theatre productions was revealed this week, but not in the oldtime manner whereunder the companies placed money at producers' disposals. Seven motion picture companies have banded together to finance the Bureau of New Plays, Inc., which is being directed by Theresa Helburn, to promote young writers through a prize play competition.

Details regarding the new organization, along with a general discussion of the legitimate theatre's plans for the coming season, are found in the story on page 23.

New Stories Bought

Motion picture producers during July purchased 32 vehicles as future material for their stars, for release during this season. Of this number, 20 were original stories and the remaining 12 were taken from published magazine stories and novels. The purchases for July were marked by the complete absence of Broadway legitimate shows, indicating the motion picture is turning less frequently in that direction for screen material.

For a complete list of purchases by the various organizations, see the story on page 38.

Another "Informer"?

Hollywood is asking itself whether RKO-Radio will find itself possessed of another "Informer," slow-building, honor-winning, art-box office success, in "The Plough and the Stars," Sean O'Casey play nearing completion with Barbara Stanwyck, Norman Foster and a cast including five present and two former members of the Abbey Players. John Ford, Dudley Nichols and others responsible for various phases of "The Informer" are among those depended upon to bring the new Irish-rebellion picture up to and above the previous par.

Gus McCarthy's pictorial preview of the production, together with informative comment, appears on page 16-17.

Sound Reinforcing

A Stereophonic Sound Reinforcing System was demonstrated by Electrical Research Products Corporation at a symphonic concert conducted by Leopold Stokowski at the Hollywood Bowl this week. The system, designed to increase tenfold the sound atmosphere created by an orchestra while preserving the "auditory perspective" by which the audience can identify the location of each instrument or choir, employs two new principles.

An explanation of them and the effect the system aims to achieve are given on page 101.

Legislation Warning

Although legislation to correct trade practices is regarded as "unsatisfactory and arbitrary" and litigation as "futile, expensive and hopeless," a bulletin issued this week by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America declared that regulation by such means will be forced on the industry if distributors fail to accept the organization's 10 point fair trade practice program. The bulletin indicated that if such regulation is to come it will be better for the industry if a "responsible group of exhibitors" should have something to say about the provisions of the statutes.

A digest of the bulletin and an interview with Edward Kuykendall, president of MPTOA, appear on page 36.

Earnings Increased

Statements showing increased earnings over 1935 have been issued by Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., Eastman Kodak Company and American Seating Company. A net loss has been shown by one company in recent financial news, Universal Pictures. The common stock of Loew's, Inc., hit a new high for the year on the New York Stock Exchange during the week.

Details of the latest financial statements are tabulated on page 21.

Grand National Set

With a convention at the Hotel Warwick, New York City, held on Monday and Tuesday, and a similar session scheduled for Chicago later in the week, Grand National Films, Inc., officially will begin functioning in the distribution field on September 1st. Carl M. Leserman, vice-president of the company, announced that 28 exchanges are now ready. The first picture on the schedule is "Devil on Horseback," which is set for release on September 22d.

Plans of the new company as discussed at the New York convention are outlined on page 80.

Shakespeare Opening

William Shakespeare of Avon, on Thursday evening, makes his second motion picture appearance in the present Shakespearean cycle sponsored by Hollywood. He comes again to Broadway, in "Romeo and Juliet," to the accompaniment of blinding arc lamps, starched shirts on Park Avenue millionaires and Broadway playboys, and glaring diamonds worn by their ladies. His appearance follows that of one year ago, when Warner Brothers brought out "A Midsummer Night's Dream." On this latest occasion he comes at the invitation of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Nicholas Schenck.

If previous "Hollywood openings" have been press-agented as "million dollar" events, MGM promises that its Shakespeare will come in on a "two-million-dollar" opening, with six platoons of sturdy policemen to maintain order and an extra large delegation of autograph "pests" to tear the gowns of gathering celebrities.

The story is on page 63.

8 to 5

Production upped slightly in Hollywood last week with eight pictures going into work while five were being moved to the cutting room. Universal, making up for lost time, accounted for three of the starting productions. The shortage of stage space continued a factor in production plans and welcome was the news that, following Harold Lloyd's leasing of space at the General Service studios, a new stage will be constructed at that place.

An over-all reporting of the Hollywood scene is published under that caption on page 37.

Political Antidote

The industry was cited this week by Will H. Hays as being fortunate to have 35 outstanding productions coming in the fall season, these to be pitted against the threatening competition of the presidential campaign to box offices.

Titles of the films and the reasons why they will be especially necessary during the political ballyhooing, appear on page 24.

Exaggerated

Stories from Hollywood reporters in the daily press have featured a supposed demand on the part of exhibitors for pictures starring Mary Astor. The reports are exaggerated, according to the sales offices of four major companies in New York. Writers for the United Press, the New York Evening Journal and the North American Newspaper Alliance all based their stories on the fact that the release date for "Dodsworth" has been advanced to September 15th and concluded that the reason was that exhibitors are demanding quick release of Miss Astor's latest vehicle in order to cash in on the current publicity.

The reports are quoted on page 54.

Fight Film Receipts

The success of the fight films of the recent Joe Louis-Max Schmeling heavyweight battle has proved to exhibitors what an asset such pictures can be, and Jack Dietz, distributor of the pictures, now finds himself taking orders before the fight rather than after.

This aspect, and the success of the Louis-Schmeling film throughout the country, are discussed in the story found on page 64.

Woodhull Dies

Death came unexpectedly on Wednesday to R. F. (Pete) Woodhull, former exhibitor leader and for years the president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Mr. Woodhull spent sixteen years in the industrial and banking fields before he entered exhibition, in 1918, as manager of the Baker theatre, at Dover, N. J., his home. At Milwaukee in 1924 he began his service as MPTOA executive, and his speaking ability was well known to exhibitors attending conventions between that date and 1928.

Further details of Mr. Woodhull's career are sketched on page 63.

Chance Games

Court and legislative activities on chance games this week centered in nine territories where decisions were made that were favorable in some instances to the operators of the practice and unfavorable in others. Boston conducted an investigation into Beano and ruled that in the future the game must be conducted by charitable organizations and not by individuals. In New York, Claude Ezell, of Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., controller of Bank Night, said that more than 5,000 houses were using the game.

For details of the actions in the various cities, see page 74.

Spain's Confusion

The Spanish situation as it affects the motion picture business has become so confusing that all attempts to foretell the outcome, even as far as the immediate future is concerned, have been abandoned. Both distribution and exhibition, including American companies' activities, are at a complete standstill.

Correspondent Harry Plummer writes from the inside at Barcelona, on page 87.

Self-Regulation

The Hays organization in a dual report this week cited the advancements made in improving the quality and tone of both motion pictures and motion picture advertisements, under the industry's system of self-regulation.

See page 101.

No Costly Guesses

The 120 theatres of Fox Midwest Circuit in the agricultural country of the middle-west hereafter will stay clear of expensive experiments in exploitation for the old tried-and-proven methods of merchandising.

The manner in which the circuit intends substituting the old for the new is described on page 61.

CLASSROOM FILMS OPENING NEW $10,000,000 MARKET

Renewed Purchasing of Sound Apparatus Coupled with Library Expansion and Launching of Appreciation Courses

Use of motion pictures in education, held back five years by reduced school budgets, is now going ahead apace, and rapidly expanding development of the almost limitless possibilities in this field is expected in the 1936-37 season on the basis of plans formulated and surveys made in the past year.

A potential market of upwards of $10,000,000 annually for the industry in the adoption of sound motion pictures for use in classrooms alone is considered a conservative figure by authorities in the field of education.

Present activity in the field is in two distinct but related phases, each with important bearings on the future of the industry.

First is the equipping of schools with projectors and sound apparatus for the showing of pictures produced especially for visual education. An extensive library of such pictures including travelogues, scientific reels, technical subjects and similar topics, is already in existence and will be substantially increased. Visual instruction is being adopted by educators in increasing numbers as an invaluable ally and its importance is being realized more and more through the medium of motion pictures.

The second phase exerts a direct influence on motion picture theatre patronage and already has assumed a definite relationship, allied with adult movements on the quality of Hollywood production. Urged on by several national educational organizations, junior and senior high schools all over the country are establishing motion picture appreciation courses. In the classes the pupils are taught to study and evaluate the motion picture as an art and their analyses of particular films are related intimately to their studies in English and history.

Through several auxiliary agencies and through teachers' organizations the increased use of the motion picture as a visual aid to education is being fostered. The National Council of English teachers has circularized boards of education urging them to take cognizance of the value of the photoplay as a teaching aid. The Department of Secondary Education of the National Educational Association at its annual convention in Portland, Ore., this summer devoted a special session to discussion and demonstration of the photoplay in the schools.

One of the most active factors in the development of the field has been the American Council on Education. Urging local educational authorities to increase budgetary allowances so as to include this form of instruction Dr. George F. Zook, president of the Council, declared: "There is no longer any doubt about the remarkable teaching possibilities of the motion pictures in school and college work. In the appropriate classroom situation students learn 20 to 90 per cent more, forget less, and learn in a shorter period of time when taught by films than when taught by other methods. If schools are to keep pace with other social agencies they must adopt the most modern devices for instruction."

The Council inaugurated, in 1934, a project designed to further the use of motion pictures in the classrooms. Its purpose is to act as a national clearing house for information and to this end it is preparing a complete catalogue of educational films in the United States. Approximately 3,000 films of more or less educational value already have been listed.

Other work being carried on this summer by the Council includes a study of practical methods of setting up and administering visual aid programs in school systems and a national survey of visual instruction in elementary and secondary schools.

The United States Office of Education is cooperating with the Council in conducting the national survey. Information is being obtained relative to the number of school buildings equipped with electricity, the types of equipment in use in the various grades and the extent of use of the various types of visual aids.

The work of the Council and its aims have been endorsed by leading educators in all parts of the country. Alexander J. Stoddard, superintendent of schools in Providence, R. I., in pointing out the value of the Council's work said:

"The adaptation of this new medium of teaching and learning to the formal processes of education will require extensive experimentation and study, both in respect to the production of the picture materials themselves and their utilization in teaching. It should be made clear that the educational talking picture, if it is to meet the requirement as an aid to formal teaching and have a place in the methods and procedures of the school and classroom, must be prepared especially for the purpose. It is evident that the talking picture to be used in education is different from the kind prepared for entertainment purposes and should be a part of and not an addition to the regular curriculum of the schools."

New York Bureau Active

An outstanding example of work done in the field is the Bureau of Visual Instruction of the New York City Board of Education. The bureau supplies various types of equipment and materials for use in the elementary and junior high schools of the system and trains teachers in sound pedagogical procedure in the use of such materials.

A central film library of 1,200 reels is maintained, covering courses of study in geography, health education, nature study, biology and a series correlated with courses in economic citizenship given in junior and senior high schools. Each film has been chosen for its direct application to a portion of the required work of a given grade. In the matter of equipment it is the aim of the bureau to have at least one silent motion picture projector and screen installed in every school in the city. There are now 470 such projectors in use and machines are lent to schools which lack permanent equipment.

The bureau has obtained approval of the Board of Superintendents for extensive installation of motion picture equipment in every new school building. Recommendations call for a proposed expenditure of $3,874 on silent and sound projectors for new high schools and from $1,297 to $1,972 on 16 mm. projectors and larger units for the elementary and junior high schools.

Extension of visual instruction work has made great strides in other states. In Ohio recent appropriations and grants have launched a heavy campaign for the expanded

TEACHERS' COUNCIL ISSUES STUDY AIDS

Typical of the work being done by the National Council of English Teachers in the campaign to introduce motion picture appreciation courses in schools are the study guides issued by the Council through its publication office, Educational and Recreational Guides, Inc., with offices in Newark, N. J. At present available are guides for the study of "Mary of Scotland," "Romeo and Juliet," "Mutiny on the Bounty," "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Last Days of Pompeii," "The Three Musketeers," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Les Miserables," "Scrooge," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Fang and Claw," "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "The Prisoner of Shark Island," and "Things to Come."

The guides issued in pamphlet form cover such topics as biographical background, the photoplay versus the play or novel, topics for discussion, general questions and a suggested reading list.

use of films in the educational system. The work will be administered largely through a special department of Ohio State University under Dr. Edgar Dale. In New Orleans sound equipment has been purchased for 63 schools. Louisiana State University is buying the machines and a library of more than 200 film subjects will be supplied.

The Motion Picture Bureau of the national Young Men's Christian Association has been active in furthering visual education for children and adults through churches, clubs and other community groups. The bureau ships weekly about 12,000 pounds of educational films to such units. Rural schools use the service extensively. According to George J. Zehrung, director of the bureau, there are now between 70,000 and 80,000 non-theatrical projection machines in the United States and the demand for educational pictures exceeds the supply by 100 per cent.

"Potentially the motion picture is the greatest of educational media," Mr. Zehrung said in discussing the work done through his unit. "Consider that, although the largest university does not exceed 20,000 students, some 20,000,000 people go daily to the movies. And remember, too, that 80 per cent of all memories are visual. This gives the film its greatest advantage. Also, your lecturer on a talking film, can be made to repeat his lecture innumerable times, something that in the flesh he could not do, and that therefore even the slowest member of the class can maintain the average pace. This ability to repeat showings has made the film so valuable in medical instruction, for instance, that one famous surgeon has called it the finest of all media of medical education."

While the installation of projectors and the use of specially made educational films as part of regular school curricula is making rapid strides, the influence of motion pictures in the educational field has advanced in another direction. Teachers have realized the value of many feature pictures, produced in the last few years primarily for theatre exhibition, as aids in the study of English and history.

Ida Dean Cone, teacher of English in the Nutley, N. J., high school, discussing in a newspaper article the establishment of motion picture appreciation courses in high schools, pointed out that one of the most potent forces in the lives of pupils is the motion picture. "Educators have ceased battering futilely against the inroads of the films in the social scheme, and have begun utilizing them," she said. "The success of photoplay clubs in the schools is recognized, and the introduction of courses in photoplay appreciation in the high schools is being advocated. On the basis of the success of the clubs and of experimental classes in 36 states in 1935, the National Council of English Teachers is now strongly advocating that boards of education be approached with a twofold purpose in mind—creation of courses in photoplay appreciation for the eleventh year, and inclusion of appropriations for such courses in their budgets."

In explaining the advocacy of such classes by the National Council and by other groups of educators, Miss Cone said:

"It has been difficult to make the classics seem realistic to youth; yet through pictures the characters become real and the pupils readily comment on whether the life problems are real, the characteristics life-like, the plot logical, the ending natural and the theme significant.

"It is not assumed that seeing a picture will take the place of reading a classic, for books have literary value. However, pupils usually read faster and with more interest after seeing a picture. Even in schools which give no course in motion pictures librarians report that many books such as "David Copperfield," "Les Miserables" and "The Three Musketeers," which stood on the shelves unused for years, are in great demand.

"As literary experiences are interwoven with life, the class advances toward a worthwhile social objective. As the course develops, the pupils gain power of analysis, and become dissatisfied with obvious exaggerations and inconsistencies.

"The objectives of a typical course are: To familiarize the students with motion picture terminology; to evaluate the picture in relation to art, music and drama; to study the various factors involved in production of pictures; to learn to criticize competently the direction, the photography and the acting; to broaden the educational horizon, and to weigh the entertainment value."

Study Guides Issued

The National Council, in addition to publicizing methods for the establishment of such courses and advocating their usefulness, has issued study guides to be used with important pictures, showing the possibilities for their correlation with almost all subjects.

A demonstration of such a course was given by 40 pupils of Portland, Ore. high schools at the annual convention of the Department of Secondary Education of the National Education Association held in that city this summer. A preview of a new educational screen biography of Shakespeare, including the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," was used for the demonstration.

Dr. Ernest D. Lewis, president of the Department of Secondary Education, in discussing the project, said:

"The use of the photoplay, like the use of the newspaper, the magazine and the radio in the classroom, provides a powerful means to the ends we seek in education. Forthcoming films, like the screen versions of 'Julius Caesar,' 'Romeo and Juliet' and 'As You Like It,' are building a new popular interest in Shakespeare. Likewise the filming of Pearl Buck's 'The Good Earth,' James Hilton's 'The Lost Horizon,' Cooper's 'The Last of the Mohicans,' Marc Connelly's 'The Green Pastures,' Lord Tennyson's 'The Charge of the Light Brigade,' and Maxwell Anderson's 'Mary of Scotland' is stimulating the reading of good books wherever teachers are applying the new methods."

Adults Select Lists

Adult groups all over the country, organized into Better Films Councils and similar clubs, have aided the movement with the publication of selected lists of films and in some cases study guides for particularly important pictures. The Finer Films Federation of New Jersey, through Educational and Recreational Guides, Inc., the publication office of the Department of Secondary Education, recently published a booklet titled "A Course of Study in Motion Picture Appreciation." Prepared by Alice F. Sterner of the Barringer High School, Newark, N. J., and W. Paul Bowden of the East Orange High School, East Orange, N. J., the booklet describes the mechanics of motion picture production, the problems of exhibitor and trade practices, the industry's history, criteria to be used in viewing a picture and the objectives of photoplay appreciation courses.

"The Finer Films Federation, with the encouragement of an enlightened department of public instruction," the booklet says in a foreword, "finds in the high schools an opportunity for cooperative effort in developing a sense of photoplay discrimination. It is the conviction of the Finer Films Federation that the photoplay habits of youth, if formed under sensible direction, are the best assurance that the photoplay of the future will be critically examined rather than blindly accepted."

OHIO CENSORS FIND NOTHING TO SCISSOR

For the first time in many months, the Ohio censors, functioning at Columbus, ordered no eliminations in the 87 reels of film inspected last week.

The Ohio board has always been rated among the most exacting in its requirements and its decisions have been stoutly reenforced over a long sequence of contests spanning the years of its operation.

The board had ordered eliminations in 20 out of 470 reels inspected in July, 15 out of 390 reviewed in June.

Motif Music Adds Strength to Screen in "Anthony Adverse"

Korngold's Score Gives Visual Scenes Eloquence without Disturbing Spoken Word

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

The leitmotif and thematic methods of the stage music-drama have long been regarded as inevitable to the logical development of motion picture music-drama by close observers of the screen. A musical genius who could do for the screen what Richard Wagner did for the lyric stage has been yearned for and eagerly awaited.

Erich Wolfgang Korngold seems to fill the specifications. While the famous Viennese composer cannot be termed a new adventurer in the realm of motion picture musical media (he has already several important screen musical works to his credit), Korngold is still exploring the musical terrain of Sound-Shadowland and has established sign-posts that will be a sure guide to those who follow in his musical footsteps; for he brings to his task a distinctive musical and mental equipment that will go far toward developing a flexible and inspiring musical screen medium.

In Warner's "Anthony Adverse" the composer of "Die Tode Stadt" has utilized and adapted to the production the motif scheme of the music-drama, with an intelligent appreciation of the broader visual scope and the narrative extension afforded by the camera.

These methods are clearly revealed in his creation and application of musical themes, their identification with character, dramatic situation, mood and portent—amplified, developed, distorted, subdued, conflicting, triumphing—a sure and authentic connotation of what is seen and told in the progress of the story. The purely descriptive music, in underscoring and in direct exposition, is done with an expert sense of values in meeting the demands of the production. However, it is in his thematic interpretation that Korngold lifts "Anthony" from the level of the "musical" to the height of music-drama.

To one who can follow these music themes as they recur in many forms throughout the story, there is unfolded a tonal tapestry as clearly defined and as colorful as the visual and narrative context. The musical Philistine to whom a music motif is a crossword puzzle will absorb a symphony of sound that, unconsciously, he feels is significant.

THE ANTHONY THEME

This theme is introduced with the main title and recurs with increasing significance. Fredric March is Anthony.

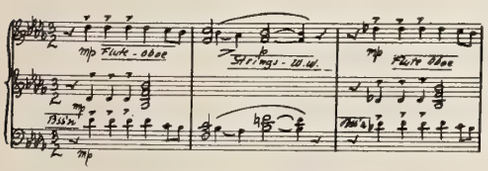
Korngold has woven approximately a score of different themes into his musical fabric. The most important—and oft-repeated—of these are the themes identified with Anthony, the Casa da Bonnyfeather, Africa, Brother Francois (Religioso), The Rain, Nalita, Anthony's Illness, and the love scenes between Anthony and Angela (Love Song).

Each of these themes is distinctive—in melodic line, in rhythm, in meter; each a tonal portrait as well as a symbol of the character and situation. And in this ability to characterize tonally lies much of the genius of the true musical dramatist. How they are altered and developed to interpret the alteration, change and development of the characters and the dramatic context, also reveals the artistry and talents of a musical genius.

The Anthony Theme, first introduced in the music to the main title, does not become significant until after the prologue recounting the history of Anthony's father and mother, and the clandestine love affair leading up to his birth. Then it is heard when the Marquis da Vincitana tells Bonnyfeather (the father of Anthony's mother) that the child died with the mother, at birth. Through succeeding sequences showing Anthony as a boy at the convent, it is developed in a cheerful mode. It recurs when Bonnyfeather notes the resemblance of the boy to Bonnyfeather's daughter (Anthony's mother), and is heard again in minor when Bonnyfeather soliloquizes, "Buried in the Alps!" as the Marquis falsified.

When Anthony has grown into manhood the theme takes on a firmer, more manly character. In Africa, where Anthony's nature is becoming hardened—brutalized by the slave traffic and his lust for money—the motif is heard struggling through the barbaric motif of Africa and of Nalita, the voluptuous native woman who is passionately in love with Anthony. It comes in conflict, too, with the Theme of Brother Francois (the Religioso), who has devoted his life to the care of sick and crippled slaves and who pleads with Anthony to leave the barbarous country and go back to Leghorn and to Bonnyfeather. The Theme is heard again in its purity when Anthony finally returns to Leghorn and meets again Angela, to whom he was married before going to Africa.

The Brother Francois Theme (Religioso) plays a most important part in what might be called the regeneration of Anthony. It first appears in the Africa sequences—a simple, noble, melodic pronouncement in canonical mode, contrasting strangely with the savage Allegro Barbaro immediately following that heralds the approach of slaves driven to the slave market on Anthony's plantation. Exotic, savage music, with the insistent beat of drums, it is punctuated by the cries of slaves beaten by the lash.



The Theme for the Casa da Bonnyfeather —a simple, melodious motif—characterizes the simplicity and sincerity and security of the Bonnyfeather menage.

Of like simplicity is the Love Song, first introduced when Anthony and Angela are seen driving through the woods. Announced as a trumpet solo, Angela later sings the refrain. Used in romantic scenes between the lovers, it becomes poignantly pathetique when, in the final scenes, Anthony reads Angela's letter of farewell, confessing her unworthiness to have the care of their child.

The operatic scenes—an old opera of the period by Monteverde and "The Duchess of Ferrara"—are well done and are an integral part of the story.

Korngold has not fallen into the pitfall of overplaying the connoting musical text. It never obtrudes on the spoken word, and fills in the vocally silent places with music that links dialogue and makes eloquent visual scenes.

THE RELIGIOSO

The Brother Francois theme plays an important part in the regeneration of Anthony. Pedro de Cordoba is Brother Francois.

THE LOVE SONG

Anthony and Angela (Olivia de Havilland) first are linked with the simple song while driving through the woods.

BONNYFEATHER THEME

A simple, melodious motif characterizes the sincerity and security of the Casa da Bonnyfeather.

"PLOUGH AND STARS" HAS

TWENTY YEARS ago Dublin rang with the Easter Week Uprising heard 'round the then troubled world. Ten years ago Dublin's Abbey theatre echoed with applause for Sean O'Casey's dramatization of the struggle. Today: event, place and play are being reproduced at the RKO-Radio studios in Hollywood under circumstances which must be rated as extraordinary in even this era of fastidious fidelity to setting and source.

It is no light matter to undertake commercial picturization of a play made famous by the Abbey Players. In their visits to the United States these Irish professionals have been royally received and entertained by the press and by that sector of the population which has a way of identifying with the classic that which it loudly approves. There has been permitted to take root in the land a more or less widespread belief that the plays of the Abbey Players are in some degree delicate, artistic works, set off in some vague way from the rugged, staple products of the entertainment world. They are not, of course, but the idea persists, and with it goes the feeling that picturization of such a play had better be handled just about so, as the pharse is, or something peculiarly lamentable will result.

For that reason, plus a good many others, such as because it is plainly good business to do so, the studio has turned to pertinent precedent in every detail of its preparations for the O'Casey picture. Most pertinent of these precedents, of course, is that of "The Informer," a picture of directly comparable character, and the selection of John Ford, director of that production, to direct "The Plough and the Stars" was obviously a natural one. Likewise the assignment of the script to Dudley Nichols, also of "The Informer" staff and, like Mr. Ford, an Academy immortal.

To the "Informer" precedent, too, may be traced the commissioning of Joseph August, who photographed not only that picture but likewise "Mary of Scotland," and the employment of George McNulty, responsible for the widely noted authenticity of "The Informer," to serve as technical advisor. The studio counts on this quartette to satisfy the most exacting stickler for technical veracity.

In the matter of casting an even more striking foresightedness has been displayed.

by Gus McCARTHY
in Hollywood

Barbara Stanwyck and Norman Foster, strictly cinema personalities, are playing the leads. Joseph M. Kerrigan and Una O'Connor, former Abbey players who have become cinema personalities, are in support, affording a direct tie between screen and stage cast, and to further emphasize respect due the justly celebrated Abbey Players five members of that organization have been brought to Hollywood and given roles in the picture. Among others in the cast are Moroni Olsen, Erin O'Brien Moore and Bonita Granville, the child actress of "These Three."

As these individuals progress with the production of the play Hollywood asks itself, naturally, "Will it be another 'Informer'?" And Hollywood, as usual, answers itself yes and no. The production stills reproduced herewith, together with the information given, equip the exhibitor to ask and answer the same question. One day the public will supply the really important answer in terms of box office. Certainly no orthodox means toward assuring an affirmative response is being neglected.

A HERALD PICTORIAL PREVIEW IN ADVANCE STILLS

RCA AND ERPI EXTEND COMPETITIVE CONTEST TO THE EXHIBITION FIELD

RCA Signs Fox-Skouras Theatres After Erpi Takes Servicing of Some Houses of Schine and Comerford Circuits

The competitive contest that has been waged in various degree in the motion picture between Radio Corporation of America and American Telephone and Telegraph Company, for a greater share of the profits of the sound equipment and sound servicing business, finally reached exhibition this week, moving the scene, for the first time in public, from the previous battleground of production in Hollywood, where both corporations have been conducting a campaign to capture studio recording business.

The opening gun in the newest campaign between the two big "electrics" was fired on Monday morning when RCA publicly announced that it had taken more than 300 Fox-Skouras theatres away from the Telephone Company's Erpi for sound reproducing servicing, after Electrical Research Products, Inc., more quietly, had taken away from RCA servicing some theatres of the Schine Circuit and some others of the Comerford Circuit.

The first phase of the battle was fought in June, when RCA, after years of effort, succeeded in penetrating the large production studios in Hollywood which until this summer had been served exclusively by Erpi. RCA signed Twentieth Century-Fox and Columbia Pictures to 10-year contracts for its "high fidelity" recording equipment. RCA made an attractive price to the producers, and, accordingly, Warner Brothers, later in June, followed Fox and Columbia to an RCA licensee's contract. Immediately, RCA opened negotiations with MGM and Universal, but Erpi retaliated by sharply reducing its scale of recording royalties for all producers, effective July 1st.

Scene Shifts to Exhibition

Now the battle scene shifts to exhibition, where most of the country's 14,000 theatres playing sound are equipped with one or the other of the two "major" reproducing systems.

RCA's announcement this week said that National Agency Corporation, headed by Spyros Skouras, president, and operating Fox theatres, has completed arrangements with the Photophone division of RCA Manufacturing Company, whereby the Erpi sound reproducing equipment in more than 300 Fox-controlled theatres in the Midwest and West hereafter will be serviced by RCA engineers.

The contract, which becomes effective October 1st, extends for a period of five years, and will include the theatres which are part of National's following circuit subsidiaries: Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, Fox Intermountain Theatres Corporation, Fox Columbia Theatres Corporation, and Wisconsin Enterprise Theatres Corporation.

"It is the first contract which RCA Photophone has thus far signed for servicing a large group of motion picture houses using competitive sound equipment," said the Radio Corporation's announcement.

This is especially significant in the competitive controversy in view of the fact that Erpi already had abandoned its strict policy of compelling theatre licensees to take Erpi servicing, and, instead, rewrote all contracts to provide that Erpi licensees, after two years, and on condition that their accounts were paid up, had the option to take Erpi servicing or not.

Although Erpi has been quietly taking on the servicing of many competitive equipments, RCA's sudden press boast this week of the wholesale acquisition of Fox servicing accounts from Erpi caused Erpi, on Monday, to likewise come out in the open with the announcement that it, too, "has begun servicing talking picture reproducing equipment other than Western Electric sound systems."

Then, on Tuesday, Broadway heard that RCA is starting negotiations with the large Warner Brothers Circuit with the view of servicing those theatres which are for the most part equipped with Western Electric.

Erpi spokesmen charged that RCA's acquisition of the 300 Fox-Skouras servicing accounts could be laid directly to price, pointing out that RCA agreed to service the Fox theatres for $5 per year for 12 calls annually, whereas Erpi's minimum charge for servicing is $9 a year.

RCA's invasion into the servicing field on the wholesale is apparently a change of its policy which heretofore held that servicing was not absolutely necessary, and, therefore, the corporation did not insist that exhibitors buying their reproducers must also purchase servicing.

Erpi now services some 4,500 out of 5,500 Western Electric installations.

Erpi's servicing division has been the source of most of its revenue in exhibition since the saturation has been reached, more or less, in equipment installations. On the other hand, RCA has not insisted that its theatre customers take "compulsory" servicing any longer than a short period whenever the equipment is purchased on the installment basis.

Periodic Checkup Calls

The Fox-Skouras theatres now lost by Erpi to RCA are in Colorado, California, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Montana, New Mexico, Idaho, Iowa, Illinois, Arizona and Wisconsin.

Under the new arrangement, RCA explains, its service engineers will make periodic checkup calls and be available for emergency service, without charge, whenever necessary. The "without charge" reference is only to emergency calls.

That the invasion by RCA into Erpi's strongest clientele in the west will not necessarily be confined to the acquisition of the theatres for servicing alone was conceded by an RCA spokesman in New York Tuesday, who said that the corporation "might" replace Erpi equipments with RCA's in the Fox properties, or at least in some of the theatres. RCA also hopes to replace at least some Erpi equipments in the Warner houses with RCA Photophone reproducers. Eight such replacements have already been made. In addition, it was learned that RCA has had preliminary discussions concerning the servicing of other Western Electric-equipped circuits.

Contract Fight, Carried into Studio When RCA Signed Three Large Producers, Turns to the Theatre Field

Service Circuit Rearranged

F. B. Ostman, RCA service manager in the Photophone factory at Camden, N. J., said that the Photophone service circuit, which heretofore has been of limited size, although extending from both coasts, is being rearranged to include the new contract theatres. Twenty additional sound technicians are to be placed in the technical staff, he said. Spare replacement parts for sound reproducing equipment will be warehoused at strategic points throughout the country for immediate availability. The RCA service engineers will be equipped with new test apparatus known as the cathode ray oscillograph, an instrument which permits a diagnosis of hidden theatre trouble in reproducers by making it visible on a fluorescent screen, in much the same way as the X-ray is used by the physician.

Arrangement Explained

Arrangements by which Erpi took over the servicing of a comparative few competitive equipments in the Schine and Comerford circuits were explained by Erpi as follows:

"Negotiations have been completed between Electrical Research Products and the Schine Circuit for the renewal of contracts for service to all of their sound-equipped theatres in their circuit, including competitive equipments.

"Electrical Research Products since March 8, 1936, have been servicing all of the theatres in the Comerford Circuit, including theatres which have competitive equipment.

"In the Schine Circuit there are 56 Western Electric equipped theatres. Contracts have been signed for the servicing of 13 of the 22 competitive equipments, and negotiations are being concluded for the remainder."

The Comerford deal includes nine theatres which have competitive equipments, and is in process of being signed.

Erpi's New Plan

Too, Erpi is about ready to launch a new merchandising and advertising campaign on both its new extended servicing and on a new theatre reproducer, in order to offset some of RCA merchandising activities. Erpi also will make special sales efforts in the field, starting with a "pep" meeting of the sales forces—Erpi's "first national sales convention," opening at New York's swanky Hotel Pierre, on Fifth Avenue, next Monday.

These adjustments, totaling $225,962, were charged to general and contingent reserves in accordance with the treatment of similar adjustments at the close of 1935.

Peter R. Govel Dies

Peter R. Govel, 82, for more than 40 years identified with the motion picture and theatre industry at Zanesville, Ohio, is dead after a lingering illness. He was a director of the Brown Theatrical Company, which for many years controlled all local theatres. His widow, two brothers and three sisters survive.

John B. O'Brien Dies; Director and Early Star

John B. O'Brien, one of the foremost directors in the early days of the silent motion picture, died this week in Los Angeles. He was 51. He first studied to become a lawyer, but Daniel Frohman persuaded him to become an actor. He was leading man for the late Thomas H. Ince and appeared in the Broadway hit of 30 years ago, "The Belle of New York." Later he toured Europe, returning to become a director for the Essanay Film Company.

Mr. O'Brien was said to have directed one of the first five-reel features, "The Life of Buffalo Bill." He also wrote and directed "Destiny's Toy," and was an assistant to David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation."

Strike Union Victor

The United Electrical and Radio Workers of America, the union that sponsored the recent four-week strike at the R.C.A. Manufacturing Company's plant at Camden, N. J., was credited with all except 147 of 3,163 votes cast by company employes last Saturday in an election to determine their collective bargaining agency.

Officials of the United Electrical and Radio Workers, as they claimed victory, said the National Labor Relations Board, which conducted the election, had done "a very fair and impartial job," while leaders of the inside union termed it "invalid." Board officials withheld comment.

HOLLYWOOD BACKING PLAYS ON ITS OWN, IGNORING DRAMATISTS GUILD

Seven Large Companies Band Together to Finance Production Through New Bureau and Playwriting Competition

Withdrawal of motion picture backing, variously estimated up to $2,000,000 annually, from the legitimate stage of Broadway, brought about last May with the ratification by the Dramatists' Guild of changes in the manager-playwright minimum basic agreement, was not as complete as first indicated. Now, as the new play season approaches, it is learned that seven of the large film companies have banded together to finance productions this fall on the legitimate stage through the office of Theresa Helburn, a leading New York play broker, and her new Bureau of New Plays, Inc., and to encourage new playwriting in order to widen the source of material for Hollywood, a source now drying up in the stage.

The Bureau of New Plays, Inc., is being sponsored by Columbia Pictures Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, Paramount Pictures, Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, Universal Pictures Corporation and Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.

From these companies equal sums of money, the totals not disclosed, have been received by Miss Helburn's office to sponsor a prize play competition among undergraduates or graduate students of any American or Canadian university or college, as well as alumni and former students who have been graduated or have left college within the past three years.

The announcement of the competition says that "all plays must be original, full length, unpublished and unproduced by any professional theatre. The manuscripts submitted must be accompanied by the recommendation of the Head of the Dramatic or English Department of the author's college or University, such recommendation to be concerned with the quality and maturity of the work, and not with the subject matter."

Six Prizes of $500 Each

The prizes, of which there will be six of $500 each for each type play chosen as the winner of its class, will be awarded by the producers, through Miss Helburn and a committee of judges chosen from a panel of directors of university drama schools, critics, producers, stage stars, stage directors, playwrights and English instructors.

The winning plays also are practically assured of production on Broadway and the sponsoring motion picture companies will have the first opportunity to bid for the screen rights, even if the plays are not actually produced on the stage but only submitted in the competition. The usual agreement between the motion picture producer and the stage producer will not exist if any of these plays are purchased for screen treatment, for none of the authors will be a member of the Dramatists Guild, with which the film producers are at odds.

Paramount Move Reported

It further has been reported that at least one company, Paramount, despite the objections to the Dramatists Guild, will reenter legitimate production this fall in a manner similar to that with which it worked in the past with Charles Frohman. Adolph Zukor, who made the old deal with Mr. Frohman's office, is said to favor renewed production in the legitimate field on the part of his company and to be the prime factor behind the move. Under the old alliance, Paramount held the leases on the Lyceum and Empire theatres in Times Square, but both houses went bankrupt and the company made no effort to retrieve them. The company still owns the Frohman film rights, however, but has not produced plays through it for some years.

Motion picture producers, on the other hand, will not want for screen material if they return to the Broadway legitimate field this fall, for the coming season is expected to be the biggest in a decade and many productions are already in work in preparation for out-of-town openings before coming to Times Square next month.

More Musical Shows

A larger number of musical shows looms upon the Broadway horizon this year than has been contemplated since 1930. Chorus calls, which have already been held, indicate that some 12 musical comedies will be presented, with rehearsals of most of these already under way. Outstanding features of the 1936-37 term of theatrical activity, as it now appears in the near future, are:

A larger number of musical comedies and operettas than has been seen in many a year.

A record number of costume dramas for modern Broadway.

The trend toward musicals and costume plays would indicate financial backing similar to that prior to 1929.

The announcements some months ago of motion picture companies that they would not finance any more plays as they did in the past has not seemed to dampen Broadway's enthusiasm.

Broadway will welcome back a number of players who have been active in motion pictures of late, including Katharine Hepburn, Margaret Sullavan, Kitty Carlisle, Leslie Howard and Helen Gahagan.

A substantial number of producers who have been inactive for several seasons are coming back into the game, as well as a number of new impresarios, some of whom have been waiting for better times before joiuing the managerial ranks.

The season is scheduled to open early, and with a zest that has been lacking until October or November in recent years.

Cooperation Is International

Cooperation of the type promoted by Managers' Round Table department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD is international in scope and tangibly profitable, according to Walter F. Davis, manager of the Capitol theatre, Regina, Saskatchewan, whose bonus earnings for the past year under a managers' sharing plan he describes as "very satisfactory".

"A fellow may be a long way off from the fountain of activities," Mr. Davis writes, "but through your publication we get the recognition that encourages us to make an honest endeavor to succeed.

"Original ideas hatched out here would die out here if it were not for the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and I hope the success it so much deserves continues and will be helped by the activities of members of the Round Table Club."

Postpone Naming Republic Head

Republic Pictures at present is not considering a successor to W. Ray Johnston, who resigned recently as president, according to Herbert J. Yates. The company is too busy producing pictures to be thinking about a new president now and the next board of directors' meeting will not be held until next month, he said.

Meanwhile, Nat Levine, Republic production head, has returned to Hollywood from Manhattan where he attended a preview of "Follow Your Heart" and conferred with franchise holders from key cities. About 15 were present at the meetings held at the home offices, including Herman Rifkin of Boston, and his manager, Ed Morey; Nat Lefton and Sam Gorrel, Cleveland; Harry Levine, Philadelphia; Jim Alexander, Pittsburgh; Bernard Mills, Albany; Sam and Jake Flax, Washington.

INDUSTRY PITS 35 "BIG" FILMS AGAINST POLITICAL COMPETITION

Hays Lists Outstanding Titles as Antidotes for Theatres Against Loss of Patronage to Soapbox Orators

The organized motion picture industry's first broadside aimed at bolstering box office receipts during the competitive period anticipated from theatrical ballyhooing of political aspirants to the Presidency was fired this week right from the production grounds in Hollywood. There Will H. Hays, on behalf of the industry and especially the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America of which he is president, cited 35 titles in "a new high tide in the production of important motion pictures" which is expected to stem any serious drift away from theatres to the radio, traveling sound truck and speechmaker's platform of the political campaigners.

Mr. Hays' announcement was made to the trade and news press, and although it did not specifically mention a purpose, publicity, advertising and sales chiefs of his member companies for months have been considering the mapping of a special campaign to bolster box offices late this summer and in the fall, when the heat of the political campaign, in which elaborate showmanship is expected to be used, will make theatre patronage a target.

No definite measures have as yet been announced by any of the companies toward joint action on a campaign of institutional publicity. Several advertising and publicity chiefs agreed as early as last June that the formation of a committee to plan an intensive national drive would prove efficient in meeting the problem which in this presidential campaign threatens to be more acute than ever because of the wide extent to which the politicians are lining up star motion picture and radio attractions with which to spellbind the voters.

Showmen Warned

Spokesmen for the MPPDA and the national exhibitor organizations issued warnings last July that exhibitors must be prepared to exert their most expert showmanship efforts to carry on even normal business in the face of the flood of theatricals which will be offered by the politicians.

Thus, as an opener, the organized industry now calls attention of both exhibitor and public to the vast array of outstanding screen entertainment that will be available at this period. In a printed pamphlet, being sent to the public by the carload, principally through civic, church, educational and other organized interests, each of the titles is briefly described, and the suggestion offered that the prospective patron contact his theatre manager to determine when each of the pictures will be shown. The list of titles follows:

ADVENTURES OF TOM SAWYER, by Mark Twain. United Artists.
ANTHONY ADVERSE, with Fredric March. Warner.
BIG BROADCAST OF 1937, with Jack Benny, Leopold Stokowski, George Burns and Gracie Allen. Paramount.
THE BOWERY PRINCESS, with Shirley Temple. Fox.
CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS, by Rudyard Kipling. MGM.
CAMILLE, with Greta Garbo. MGM.

COME AND GET IT, by Edna Ferber, with Edward Arnold. United Artists.
CRAIG'S WIFE, with Rosalind Russell, John Boles and Billie Burke. Columbia.
DANTON, by Romain Rolland, with Paul Muni. Warner.
DODSWORTH, by Sinclair Lewis, with Walter Huston and Ruth Chatterton. United Artists.
GARDEN OF ALLAH, all color with Marlene Dietrich and Charles Boyer. United Artists.
THE GENERAL DIED AT DAWN, with Gary Cooper and Madeleine Carroll. Paramount.
GIRLS' DORMITORY, with Simone Simon, Herbert Marshall and Ruth Chatterton. Fox.
THE GOOD EARTH, by Pearl Buck, with Paul Muni and Luise Rainer. MGM.
THE GORGEOUS HUSSY, with Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor and Lionel Barrymore. MGM.
THE GREEN PASTURES, with Rex Ingram and the Hall Johnson Choir. Warner.
INTERLUDE, with Grace Moore. Columbia.
JOAN OF ARC, with Claudette Colbert. Warner.
KIM, with Freddie Bartholomew. MGM.
LAST OF THE MOHICANS, with Randolph Scott, Henry Wilcoxon, Binnie Barnes, Heather Angel, Bruce Cabot. United Artists.
LLOYD'S OF LONDON, with Freddie Bartholomew, Loretta Young and Sir Guy Standing. Fox.
LOST HORIZON, with Ronald Colman. Columbia.
MADAME CURIE, with Irene Dunne. Universal.
MAID OF SALEM, with Claudette Colbert. Paramount.
MARIE ANTOINETTE, with Norma Shearer and Charles Laughton. MGM.
MARY OF SCOTLAND, with Katharine Hepburn and Fredric March. RKO.
MY MAN GODFREY, with William Powell and Carole Lombard. Universal.
THE ROAD TO GLORY, with Frederic March, Warner Baxter and Lionel Barrymore. Fox.
ROMEO AND JULIET, with Norma Shearer and Leslie Howard. MGM.
SEVENTH HEAVEN, based on the romantic drama by Austin Strong. Fox.
SWING TIME, with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers. RKO.
TWO IN A CROWD, with Joel McCrea and Joan Bennett. Universal.
VALLEY FORGE, based on the Theatre Guild Play by Maxwell Anderson. Columbia.
WINTERSET, with Burgess Meredith and Margo in the roles they created on the stage. RKO.

In the foregoing list, which appears in the same alphabetical manner as that in which the MPPDA compiled it for release to the press without naming the companies, MGM is down for seven of the outstanding productions, Twentieth Century-Fox and Warner have six each; Columbia and United Artists, five each; Paramount and RKO, four each, and Universal, three.

Points to High Standards

Mr. Hays, who has just completed a month's survey in Hollywood of the new entertainment product, declared that the new season will see the presentation of more than 50 screen plays which will be of "an artistic and entertainment character ranking with those pictures which hitherto have marked the 'Ten Best' of the year."

"Never in any one year nor, for that matter, over a several-year period, have so many truly outstanding pictures been produced as will follow in succession upon the screens of our theatres this fall." Mr. Hays said in a report to his producers.

"Many of the great pictures of the coming season serve a double entertainment purpose. Backgrounds vastly extended from the limitations imposed by the proscenium arch of the theatre and built upon a world canvas which only the camera makes possible, and music and action that appeal to the millions are joined in productions of higher dramatic, literary and artistic values."

"No less significant in the progress of the screen as a cultural as well as a great entertainment medium," Mr. Hays declared, "is the number of films for the coming season which will deal with the lives and exploits of great statesmen, great figures in history, great scientists, great artists and composers."

"In addition to the many original stories which the screen will feature, the film dramatization of familiar classics of literature continues," he added.

"The romance and colorful episodes in the history of our own country, and the stories of brave pioneers that have stirred the imagination and pride of Americans will prove another rich source of motion picture entertainment during the coming season," Mr. Hays declared.

WARNER'S $500,000 ADVERTISING DRIVE

Coincident with this week's announcement by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America of some 50 outstanding productions which will be available as a box office impetus this fall, comes Warner Brothers' decision to spend $500,000 to reach 100,000,000 American magazine readers with advertising messages on their own outstanding releases. Warners describe the campaign as the biggest in their history.

Full page group ads, several in color, in addition to regular fan publication advertising, will be staggered in some 30 of the largest national publications, having a combined circulation of 25,500,000, and an estimated average of over 100,000,000 readers.

Some of the magazines will cooperate with local Warner theatre accounts by telephoning their readers in neighborhoods where the advertised pictures are playing.

Other magazines will distribute heralds giving the title of the picture, name of the theatre and playdates.

In addition, Warners will considerably increase its cooperative newspaper advertising budget.

"HAVE YOU HEARD WHAT THE CRITICS SAY ABOUT 'MISTER CINDERELLA'!"

(Following right after the raves about Laurel-Hardy in "Our Relations" Mr. Roach modestly lets the press tell you about his Second-in-a-row FEATURE LENGTH HIT!)

"'Mr. Cinderella' sets the pace in large measure for the new feature-comedy program of Hal Roach. It is one of the most amusing comedies of the type lately shown; in fact, one of the funniest films of the year. The preview showing was given at the Uptown Theatre, and many laughs testified to the satisfaction derived by the audience. Quite a bit of success may be prophesied for this particular cinema diversion."

Los Angeles Times

"The preview of 'Mr. Cinderella,' starring Jack Haley, the other night reminded me of the days when audiences loosened theater seats with laughter. This film was aimed at everybody's ribs, and a thorough job of giggle-getting has been accomplished. You'll like 'Mister Cinderella' because it's fast and furious fun."

—Los Angeles Herald-Express

"Clever Comedy-drama. Will draw plenty of Raves. Here's a worthy film that should be joyfully received by exhibitors and patrons. Picture contains lots of good gags, fast action, clever story and fine cast with Haley, Treacher, Furness and Lockhart scoring in their performances. This picture is destined for popularity. Sell it as big laughfest with clean, healthy story."

— Showmen's Trade Review

"Hal Roach has turned out one of the funniest pictures in the current season. The preview audience at the Orpheum laughed and giggled throughout the first showing."

—Motion Picture Daily (Hollywood Preview)

"Fast moving comedy with laugh angles to please any audience. Jack Haley does his best picture work to date." —Variety

BELOW we find Jack Haley, Broadway stage star and Betty Furness completely overcome by the swell reviews on this page.

"Class A comedy built for the loud laughs, and will get them. Jack Haley delivers fine performance. This is a Class A comedy, built solely for laughs—and getting them, many of the belly variety. Edward Sedgwick, a master of comedy, has used his full bag of tricks and the result is a heavy total of chuckles and guffaws. Slapstick is used to good advantage. Jack Haley is a happy choice for the title role and has never done better work. Betty Furness, Arthur Treacher, Raymond Walburn, Kathleen Lockhart, Edward Brophy are among the funmakers who romp through their roles. Monroe Owsley, usually a heavy, is right at home in a comedy part."

—The Film Daily

"Built for audience laughter, 'Mister Cinderella' succeeds honestly in its purpose. Edward Sedgwick concentrates upon the situations that bring howls. The preview reception proved all of it good audience stuff. Hal Roach, now dedicated mainly to feature production, lends a splendid physical mounting to 'Mr. Cinderella.' Jack Haley's is a hit performance. Betty Furness contributes a really fine piece of work. Another smash is scored by Arthur Treacher as one of his inimitable butlers."

PATSY—she's fresh!

LYDA—
she's saucy!

ROSINA—
she's mischievous!

MEET HAL'S GALS!

PATSY KELLY'S got a breezy naturalness about her that has clicked with audiences. They like Patsy. She's one of the masses, just like the folks out front and they love her kind of clowning. A good bet for Mr. Hal Roach's feature comedies.

LYDA ROBERTI is well known on Broadway as an electric light name in the $6.60 musical comedy class! Your patrons will fall for her too. She's got pep, personality and when she sings her famous ditty "Sweet and Hot" with that captivating accent and when she dances and taps...okay lovely Lyda!

ROSINA LAWRENCE is frankly a newcomer but with real promise. She's an eyeful and earful. What a voice! And she makes a perfect third for this trio of entertainers!

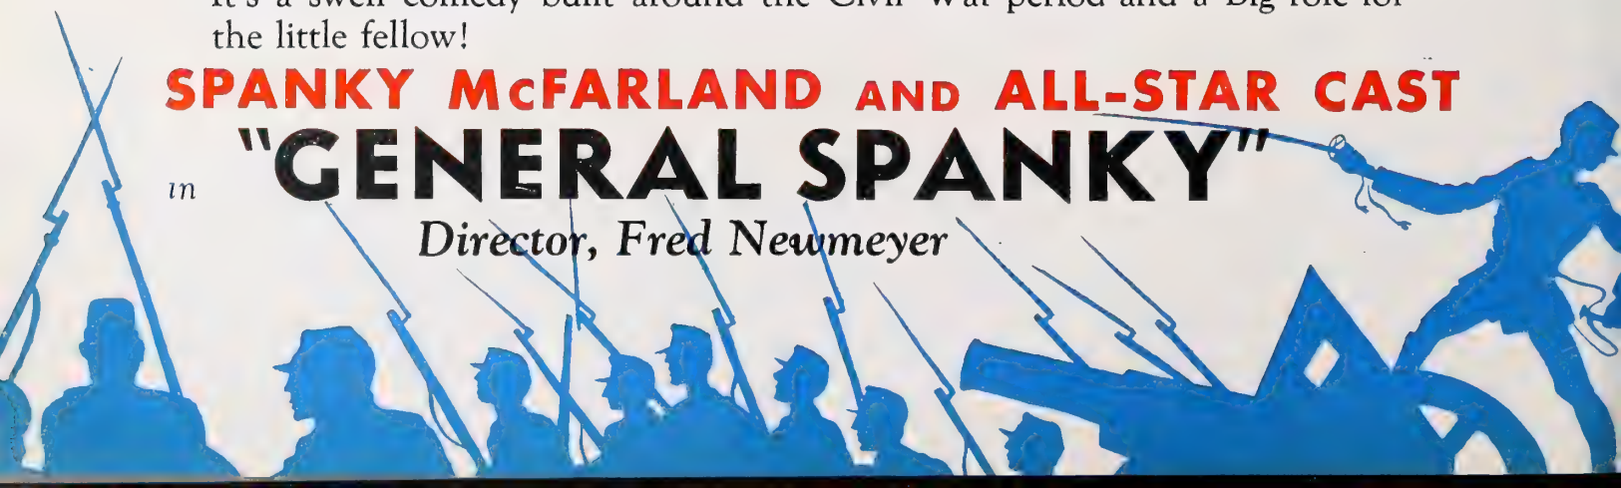
"The Personality Kid," SPANKY McFARLAND



If this turns out the way Hal Roach thinks it will, you've got a new electric light name to challenge any existing juvenile star. Good as he was in those merry short subjects Spanky McFarland's got a lot of talent and winsomeness that can only be brought out fully in a full-length feature with character building and story construction. In putting Spanky into a big feature production Mr. Roach really follows the logical development of this grand youngster with audiences and showmen. The deciding factor was Spanky's personal appearance tour when he literally wowed them! So here's his feature debut and it's getting every chance in the way of production, etc. It's a swell comedy built around the Civil War period and a Big role for the little fellow!

SPANKY McFARLAND in OUR GANG Comedies One Reel Each

OF COURSE SPANKY will continue to star in "Our Gang" comedies now being made by as spry a troupe of youngters as ever gathered under the Klieg lights. The "Our Gang" Comedies are in 1-reel each now and definitely a bright spot on any program.

ALFALFA! Certainly, there he is in the photo above, second from the right. It sure had to be trick photography to remove his freckles from the photograph and to re-arrange those eyes! But on the screen he's got all those things that make folks chuckle and a weirder voice than ever!

NATURALLY Hal Roach will continue to make "Our Gang" Comedies in single reels in addition to his new Feature Production enterprise. The public just wouldn't stand for a discontinuance of "Our Gang". Might as well abolish baseball!

"OUR GANG FOLLIES OF 1937" The first one was such a joy that it's good business all around to have another in the new season. Based on the experience with last season's Gang Follies, they've developed some new Gang gags that are positively marvelous. Wait!

Certainly, in addition to his FEATURES, there will be

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

Killer At Large

(Columbia)

Melodramatic Mystery

A murder mystery, there's spine chilling story content for melodrama fans. At the same time, the production's potentialities for unique and effective exploitation are many and large.

The heavy in the show is the operator of a stunt used to ballyhoo stores. It consists of four wax dummies and himself, and as Mr. Zero is an expert in assuming statuesque poses, the attraction for the onlooker is to guess which of the figures is alive.

But in the store which he is ballyhooing a robbery and murder are committed. A young clerk is suspected, but through the efforts of a feminine detective the police are convinced of his innocence and believe the living dummy is the culprit. Ensues an exciting series of adventures in Mr. Zero's wax works, wherein Mr. Zero devotes all his activities to rubbing out the young couple, but he is prevented by the arrival of the police.

The story is an original by Carl Clausen, with screen play by Harold Shumate, and it is being made under the direction of David Selman.

The two leads are Mary Brian and Russell Hardie, as the detective and clerk. Mr. Zero is Henry Brandon. The trio is supported by George McKay, Thurston Hall, Betty Compson, Harry Hayden, Boyd Irwin and Charles Moore.

One Man Came Back

(RKO Radio)

Melodrama

Promising to be a startling picture, dramatically realistic, entertainment always and never propaganda, this story is a vivid cross section view of Condemned Row, where convicted criminals await execution. Particularly does it concern the terrifying experiences of an innocent man convicted of murder by an attorney who looks upon his accomplishment as a stepping stone to the governor's chair, and the last-minute success of a girl and a police inspector in saving his life.

The time is the present, the locales a midwestern city and the death house in a penitentiary. The story is an original screen play by John Twist, lately credited with collaboration on "The Last Outlaw," "Annie Oakley" and "Yellow Dust." Direction is by Christy Cabanne, who made "The Last Outlaw" and "Another Face." Production is in the hands of Edward Small, whose first radio effort was "The Bride Walks Out." Mr. Small is also the producer of the forthcoming "The Last of the Mohicans," based on the famous semi-classic of that name by James Fenimore Cooper.

Preston Foster, soon to be seen in "The Plough and the Stars," is the inspector; Ann Dvorak, absent from the screen since "Dr. Socrates," is the girl, and John Beal, remembered for his appearance with Katharine Hepburn in "Break of Hearts" and "The Little Minister," is the helpless victim of political ambition and gang fear. These are the principals, yet with 40 speaking parts written in, the supporting cast is one of the largest assembled in Hollywood in some time. Most of these players are familiar to picture goers. The list includes Russell Hopton, J. Carrol Naish, Ray Mayer, Frank M. Thomas, Landers Stevens, Frank Jenks, John Wray, Paul Hurst, DeWitt Jennings, Gordon James, Bryant Washburn, a silent day favorite, Russell Hicks, Ed LeSain, Howard Hickman, Wilfred Lucas, Oscar Apfel and John Carroll.

The story is told in straight from the shoulder style. While concentrating on drama, it nevertheless has a love interest quality, and as it seeks to present an accurate picture it is neither a sentimental defense of condemned men nor a harsh cry for vengeance against those who overstep society's bounds.

King of Hockey

(Warner)

Dramatic Romance

The thrills, color and speedy excitement of ice hockey are the production backgrounds of this dramatic romance. Staged in the atmosphere of Madison Square Garden and New York at the height of the modern professional rink season, the picture will present two crack hockey teams in action. The lead role will be played by Dick Purcell, former ace Fordham University player, seen recently in smaller parts in several Warner pictures.

Purcell joins the Shrinking Violets as ace player on the toughest team in the league. With professional success comes romance with Ann Nagel. Slimy underworld betting rings have their innings, and Purcell is suspected of dealing with them because his attentions to the girl have caused his playing to suffer. Following a flight with the team's manager who accuses him of double crossing, Purcell, whose eyes have been injured, is fired off the club. A broken man, he wanders the streets of New York to be found by hero worshiping little Ann Gilles. An operation clarifies his vision, suspicion is dropped, and Purcell returns to the arena to become a reigning star of the ice.

The story is an original by George Bricher, former New York sports writer, and direction is by Noel Smith.

The cast supporting Purcell and Miss Nagel includes Miss Gilles, Wayne Morris, George E. Stone, Frank Faylen, Joseph Crehan, Garry Owen, Guy Usher, Dora Clement, Marie Wilson, Max Hoffman, Jr., and members of the teams of the University of Southern California and Loyola.

Winterset

(RKO Radio)

Drama

The stage play from which this picture is adapted was voted the outstanding play of the past season. It was written by Maxwell Anderson, who gained fame for his collaboration with Laurence Stallings on "What Price Glory," and who is also the author of the current "Mary of Scotland." The screen play is by Anthony Veiller, credited with "The Ex Mrs. Bradford" and "Star of Midnight." Direction is by Alfred Santell, maker of "The Life of Virgie Winters," "Bondage" and the well remembered "The Patent Leather Kid."

In deciding to make the picture, Producer Pandro S. Berman chose to take the three leading players who made such a hit in the original for the screen version. Burgess Meredith, the hero, makes his screen debut; Margo, the girl, has been seen in several pictures, notably "Crime Without Passion," "Robin Hood of El Dorado" and "Rumba." Eduardo Ciannelli, the menace, played in "Reunion in Vienna" and "The Scoundrel." Supporting this trio there are several wellknown screen names and many that are not so familiar. The cast includes Edward Ellis, Paul Guilfoyle, Maurice Moscovitch, a newcomer from the stage, Fernanda Eliscu, who played in the original version, Stanley Ridges, John Carradine, Sidney Toler, Helen Jerome Eddy, Murray Kinnel, Myron McCormack, who replaced Cianelli in the original cast, Mischa Auer and Bobby Caldwell.

The story is drama, tense, thrilling and action packed, presented in grimly realistic fashion. It deals with a miscarriage of justice which takes an innocent man to the electric chair. Years later the victim's son, determined to clear the memory of his father, becomes involved in a roaring drama and heart touching romance in crowded New York until the law of the gun establishes its own justice.

The Big Game

(RKO Radio)

Football Romance-Drama

Of the several football films to be released during the gridiron season, the aptly titled "The Big Game," is one that bases its hopes for popularity on the topical character of the story, which is a gambler menaced saga of the football game; the contrasting romantic interest, dramatic suspense and the thrill action of conflict on the field.

The yarn is taken from a story by Francis Wallis that ran serially in Collier's a few months ago. The time is the present and the locale, though supposedly in the East, actually takes in the campuses of several Los Angeles universities, while the football action was shot in the famous Rose Bowl.

For a motivation the story centers itself around a star back whose accomplishments in one game and failures in others convinces a sports writer that he is in league with big time gamblers. Building to a climax, the boy is kidnaped by the gamblers, only to be rescued in the fourth quarter by his coach, the girl in the case and several husky pigskin warriors, to come back in time to win the game.

One of the outstanding showmanship qualities of the production undoubtedly will be the presentation of a group of famous football players including Bobby Wilson, William Shakespeare, Jay Berwanger, Gomer Jones, Red Cagle, Irvin Klein, Chuck Bemis, Monk Moscrip, Bones Hamilton and Frank Alustiza.

In the straight picture names category, Philip Huston, a recruit from the legitimate stage, makes his debut as the star. June Travis, seen in many Warner features, is the girl, James Gleason the gambler and Frank Thomas the coach. Bruce Cabot and Andy Devine are fellow players and others in the cast are C. Henry Gordon, the sports-writer, Guinn Williams, Margaret Seddon, Barbara Pepper, John Arledge, Murray Kinnell and Eddie Nugent.

"Everyman" for Hollywood

Johannes Poulsen, director of the Royal theatre of Denmark, will produce "Everyman" in the Hollywood Bowl for 8 days in September.

NEW YORK LEADS MOVE TO RAISE ADMISSIONS

Midday Price Made Opening Change, Increasing Tariff to 15c Where Formerly a Dime

"Early bird" admission prices in the Greater New York area will be eliminated and evening prices uniformly will begin at 5 p. m. at all major and independent theatres starting September 4th and 5th, it was decided this week at a special meeting in the offices of Charles C. Moskowitz in the Loew Building on Broadway.

The agreement is the first of its kind reached by major circuits and unaffiliated exhibitors in the New York territory in many a year, and is but one phase of the new trend growing elsewhere to raise admissions and eliminate cut-rates. While the major circuits from time to time have cooperated with the independents on adverse legislation battles, the unanimity on the question of admissions is the first in the last ten years.

The meeting, which follows a general survey of admission conditions throughout the country by MOTION PICTURE HERALD in the issue of August 1, was attended by Nate J. Blumberg, George P. Skouras, Louis Frisch, Si Fabian, Sam Rosen, Matty Kutinsky, Marvin Schenck, Laurence Bolognino, Bernary Barr, Sam Strassberg, Leo Brecher, Max Cohen, Joseph Seider, Jack W. Springer, Sam D. Cocalis, Eugene Picker, Al Lichtman, Harry Brandt and Mr. Moskowotz, who acted as chairman.

From Dime to 15 Cent Opener

As a result of the agreement, all theatres which usually open with a low admission in the morning, and early in the afternoon change to an intermediate figure before putting the evening price scale into effect, will make that intermediate price the opening figure. In other words, if a theatre opens in the morning with a 10-cent admission and around 1 or 2 p. m. adds five cents, the new understanding is that the 15-cent figure will be the opening price. The only other raise in the admission for the day will be the 5 p. m., tariff, which virtually is the evening price.

Mr. Lichtman, assistant to Nicholas M. Schenck at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and representing all the distributors, told the circuit and independent theatre men that every company would cooperate 100 per cent with the idea. Last year the same theatre men met at the Hotel Astor in New York for discussions along the same lines, but agreement could not be reached. Mr. Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, suggested the meeting conducted this week.

Representatives of Paramount and Warner did not attend the meeting, and executives at the offices of the circuits refused to commit themselves when asked if they would follow the move of the other operators. However, it is expected that the two companies will fall in line and agree to the plan drawn up.

That Warners will join the movement with the Strand theatre is indicated by a new plan to be inaugurated shortly. Only "A" product of Warners and First National will be dated after "Anthony Adverse," which opens August 26th and is expected to continue for a month at popular prices.

Howard S. Cullman of the Roxy has announced that starting August 28th a revised price scale will go into effect. The weekday price from 1 to 6 P. M. will advance from 35 to 40 cents. From opening to 1 P. M. it will remain at 25 cents, however, in contrast to the general plan.

The move to increase admission prices was not confined to the New York area alone. Out in the field, discussion of the problem took place in Cincinnati, Buffalo, Pittsburgh and Cleveland. The Greater Cincinnati Independent Exhibitors Association, at its monthly meeting, discussed the advisability of increasing children's admissions from 10 to 15 cents at subsequent runs. No change in the adult rate at 30 cents is contemplated. The group opposed participation of film stars in radio programs, as well, emphasizing the theatre competition involved.

Buffalo Action Delayed

In Buffalo, in the absence of some circuit executives, the final meeting to raise admission prices has been delayed until late this week. However, it is felt among independent and circuit operators that a general increase in prices will be inaugurated in the very near future, with the possibility the increases may be made the first week of next month.

In Cleveland, however, the prospects of an increase in admission prices are very slight, according to a consensus of exhibitors. While a majority of the exhibitors operating houses in the higher admission brackets favor the raise, there seems little hope that such a move can be adopted unanimously.

The only move so far has been made by Nat Wolf, Warner zone manager in that city, who is raising admission prices for "Mary of Scotland" in all Warner houses playing key spots in his territory. The picture opened last week at Warner's Hippodrome at 55 cents top instead of the regular 42 cents top. Other spots where prices will be hiked are Mansfield, Youngstown, Lima, Akron and Canton.

In New Orleans definite assurance that at least one commercial area house would raise admissions in the fall was received when H. S. McLeod, manager of the new Strand, announced that in September his orchestra matinee seats would sell for 25 cents. No raise will be made in his night prices. Top night prices for "A" houses range from 35 to 40 cents.

Chance Games Next Issue

New York exhibitors, with the settlement of the admission problem, now feel that the next important question to be answered by theatre operators is that of chance games. Several independent circuits already have started to drop the practice in some of their units, with plans on foot to do away with them entirely within the next few months.

The cooperation of both affiliated and nonaffiliated theatre men in sponsoring a law for the admission of children unaccompanied by guardians and the recent meeting on admissions has heartened important theatre men that in time most of the current exhibition evils will be eliminated.

Exhibitors questioned on the subject agree they will give up chance games as a box-office stimulant provided the others do likewise. The only way a unanimous move can be made, it is said, is to get all the leaders together and put the matter to them formally. This is expected to be done as soon as the admission price increase is operating smoothly.

Move to Bar Duals Halted

Efforts by a number of independent exhibitors to revive the campaign for elimination of double features in the New York area have been halted. No meetings on the topic are planned although the matter was discussed briefly at a recent Independent Theatre Owners Association meeting. A discussion aroused by quotation of an editorial in the New York Daily News was cut short by a member of the buying committee who said dual bills cannot be eliminated because of the type of product being made.

His contention was that the problem was not up to the theatre operator but to the producer. A certain amount of product is made for dual feature purposes and the attractions which can stand alone are few and far between, he said.

HEIGHT, NOT AGE, IS NEW ADMISSION BASIS

At least one suburban theatre man in Cincinnati is considering putting into effect a plan for children's admissions similar to one used by the intercity Ohio Bus Lines in computing passenger fares. Children are charged according to height instead of age. Under 46 inches, the passenger rides free. Between 46 and 55 inches, half fare is charged, and over 55 inches, full fare must be paid. A measuring gauge is located near the doors of buses.

Although some adults come within the free ride and half-fare heights, they are charged accordingly, the plan working out satisfactorily over a period of time according to the law of averages, bus officials say.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Jack Wallace, lost for years to the motion picture and the stage, now is found selling steaks at $12 apiece.

Columbia Pictures had him last in motion pictures, in "The Donovan Affair" and "The Fighting Ranger," in 1934. The stage then rung down the curtain on Wallace as an actor when he was with Katharine Cornell and the late Lowell Sherman in "Casanova." Jack started to lose his hair and quit for the restaurant business. He has been glad ever since. Who wouldn't, selling steaks at $12 a steak.

Over the hills of Spuyten Duyvil and far away from Times Square, lies Ben Riley's very expensive Arrowhead Inn, at Riverdale, where Archer Winsten, in the wake of the news for the Post newspaper of New York, found Jack Wallace, acting as assistant manager and son-in-law to Riley, recommending frog's legs to the gourmet.

Jack wasn't so happy last year, though. He had gone to the Adirondack Mountains for a vacation. His stomach ached and he went to a country doctor who discharged him with a "Here, take some caster oil in sarsaparilla. You won't taste it. You're all right." When they got him to the operating room his appendix had already ruptured and peritonitis set in. He spent 12 weeks in the Troy hospital in a beautiful room—overlooking the cemetery.

Mr. Cook's idea, while probably receiving the lusty plaudits of Roosevelt-Vote-Getter Farley, is not friendly to the neighborhood theatre owner, who is always on the lookout for new business returning home from some place.*

Odd McIntyre finds the zippiest of the current Broadway-lovers to be George Marshall, the big Washington, D. C., laundryman, who has a strong connection with motion pictures, as we shall presently see. George, who has given zest to many parties with his spontaneities, is a country boy, born near Point Pleasant, W. Va. He started off as a show trouper with motion picture's Monta Bell, the director, long one of Marshall's cronies. At George's majority he inherited a broken-down laundry, and, surprising everybody, including himself, turned it into a larruping success. But his metier is frolic, says McIntyre. He adores the dazzling tungstens, cheerio and back-slapping camaraderie. Some of the night clubs can hardly close without him. A booming type, he enters a place with the modern version of a Comanche whoop, thus giving impression that from now on joy must reign unconfined, and it usually does. His most recent diversion was eloping with motion picture's Corinne Griffith.

Another relation to motion pictures who is nominated by Odd McIntyre as an auspicious in-and-outer among the dawn hailers is A. C. (Alfred Cleveland) Blumenthal, called by McIntyre "the pee-wee promotion poobah" from San Francisco, who salvaged a bankroll out of movie theatre building and promoting big movie deals. He's now over in London with his nose stuck into the Gaumont British-Fox-MGM stock deal, from which he hopes to collect a pretty penny commission.

"Blumie," who McIntyre finds "a temperate fellow," let's himself go night-club-wise for several months at a stretch and will be host for an entire front row at the first nights and a half-dozen tables afterward at the reigning night club spot. One month a study in "kinematics," he goes out like a light and nobody will see him or hear of him for several months. Then Blumie blooms again.

Broadway's sad-panned comedian, Ben Blue, just signed to a long term Paramount contract, is notoriously feeble of memory. As a result, he frequently finds himself in embarrassing situations when he tries to recall faces or names. The other night Louis Sobol on Broadway found Ben face to face with a fellow who seemed only vaguely familiar to the comedian. "Hi, Ben, old kid," greeted the fellow. "Say, you look fine—like a million bucks." "Thanks," fumbled Blue, trying to recall the stranger, "You look in the pink yourself. Take off your hat—say, you've gotten balder, ain't ya? Thinner, too, since the last time I saw you." "Think so?" asked the vaguely familiar face. "Sure," replied Ben, "but you look good. Where you been?" "Oh, China, Budapest—I've been on the go these past few years." "Zat so?" chortled Blue in his most surprised tone. "Well," concluded Ben, "it sure is good to see you again—I've been wondering why I don't bump into you more often—lessee, last time I saw you—out in——?"

"Yesterday afternoon," reminded the fellow, dryly. "In the William Morris office. I'm your agent!"

Recently John Chapman wrote a piece in the New York Daily News *about the troubles of the impoverished barnyard summer stock companies. Many institutions, individuals and towns lifted to the skies various verbal and concrete testimonials of Will Rogers' greatness. But that was one year ago, and people soon forget. Now, on September 4th, County Judge H. H. Brown, in Claremore, Okla., where Rogers was born, will sell the Rogers birthplace and homestead ranch to satisfy $175,000 in state and federal taxes.

MPTOA THREATENS LEGISLATIVE ACTION TO ADJUST TRADE POLICIES

Concedes Legislation "Arbitrary" and Litigation "Expensive" but Warns They May Have To Be Last Resort

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is speaking ominously of "legislation" and "litigation" to be resorted to if distributors fail to concede at least a majority of the points included in its 10 point fair trade practices program.

First indications of strenuous action to be taken were contained in a general bulletin issued this week from national headquarters in New York over the signature of Edward Kuykendall, president. After the bulletin was issued Mr. Kuykendall told of the existence of sentiment among New York City exhibitor organizations affiliated with MPTOA to have the national organization take steps toward the preparation of a bill for Federal regulation of the industry to be introduced at the next session of Congress.

The threats are regarded as an unusual procedure for the usually conservative MPTOA since major producing and distributing interests are closely related to the organization, which admittedly obtains a great part of its membership finances from them through affiliated circuits.

However, Mr. Kuykendall subsequently declared this week that the conceding by distributors of any vital part of the MPTOA's 10-point trade practice program would be regarded by the national exhibitor organization as sufficient to deter it from pursuing its threatened policy of supporting federal legislation designed to regulate industry trade practices. He declined to state what concessions his organization regarded as being essential on the grounds that it involved a question which would have to be considered first by the MPTOA trade practice committee, and, finally, by the board or executive committee of the organization.

Mr. Kuykendall indicated that, if exhibitors are offered "compromise" concessions, rather than the 10-point program, the granting of such concessions as elimination of the score charge and increased, unqualified cancellation undoubtedly would be sufficient to deter the organization from a legislative policy. He appeared just as certain that distributor approval of the setting up of local conciliation boards, without accompanying concessions, would not be.

Charges Ignoring of Appeal

The MPTOA has been campaigning strenuously for several months to obtain for all exhibitors reasonable modification of alleged unfair sales policies and the establishment of practical and readily available machinery to prevent abuses and injustices in trade relations.

After a series of meetings with sales executives of large companies, promises were said to have been obtained by the MPTOA committing the companies to acceptance of several of the 10 corrective measures advocated in its program. Subsequently and with no explanation the companies ignored both the promises and MPTOA's continued pleas for adoption of the program, it is pointed out in the bulletin.

"While the indifference and thinly veiled resistance of the distributors to any change in their practices is bound to be discouraging to the responsible theatre owners who have conscientiously and unselfishly worked to bring this program of self-regulation to the point where it is squarely up to each of the distributors to either undertake the job of seeing it through or definitely refusing to cooperate, we do not intend to abandon our efforts along these lines," the bulletin said.

Before bringing up the question of possible legislation which the industry will be forced to accept if self-regulation does not succeed, the bulletin mildly pointed out the extenuating fact that the field is so complex and intricate that "it is not surprising that those charged with the responsibility for huge investments move slowly and cautiously in these matters." The situation is further complicated, the communication added, "by a fringe of unscrupulous operators and sharp-shooting lawyers ever looking for an opening to institute shakedown lawsuits for 'triple damages.'"

Urges Industry Action

After pointing out that the present stalemate cannot continue indefinitely, the bulletin characterized legislation as "unsatisfactory and arbitrary" and litigation as "futile, expensive and hopeless."

"Either this industry will demonstrate that it has the ability, initiative and intelligence to work out its own business problems itself or we will inevitably get such regulation by legislation and litigation, however stupid and costly such regulation may be," the statement continued. "Unfortunately, once it is imposed upon us, it will be more or less permanent, whether we like it or not, as witness the obsolete and ineffective anti-trust laws."

The bulletin pointed out the evils of such outside regulation in these words:

"Twenty-five years of experience has amply demonstrated that economic problems cannot be solved by law suits, that our courts are not equipped to even understand, let alone solve, the peculiar and unique trade practice problems of this business.

"Legislation is just about as stupid and futile, as witness the ten years of effort and enormous amount of the exhibitors' money squandered on the so-called anti-block booking bills, none of which would have cured the abuses in block booking."

Significantly, the next paragraph in the bulletin pointed out the results which may obtain if the present efforts of the group fail. "We may as well look at the future realistically," it said. "If it develops that the distributors are determined to prevent self-regulation of commercial practices by refusing cooperation and the industry is thereby forced into regulation by statute (which MPTOA has consistently and earnestly tried to prevent), then the more responsible independent exhibitors should have something to say about the provisions of such statutes. Such laws should not be written by a small faction of shoe string operators led around by professional organizers who have no experience or responsibility in the business."

Says Companies Are Meeting

Interviewed in New York on his arrival from White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., where he attended the annual convention of the Theatre Managers Association of West Virginia, Mr. Kuykendall said that while he agreed that the necessity for some form of decisive action on the part of MPTOA was necessary in the face of distributor inaction, he remained opposed to legislative regulation except as a last resort.

Mr. Kuykendall said that he had been advised that distributors now were trying to work out an acceptable policy on the exhibitors' program and might be expected to make known the results of their efforts early next month. In view of this, he said, he was reluctant to take action on a legislative policy at this time. He said he would return to New York early in September to get the distributors' decision and would reconvene the MPTOA trade practice committee at that time if developments warrant.

The MPTOA president reported that last week's convention of West Virginia theatre owners endorsed the 10-point program in full and voted him its support in any move made by the MPTOA as a result of the possible rejection of the program by distributors. He said that the same convention passed a resolution opposing the Neely-Pettengill bill to end block booking.

ADULTS ASK SEATS IN JUNIOR SECTION

Odd reactions to the new child attendance law covering New York City theatres are reported by managers of Loew's houses where the matron plan went into effect this week. The new plan worked smoothly, according to C. C. Moskowitz, Loew executive, with one important exception. The only trouble experienced was with childless grown-ups who insisted upon sitting in the children's section which, in most cases, is the first few rows of the orchestra. The children seem proud of their new privilege and conduct themselves admirably according to Mr. Moskowitz.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Man Wanted

There's a new job in Hollywood and nobody to fill it.

The job consists of guaranteeing to producers that the story they buy, produce and ultimately convey by screen to the public will not become the subject of legal action charging plagiarism. Of course, quite a few ladies and gentlemen on the payrolls are and long have been depended upon to look out for matters of that kind, but nobody has distinguished himself as an A Number One expert in the field and a good many heavy investors in fictional merchandise would like to turn confidently to such an authority.

Plagiarism has always been among the motion picture elements more or less loosely classified as business risks. With the "Letty Lynton" decision, though, the matter is receiving more than customary attention. There are memories of many pictures, by different authors and titles, that bore striking resemblance not only to each other but to certain similar published works. There are skeletons, even, in many a writing desk, not to say closet, and of course there have been settlements, plenty of them, made, by advice of the legal departments, "to avoid unpleasant publicity and expensive litigation."

Such a man as the colony could use nicely is not readily come by. Mayhap he is available, somewhere in this or another nation, a college professor, a super-librarian, or perhaps a veteran publisher or collector. The trick is to know, having located the individual, that he really is the sought authority and that his pronouncements are really reliable. He would have to demonstrate that, and it would take quite a while. Perhaps the simpler thing is to see if Lloyds of London wouldn't be interested in issuing a little plagiarism insurance, the complete coverage kind, and if this is an idea everybody's welcome to it.

8 to 5

A so-so week in the studios witnessed the starting of eight pictures and the finishing of five. Universal, catching up for lost time, accounted for three of the octette. In "Flying Hostess" Judith Barrett, Astrid Alwyn, Ella Logan, William Gargan, Michael Loring and Andy Devine will be seen. Murray Roth is directing. The cast for "The Luckiest Girl in the World" features Jane Wyatt, Catherine Doucet, Eugene Pallette and Phillip Reed, with Edward Buzzell directing. In "Four Days Wonder," which Sidney Salkow is directing, Jeanne Dante, Kenneth Howell, Alan Mowbray, Martha Sleeper, Walter Catlett, Charles Williams and Margaret Irving are the principals.

Two pictures were started at Columbia. "Theodora Goes Wild" will present Irene Dunne, Melvin Douglas, Elisabeth Risdon, Margaret McLane, Nana Bryant, Miriam Marsh, Thurston Hall, Grace Hale and Sarah Edwards, Richard Boleslawski is directing. Charles Starrett, Mary Blake and Philo McCullough are featured in "Cross Fire," which Buddy Coleman directs.

Radio started "Without Orders," which lists Sally Eilers, Robert Armstrong, Frances Sage, Charles Grapewin, Vinton Haworth and Ward Bond in the cast. Louis Friedlander is directing.

Goldwyn began work on "Love Under Fire." Merle Oberon and Brian Ahearne are starred. The support features Jerome Cowan, David Nevin and Henry Stephenson. Many more are to be added. Henry C. Potter is directing.

"Love Flight" was started at Twentieth Century-Fox. Lawrence Tibbett, Gregory Ratoff, Arthur Treacher and Wendy Barrie are featured with Otto Preninger directing.

Warners finished "Gold Diggers of 1937." The cast includes Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Rosalind Marquis, Irene Ware, William Davidson, Lee Dixon, Osgood Perkins, Charles D. Brown, Victor Moore, Ann Sheridan, Hobart Cavanaugh, Olin Howland, Donald Meek and Joseph Crehan. Lloyd Bacon directed the production.

MGM completed "All American Chump," in which Stuart Irwin, Betty Furness, Edmund Gwenn and E. E. Clive are featured and which Edwin L. Marin directed.

"Sitting On the Moon" was finished at Republic. It will present Roger Pryor, Grace Bradley, Pert Kelton, William Newell, William Janney, Irene Martell, Henry Kolker and Henry Wadsworth. Ralph Staub directed.

Universal finished "The Magnificent Brute." Victor McLaglen and Binnie Barnes are teamed in the leads. The support includes William Hall, Jean Dixon, Henry Armetta, Billy Burrud, Edward Norris, Ann Preston, Zeni Vatori, Selmar Jackson, Adrian Rosley and Etta McDaniel. John Blystone directed.

Goldwyn completed "Dodsworth." In it are Walter Huston, Ruth Chatterton, Mary Astor, Paul Lukas, David Niven, Gregory Gaye, Odette Myrtil, Kathrun Marlowe.

"In His Steps," a B. F. Zeidman production for Grand National, was finished. The cast includes Eric Linden, Cecelia Parker, Henry Kolker and others.

Western Preferred

Nobody professes to know exactly why, but there are more Western pictures in the making and on schedule than at any time since they began to build them five reels long. Broncho Billy and Tom Mix, between them, may have turned out more two-reel horse operas in a single year, but two-reelers are not considered in the current computation. These equine cantatas range from the length, magnitude and budgetary importance of Cecil B. DeMille's "The Plainsman" and Paramount's "The Texas Rangers" down to practically innumerable feature productions of almost if not equivalent screen time.

Maybe it all traces to Billy Hill's "Last Roundup" and the unrestrained sequence of saddle songs that have followed it. Maybe it's an indirect result of those fairs down Texas way, conceivably drawing the national eye and ear to focus on the great open spaces. And maybe, in part, the tapering off in production of gangster, G-man and other shoot-'em-up material has reminded producers that shooting in the past tense and as of the period and purpose classified as "the winning of the West" is not, as yet, tabu.

For one reason and another, or for all reasons or none, producers have increased their Western schedules all along the line. Republic, for instance, is down for 32 in 1936-37, double the number they made last year. This includes eight Gene Autreys, eight "Three Mesquiteers" and sixteen to be produced by A. W. Hackel for Republic release.

Grand National, new in the field, will have at least sixteen westerns to release. Universal will have "Buck" Jones and will also release the John Waynes, which fall into the action group. Also included as action pictures are the George O'Brien series, produced by George Hirliman.

Sol Lesser will make a Harold Bell Wright series for Twentieth Century-Fox, Larry Darmour has a series for Columbia, and Harry Sherman will again release his "Hopalong Cassidy" series through Paramount. In addition a larger number of independently made and distributed pictures, such as Maurice Conn's Kermit Maynard series, will compete for exhibitor attention.

Paragraphs

The executive committee of the Technicians' Branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood has appointed Ray Wilkinson, head of the camera department of Paramount, as chairman of the committee which will select a slate for the various offices of the branch. The committee includes John Aalberg, Perry Ferguson, Charles David Forrest, William Holmes, Fred Hope, Charles Lang, Jr., Virgil Miller, William Moll and S. J. Twining.

Harry B. Friedman plans to produce 16 features next season including four adventure pictures, six musicals and six Louis Joseph Vance detective stories for the independent market.

The second starring film of the Dionne quintuplets for Twentieth Century-Fox was started Sunday, featuring Jean Hersholt. The tentative title is "Reunion."

32 STORIES PURCHASED IN JULY, SETTING LOW RECORD FOR SEASON

Stage Fails to Win Any Representation in Month's Acquisition of Material for Films; 20 of Total Are Originals

With the pre-seasonal production-planning period for 1936-37 fast drawing to a close, studios in Hollywood and home offices in New York are making their final purchases of vehicles for their stars to meet the commitments on the new schedules. The months of April and May saw purchases lead to a high level when some 327 manuscripts were acquired by the various producing organizations; in June, the purchases numbered 48.

The month of July showed a marked decrease, only 32 properties having been acquired by the combined studios. Of this total, 20 were original stories, 7 were taken from magazines and 5 were published novels.

Motion picture producers found nothing suitable on the stage for transition to the screen in July; the stage is growing less important to Hollywood as a source of story material.

This follows the announcements from various major producing companies in Hollywood that they would not finance Broadway theatre productions as readily as had been their custom in the past season and now a tabulation of purchases made in July shows that none of the current New York legitimate theatre productions was acquired by Hollywood.

Staff writers appear to be getting the call more than ever from production executives and their original stories are being adapted to the screen, along with a few purchases from publications, in preference to all vehicles. Various major studios in Hollywood are increasing their writing departments, especially Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount, who have been signing writers almost daily as well as taking up options of those authors familiar with motion picture technique and requirements.

Back to Nature

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy

A family type show of high entertainment caliber, this film has its appeal for those segments of patronage appreciative of clean, wholesome amusement. Besides presenting the familiar members of the Jones family that have been featured in two previous releases, there is introduced a newcomer of unusual promise, Tony Martin.

Comedy is the show's essence. It concerns itself with the experiences and adventures of a typical small town American family, vacation-convention bound via auto trailer. Running into many of the trying situations common to such expeditions, the trip is a nightmare to Mr. Jones, but an exciting adventure for the other members of the menage, particularly the younger kids. Romantically inclined, Bonnie manages to get herself into a dramatically atmosphered romance with convict Tom Williams, which gives Mr. Jones many things to think of besides his difficulties with the roads, family and machines. Jack has a summer flirtation with Mabel that menaces everybody's welfare for a while. Roger as usual is commercially minded, but all ends well as the family finally arrives at the convention.

To the showmanship popularity that has accrued to the Jones Family troupe through the two earlier pictures, the exploitation idea that surrounds the trip by trailer gag is loaded with potentialities for attractive ballyhoo. Essentially a family attraction, continually providing much that is of interest to adult and juvenile contingents of average audiences, the show recommends itself to those interested in wholesome amusement told in a human interest way.

Previewed at Uptown Theatre. A cross section neighborhood audience reacted favorably to the film, being particularly appreciative of its human quality and the manner in which thrill action logically was woven into the climax.

Produced and distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox. Directed by James Tinling. Associate producer, Max Golden. Original screen play by Robert Ellis and Helen Logan. Photography by Daniel B. Clark. Art direction, Duncan Cramer. Assistant director, William Eckhardt. Film editor, Fred Allen. Costumes by Herschel. Sound, Alfred Bruzlin and Harry Leonard. Musical direction, Samuel Kaylin. P. C. A. Certificate No. 2444. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 60 minutes. Release date, October 9, 1936. General audience classification.

Mummy's Boys

(RKO Radio)

Comedy

With routine Wheeler and Woolsey gag and situation comedy for its substance, the only novelty injected into this latest feature is the fact that the boys, turning pseudo archaeologists, invade the tombs of the Pharoahs, where the fatal curse of the dead kings still prevails. Comedy, contrasted by the wild drama and light romance common to all their pictures, is the motivating idea. It's the dominating element of the manner in which they become associated with the Egyptian expedition. Comedy is the highlight of the action aboard ship, including the antics of the ghost-frightened negro, the mixup the boys get into with the sheik and his several wives, and the manner in which they avert a panic. Naturally it is the background of all the action in the Valley of the Kings, where hokum melodrama is the peg upon which the fun is hung. It reaches its high spot in the chase through the tombs.

The sole purpose of the film is to engender laughs, and so all situations are made to appear as ludicrous as possible. Whether there's rime or reason for the gag, bit of action or dialogue, it's rung in as long as there's a chance it will make somebody laugh. Though the picture is low comedy, paradoxically it offers opportunity for high grade exploitation. Not only do the stars represent a strong draw to their particular clientele but the Tutankhamen curse idea applied to the last half of the show opens up the doors to some unique and tricky ideas that should prove effective in attracting attention of any kind of patrons looking for amusement.

Previewed in Pantages Hollywood theatre to a so-so audience. Some thought it was a riot of foolishness; others didn't seem to be impressed at all.

His Brother's Wife

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Drama

Primarily a personality picture, "His Brother's Wife" provides the names of Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Taylor and Jean Hersholt in principal roles adequately justifying exploitation emphasis. They are supported by a high-grade cast and the picture has been given ample attention in the matter of setting and so forth.

The story is a somewhat unconventional fabrication tangling and untangling such factors as love, marriage, divorce, revenge, honor, chicanery, scientific research and devotion to the ethics of the medical profession. In its telling a good deal of ground is covered swiftly and a great amount of dialogue, some of it altogether natural and some of it rather manifestly of the written variety, is enunciated. Comedy is emphasized occasionally and without the cumbersome device of dragging a designated comic character through the plot.

Stellar names noted nominate themselves for chief accentuation in showmanly selling.

The plot concerns a young doctor about to undertake a scientific expedition into the jungle and a young woman who falls in love with him, and vice versa, prior to his sailing. Family interests intervene, they separate, he sails, she marries his brother in a spirit of revenge, he returns, induces her to accompany him back to the jungle and detains her there while a divorce is negotiated, after which he sends her away. She doesn't go, though, and risks her life to save his, all of which leads to a satisfactory conclusion.

The Gentleman From Louisiana

(Republic)

Romantic Drama

Evidencing the purpose of this company to produce higher caliber pictures, "The Gentleman from Louisiana" measures up as above average quality entertainment. A race track picture, not of the modern variety but one that takes its auditors back to the days when the famous jockey Tod Sloan revolutionized riding styles, the show includes all the standby essentials and introduces several new ones to make for acceptable contrast of thrill action and romance drama.

Adding to the exploitation values inherent in the film's story and production values, the picture returns Eddie Quillan to the screen in the type of role which has won him much popularity. This bit of casting seems a smart recognition of demands of exhibitors.
